In Leifchild's case, 14 W. R. 22, L. R. 1 Eq. 231, a limited company bought a patent and paid for it in paid-up shares; the holder was held not to be a contributory. The agreement was not sought to be set aside and no question as to the actual value of the patent was raised. No one apparently thought that question material. This case was decided in 1865 by Kindersley, V.C., and is valuable as showing that as early as that year it was taken for granted that shares in a limited company issued as paid up in consideration of property transferred to the company must be treated as paid up unless the whole transaction was set aside on the ground of fraud. In 1869 Drummond's case, 18 W. R. 2, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 772, came before Giffard, L.J., sitting as the Court of Appeal, and it was then distinctly decided that even a subscriber of the memorandum of association could satisfy his liability in respect of the shares for which he subscribed by paying for them in money or money's worth or, as Giffard, L.J., put it, in "meal or in malt." This general proposition has never been doubted, but there was a difficulty in applying it to a subscriber of the memorandum of association. The difficulty was to identify the shares which he was to receive as vendor with those which he had bound himself to take and pay for by subscribing the memorandum of association. This difficulty always arises in similar cases. It has never been doubted, so far as I know, that the obligation of every shareholder in a limited company to pay to the company the nominal amount of his shares could be satisfied by a transaction which amounted to accord and satisfaction or set-off as distinguished from payment in cash. In 1867 the legislature rendered all such transactions invalid unless they were made pursuant to a duly registered contract, but if there is such a contract the law is now what it always was.

As regards the value of the property which a company can take from a shareholder in satisfaction of his liability to pay the amount of his shares there has been some difference of opinion. But it was ultimately decided by the Court of Appeal that, unless the agreement pursuant to which shares are to be paid for in property or services could be impeached for fraud, the value of the property or services could not be inquired into. In other words, the value at which the company is content to accept the property must be treated as its value as between itself and the shareholder whose liability is discharged by its means. The following are the decisions which established this doctrine. The point was first raised in 1869 in Pell's case, 18 W. R. 31, 5 L. R. Ch. App. 11. Pell had agreed to sell his business to a limited company for a certain number of fully paid-up shares which were allotted to him and were registered in his name. On the winding up of the company Lord Romilly held him to be a contributory in respect of these shares, but to be entitled to an inquiry as to the value of the property given for them and to be allowed such value but no more towards payment of them. This decision, however, was reversed on appeal by Giffard, L.J., on the ground that the agreement for the sale of the business for paid-up shares not being impeached, the shares ought to be treated as paid for in money's worth. In Forbes and Judd's case, 18 W. R. 302, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 270 (1870), Lord Hatherley clearly intimated his concurrence with the view that, unless the agreement was impeached, the value of the property given for the shares could not be gone into. In In re Baglan Hall Colliery Co., 18 W. R. 499, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 346 (1870), Giffard, L.J., again acted on the same principle, and there being, as he said, "some confusion in the views entertained of cases of this nature," he went fully into the grounds of his decision, referring to the various sections of the Companies Act, 1862, which were material. He fully recognised the obligation of a shareholder to pay for his shares, but he again held that this obligation could be satisfied otherwise than by payment in money. In that case the company had agreed to buy a colliery and to pay for it in shares, and the handing over of the colliery as the consideration for the shares was held to be payment in full (see p. 357). No question was raised as to the value of the colliery. In Leeke's case, (1870), 19 W. R. 300, L. R. 11 Eq. 100, Stuart, V.C., criticised Pell's case, and evidently disapproved the decision of Giffard, L.J.; but, although Leeke's case was affirmed on appeal, the Vice-Chancellor's strictures on Pell's case were not approved. (See L. R. 6 Ch. App. 469.) In Jones's case, (1870) L. R. 6 Ch. 48, 19 W. R. Ch. Dig. 53, the Court of Appeal again adhered to the principle laid down in Pell's case, Forbes and Judd's case, and In re Baglan Hall Colliery Co. James, L.J. seems to have had some doubt whether he should have come to the conclusion he did if it had not been for the decisions, but I understand his doubt was as to the identification of the shares subscribed for with those given for the property taken by the company. Mellish, L.J., had no misgivings, and expressly approved the decision of Giffard, L.J., in Pell's case. In Maynard's case, (1873) 22 W. R. 119, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 60, fully paid-up shares were allotted to a subscriber of the memorandum of association in payment of property sold by him to the company. He was held to have satisfied his liability, the company "being free to accept payment in any honest way" (see p. 65). It was proved to the satisfaction of the court that the shares for which he subscribed were to be paid for in property to be bought by the company at a sum equal to the amount of the shares subscribed for. It was not suggested that the agreement was ultra vires or depended for its validity on the value of the property. All these cases arose before the Companies Act, 1867, came into operation, although some of them were decided at a later date. In Fothergill's case, (1873) 21 W. R. 301, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 270, which arose after that Act was in force, the above decisions were again considered and were held inapplicable to cases to which that Act applied unless, a proper agreement were duly registered. In Fothergill's case there was a registered agreement, but it was held not to apply to the shares for which he had subscribed the memorandum of association, and he was held to be a contributory in respect of them. But I can find nothing to throw doubt on the application of the law as settled in Pell's case and the others referred to above, to similar cases arising since 1867, and in which the shares in question have been issued pursuant to a duly registered agreement as required by the Act. In Anderson's case, (1877) 26 W. R. 442, 7 Ch. D. 75, a colliery was sold to a limited company for paid-up shares. A proper agreement was registered. The price of the colliery to the company was £150,000, to be paid in shares. The vendors had shortly before agreed to buy it for £66,000, and to pay £42,000 in shares. They therefore made a huge profit. It was nevertheless held by the Court of Appeal that, so long as the agreement for sale to the company was unimpeached, all the £150,000 shares must be treated as fully paid up. This case is the last to which it is necessary to refer, bearing directly on the question I am examining.

I understand the law to be as follows. The liability of a shareholder to pay the company the amount of his shares is a statutory liability and is declared to be a specialty debt (Companies Act, 1862, s. 16), and a short form of action is given for its recovery (section 70). But specialty debts, like other debts, can be discharged in more ways than one—e.g., by payment, set-off, accord and satisfaction, and release—and, subject to the qualifications introduced by the doctrine of ultra vires, or, in other words, the limited capacity of statutory corporations, any mode of discharging a specialty debt is as available to a shareholder as to any other specialty debtor. It is, however, obviously beyond the power of a limited company to release a shareholder from his obligation without payment in money or money's worth. It cannot give fully paid-up shares for nothing and preclude itself from requiring payment of them in money or money's worth (In re Eddystone Marine Insurance Co., 41 W. R. 642, [1893] 3 Ch. 9), nor can a company deprive itself of its right to future payment in cash by agreeing to accept future payments in some other way. It cannot substitute an action for the breach of a special agreement, for its statutory action for non-payment of calls (see Pellatt's case, 15 W. R. 726, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 527). From this it follows that shares in limited companies cannot be issued at a discount. By our law the payment by a debtor to a creditor of a less sum than is due does not discharge the debt; and this technical doctrine has also been invoked in aid of the law which prevents the shares of a limited company from being issued at a discount. But this technical doctrine, though often sufficient to decide a particular case, will not suffice as a basis for the wider rule or principle that a company cannot effectually release a shareholder from his statutory obligation to pay in money or money's worth the amount of the shares. That shares cannot be issued at a discount was finally settled in the Ooregum Gold Co.'s case, the judgments in which are strongly relied upon by the appellant in this case. It has, however, never yet been decided that a limited company cannot buy property or pay for services at any price it thinks proper, and pay for them in fully paid-up shares. Provided a limited company does so honestly, and not colourably, and provided that it has not been so imposed upon as to be entitled to be relieved from its bargain, it appears to be settled by Pell's case and the others to which I have referred, of which Anderson's case is the most striking, that agreements by limited companies to pay for property or services in paid-up shares are valid and binding on the companies and their creditors. The Legislature in 1867 appears to me to have distinctly recognized such to be the law, but to have required, in order to make such agreements binding, that they shall be registered before the shares are issued. There is certainly no decision yet which is opposed to the above statement of the law. The observations in In re Addleston Linoleum Co., 37 Ch. D. 191, In re Almada and Tirito Co., 38 Ch. D. 415, and In re Ooregum Gold Co., [1892] A. C. 125, relied upon by the appellant in this case, fall far short of deciding that the value of the property or services paid for in shares can be inquired into or is material in any case in which the sale is not impeached.

These and other cases decided upon the Act of 1867 show (1) that since that Act, as before, shares must be paid for in money or money's worth; (2) that since that Act, as before, they may be paid for in money's worth; (3) that since the Act payment in money's worth can only be effectually made pursuant to a properly registered contract; (4) that, even if there is such a contract, shares cannot be issued at a discount; (5) that if a company owes a person £100, the company cannot by paying him £200 in shares of that nominal amount discharge him, even by a registered contract, from his obligation as a shareholder to pay up the other £100 in respect of those shares. That would be issuing shares at a discount. The difference between such a transaction and paying for property or services in shares at a price put upon them by a vendor and agreed to by the company may not always be very apparent in practice. But the two transactions are essentially different, and whilst the one is ultra vires the other is intra vires. It is not law that persons cannot sell property to a limited company for fully paid-up shares and make a profit by such transaction. We must not allow ourselves to be misled by talking of value. The value paid to the company is measured by the price at which the company agrees to buy what it thinks it worth its while to acquire. Whilst the transaction is not impeached, this is the only value to be considered. This appears to me to be in complete accordance with the judgments of Cotton, L.J., in In re Almada and Tirito Co., 38 Ch. D. 423, and Lords Watson and Macnaghten, in the Ooregum Gold Co.'s case, [1892] A. C. 136-7, 147-8. Lord Herschell's judgment, as I understand it, is distinctly favourable to the respondents.

In my judgment the law is settled, and cannot be declared wrongly settled by this court, at any rate. If it is to be altered, the decisions which settled it must be declared wrong by the House of Lords, or the law must be altered by Act of Parliament. Vaughan Williams, J., has had to consider this matter on more than one occasion—viz., in Chapman's case, 43 W. R. 553, [1895] 1 Ch. 771, and again in the present case—and on both occasions the principle on which he based his decision is, in my judgment, correct. The summons which has raised the question of Martin and Wragg's liability is of an unusual kind, being a misfeasance summons and an alternative application to enforce payment up of the shares. It was dismissed with costs, and no question was raised on appeal except the important question of principle which I have considered. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

SMITH, L.J., after referring generally to the formation of the company and to the contract of sale, continued: The Solicitor-General, who appeared for the liquidator, did not seek upon any ground to impeach the sale by Messrs. Wragg & Martin to E. J. Wragg (Limited); but he asserted that he could show by evidence that the shares in E. J. Wragg (Limited) which were taken by Wragg & Martin as fully paid up in part payment of the agreed price of £46,[illegible] were not so, in other words that he could show that there was a deficiency in the value of the property sold by Messrs. Wragg & Martin to the company for the agreed price of £46,300, and that as regards that deficiency which he alleged to be £11,647, the shares held by them were not fully paid-up. It is admitted that the present proceeding of the liquidator is without precedent, and apart from the authorities some of which I will deal with hereafter, I will first ascertain the facts upon which the liquidator relies in proof of his case, assuming that he is entitled to go into them. [His lordship here referred in detail to the provisions of the contract of sale.] It is argued for the liquidator that here he proves that the "stock" sold to the company was valued at £27,300. I agree that upon the face of clause 3 it is so, but before I say that it is proved that £27,300 was the value of the stock I must consider for what purpose this apportionment of the £46,300 into its different component parts was made and inserted in the agreement. The Solicitor-General was unable to make any suggestion as to this. He simply said that it is stated upon the face of the clause that the value of the stock was £27,300, and that establishes the fact. Primâ facie this would be so; but as, except upon one hypothesis, the clause is obviously useless, and there is no possible reason for its insertion, I do not think what would otherwise be its primâ facie meaning is necessarily its real meaning. The hypothesis is this: that the distribution of the items in this clause was made solely to arrive at the stamp duty payable upon the instrument of agreement, for otherwise it is inconceivable why it should have been inserted, and that this is the only reason for its existence I have no doubt.

It was said that the court could not come to such a conclusion without hearing the defendants' evidence thereon. But with evidence or no evidence, for what other purpose was the clause inserted? To this there has been no answer. In my judgment this supposed valuation of the stock at £27,300 is not a real valuation of such stock at all. [His lordship here referred in detail to the "Purchase of Business account."] What is the meaning of this last item, "Balance to Goodwill Account" in this account? Does it mean profit upon the sale of Messrs. Wragg & Martin's business to the company over and above the estimated items therein appearing; or, if not, what does it mean? The liquidator suggests that it was put in as representing nothing. The accountant he called to give evidence as to this, gave no intelligible account of why he made this entry as he did. He said that he found that there was a sum of £11,647 to be accounted for, and so he entered it in this way. The liquidator ignores the fact of a possible profit being made upon the sale of the business to the company, and says that he has proved that the sum of £11,647 represents nothing. I do not think that he has.

It was vigorously insisted upon that as the defendants had not been called the court was bound not to infer that the component parts of the £46,300 were allocated as they were in clause 3, for stamp purposes, for that would be to infer that it was done for the purpose of defrauding the revenue, which no court could, without evidence, infer. Assuming for a moment the probability that the agreed price of £46,300 for the business as a going concern embraced a profit to Mr. Wragg and Mr. Martin upon the sale thereof to the company over and above the estimated items, the whole thing is at once explained. Whether the revenue can complain is another matter; and, indeed, it would seem that the £11,647 should have been distributed over the different items sold, and not placed exclusively upon the stock, and if this were the point I should decide against Messrs. Wragg & Martin. In my judgment, however, the liquidator fails to establish that the £11,647 is a fictitious entry and represents nothing; and, indeed, the true inference from the facts adduced by the liquidator is that it represents the agreed profit passing to the vendors upon the sale of their business to the company. The liquidator has failed to prove that the £27,300 was the real price of the stock, and thereby, as he contends, the £11,647 represents nothing.

But even if this were otherwise, another point arises. If there were in fact the shortage, as it has been called, of the £11,647, what right has the liquidator to say that this shortage was the consideration for the shares, so that by that amount they were not fully paid up? There was ample property conveyed by the vendors to the company to satisfy 1,993 fully paid-up shares of £10 each—i.e., £19,930; for, leaving out the £10,000 of mortgages transferred to the company, the agreed price was £36,300. Deduct £11,647, the alleged shortage, it leaves £24,653 as consideration for £19,930 of shares. Why is the liquidator to allocate the shares against what he alleges to be shortage, even if it existed, and not against the whole consideration of £24,653? Mr. Buckley ingeniously argued that if he did not do this the result would follow that the consideration for the £7,000 cash and for the £9,300 of first and second debentures would be short, that is assuming there was no agreed profit upon the transaction. He got at it thus: £36,300 agreed contract price (leaving out the two mortgages for £10,000); £11,647 shortage, leaves £24,653; shares, £19,930; leaving £4,723 as consideration for the £7,000 cash and the £9,300 in first and second debentures. And therefore he said the shares and not the cash and debentures must be taken to have had insufficient consideration given for them, a purely speculative conclusion and which also omits the consideration of profit. So much for the facts, and upon these alone apart from the cases I agree with my brother Williams that the liquidator has failed in his case. But when I come to the authorities the same result follows.

It is now well settled law that for a shareholder in a company limited by shares to have fully paid-up shares and therefore not to be liable for calls in a winding-up of the company, he must show that he has fully paid up to the face value of the shares either in cash or in value received by the company in some form, or partly in cash and partly in value received by the company in some form; and if payment other than in cash be relied on this can only be done if there be a "contract duly made in writing and filed with the registrar of joint-stock companies at or before the issue of such shares" pursuant to section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867. The House of Lords has definitely settled this point in the case of The Ooregum Gold Mining Co. v. Roper, 41 W. R. 90, [1892] A. C. 125. Partial payment is not sufficient, but shares may be lawfully issued as fully paid up for considerations which the company have agreed to accept as representing in money's worth the nominal value of the shares (per Lord Watson at p. 36 of [1892] A. C. in The Ooregum case) It is not suggested that the contract of the 10th of January, 1894, is not an honest bargain, or that its consideration is colourable or illusory. Now, is a liquidator entitled to go into the adequacy of the consideration and to show if he can that the consideration for the contract was inadequate, unless it appears so upon the transaction itself; or if not, if he desires to do so must he not impeach the contract itself? If there be no consideration at all for the shares, and it be shown as in the case of In re The Eddystone Marine Insurance Co., 41 W. R. 642, [1893] 3 Ch. 9, that the words inserted in the registered contract "in consideration of services" were placed there as a mere blind, that will suffice. Again, if in a registered contract a money value be placed upon the consideration which the company had agreed to accept as representing in money's worth the nominal value of the share less than the face value of the share, that share would, I should think, not be fully paid up. For instance, as was put in argument, a contract to supply to a limited company 100 tons of coal valued at 10s. per ton as a consideration for 100 £1 shares in the company—i.e., a valued £50 worth of coal for 100 £1 shares, these shares would not be, I think, fully paid up. There would be no necessity in such a case for impeaching the agreement, for that the shares were not fully paid up in money or money's worth would be apparent upon its face. Cotton, L.J., in In re The Almada and Tirito Co., 36 W. R. 593, 38 Ch. D. 415, at p. 421, points to such a case as this, though he did not decide it. If, however, the consideration which the company has agreed to accept as representing in money's worth the nominal value of the shares be a consideration not clearly colourable nor illusory, then in my judgment the adequacy of the consideration cannot be impeached by a liquidator unless the contract can also be impeached. And I take it to be the law that it is not open to a liquidator, unless he is able to impeach the agreement, to go into the adequacy of the consideration to show that the company have agreed to give an excessive value for what they have purchased. I will content myself with citing three of the earlier cases, and I will begin with Pell's case, 18 W. R. 31, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 11 (1869). Pell in this case had agreed to sell to a company the goodwill and stock-in-trade of his business in consideration of 1,500 £20 shares of the company fully paid up. The company was wound up, and no payment for these shares could be found in the books of the company. Lord Romilly, M.R., directed an inquiry as to the value handed over by Pell to the company under his agreement with them and declared that Pell was entitled to be allowed only the amount of that value. This decision was reversed upon appeal, Giffard, L.J., holding that as the agreement was not impeached the court had no ground for going behind the agreement. In the next year (1870) in Forbes's case, 18 W. R. 302, L. Rep. 5 Ch. App. 270, at p. 273, Hatherley, L.C. deals with Pell's case, and expressly states that if the consideration is to be impeached the contract must also be impeached—he says: "The only difference between Giffard, L.J., and the Master of the Rolls in that case was this—the Master of the Rolls thought that Pell, being bound to pay the full amount of £20 per share, was not to be taken to have paid it in full unless the property he handed over was worth that amount. That result, however, could only be arrived at by rescinding the contract to buy Pell's business; and Giffard, L.J., thought that the contract not being impeached, must be treated as a good contract, and one that ought to be acted upon, so that no question could be raised as to the actual value of the business made over." The Lord Chancellor clearly approves and in no way disapproves of the decision of Giffard, L.J., in Pell's case. In In re The Baglan Hall Colliery Co., 18 W. R. 499, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 346, at p. 357, Giffard, L.J., again lays down what he had stated in Pell's case. It is true that in Leeke's case, 19 W. R. 300, L. R. 11 Eq. 100 at p. 107, Stuart, V.C., did not like the decisions in Pell's and Forbes's cases by Lord Hatherley and Giffard, L.J. But many cases have been decided since then all in accord with Pell's case, which cases Lindley, L.J., has referred to, and I do not repeat them, and not a single case has been cited to the contrary. It appears to me that in the House of Lords in the Ooregum case the principle of Pell's case and Forbes's case was distinctly approved. Lord Watson, at p. 136 of [1892] A. C., says: "It has been decided that, under the Act of 1862, shares may be lawfully issued as fully paid up, for considerations which the company has agreed to accept as representing in money's worth the nominal value of the shares. I do not think any other decision could have been given in the case of a genuine transaction of that nature where the consideration was the substantial equivalent of full payment of the shares in cash. The possible objection to such an arrangement is that the company may over-estimate the value of the consideration, and, therefore, receive less than nominal value for its shares. The court would doubtless refuse effect to a colourable transaction, entered into for the purpose or with the obvious result of enabling the company to issue its shares at a discount; but it has been ruled that, so long as the company honestly regards the consideration given as fairly representing the nominal value of the shares in cash, its estimate ought not to be critically examined. That state of the law is certainly calculated to induce companies who are in want of money, and whose shares are unsaleable except at a discount, to pay extravagant prices for goods or work to persons who are willing to take payment in shares. The rule is capable of being abused, and I have little doubt that it has been liberally construed in practice." Lord Herschell at p. 140 is very distinct upon this point. He says: "But the contrary has been determined. And not only may a share be allotted as fully paid up in respect of property, goods, or services received by the company, but the courts will not inquire into the adequacy of the consideration, and certainly have not required it to be proved that the consideration given was equivalent in cash value to the nominal amount of the share." And Lord Macnaghten at p. 148 says: "It seems to me that all that has been determined so far is that the court will decline to rip up a transaction not impeached as dishonest, and not proved to be such, merely because the company may have paid an extravagant price for the property."

In my judgment, whether the facts of this case are looked to, or whether the law applicable thereto is looked at the liquidator is in the wrong, and my brother Vaughan Williams's judgment was quite right in dismissing his application.

RIGBY, L.J.—In this case the respondents Wragg and Martin were two of the first three directors of the company now in course of being wound up. They had for a considerable time before the incorporation of the company carried on the business of omnibus and cab proprietors at Whitechapel and elsewhere in London. What their respective interests as between themselves were in the assets of the business we cannot infer from the evidence, nor is it necessary that we should know. Wragg & Martin were minded to turn their business, as the phrase goes, into a private limited company—that is to say, a limited company in which the vendors were to take, at any rate in the first instance, all the shares in the company which were to be allotted to the vendors as part of the consideration for the purchase of the goodwill and assets of the partnership, and as such, allotted to the vendors or their nominees, including, as I understand, the subscribers of the memorandum of association. The property to be sold to the new company consisted of freehold estate of sufficient value to have been accepted as security for a first mortgage debt of £8,000 with interest at 6 per cent., and a second mortgage debt of £2,000 with interest at 5 per cent. These mortgages were apparently treated by the mortgagees as fair security. There were leaseholds of small value, a considerable stock-in-trade consisting among other things of omnibuses, cabs, and horses, worth, at any rate, not less, according to the evidence, than £15,000. The business was therefore a very substantial one. The assets (notably the goodwill of the business) could not from the nature of them be said to have any market value; and what they would be worth to a company incorporated to carry on the business would depend upon considerations as to which there would be room for considerable honest difference of opinion. The vendors were, of course, able to settle the constitution of the company according to their own wishes, and they determined that it should be brought out with a capital of £20,000, in 2,000 shares of £10 each, and that there should be an issue of first debentures for £10,000. Neither the amount of capital, nor the amount proposed to be raised on first debentures, can be said to have been on the face of the matter extravagantly large, regard being had to the nature of the business to be transferred. The only effect, beyond the appearance of greater importance to be given to the company, of putting down £20,000, instead of, say, £10,000, as the capital of the company would be to make the value of each share proportionately smaller. The vendors or their nominees might be able to dispose of their shares on better terms if the capital were larger, but it is only fair to observe that the vendors in fact retained by far the largest part of the share capital until the winding up of the company. The vendors determined to fix the price for the property to be sold at £46,300. How this sum was arrived at we do not know. No doubt it included a large amount of what would be profit to the vendors if they disposed of their shares favourably, but so long as they continued to hold them this would be nominal profit only. The vendors did not require to be paid a large amount in cash, and arranged that the £46,300 should be paid as follows: £10,000 by the company taking over the existing mortgages on the freeholds, £7,000 in cash which was expected to be raised by means of first debentures for that amount, £3,000 the residue of the first debentures, £20,000 in shares to be treated as fully paid up. This left £6,300 to be raised somehow or other, and I think the suggestion a probable one, that the balance so remaining determines the amount £6,300 of the second debentures. This arrangement was carried out by an agreement dated the 10th of January, 1894 (the company having been incorporated just before). The memorandum of association provided for the execution of this agreement. The agreement was executed by the authority of the board of directors consisting of Wragg and Martin and one Harrison, and its execution by the company was attested by Wragg and Harrison. A supplementary agreement was executed the same day whereby the solicitor of the company undertook to raise £7,000 by first debentures, of which £4,600 was to be paid to Martin, £1,000 to the credit of the company, and out of the residue Wragg and Martin covenanted to pay the debts of the partnership. The last terms of this agreement were plainly insisted upon for the satisfaction of debenture-holders, and were very fair. So far nothing could be more straightforward or more reasonable, subject always to the question whether the intended ultimate profit to be realized was not fixed too high. As, however, it is not suggested that there is ground for setting aside the contract, I do not see, subject to the point which I reserve as to appropriation of the purchase-money, how, consistently at any rate with Anderson's case, the shares could possibly be treated as not fully paid up. In the present, as in Anderson's case, the shares allotted were allotted to vendors, or persons representing vendors, and in Anderson's case the £150,000 worth of shares allotted consisted, to an extent of far more than 50 per cent. of profit reserved to the members of the syndicate selling. That case is undoubtedly binding upon us. It was cited and relied upon in the Ooregum case, and was not, I think, in any way disapproved of. Certainly there is nothing in the opinions of the noble and learned lords to shake the authority of the case. By saying that Anderson's case is an authority binding on us I do not mean to intimate an opinion that there are not other authorities to the same effect. I think that the series of authorities cited by Lindley, L.J., beginning with Pell's case, have made it impossible in such a case as above indicated to inquire effectually into the value of the property taken in exchange for shares where the contract itself is not impeached. If these authorities are to be overruled that must be done by the House of Lords. But it is said that a clause in the main agreement of the 10th of January, 1894—viz., clause 3 makes the present case an exception to the general rule. Before examining that clause I will consider what the actual agreement between the parties was independently of that clause. Clearly it was a purchase of the whole freehold property dealt with at an entire price. Neither the vendors nor purchasers would have sold or bought any one of the items independently of the others. It is not in accordance with the facts that there were a number of independent purchasers of separate items, and no one could say that, independently of the clause, it would have been possible to make any appropriation of portions of the purchase-money. As the vendors would have the full control over the consideration given, and could divide it in accordance with their rights inter se, there could be no object connected with any difference in those rights in making any appropriation. In addition to this it is manifest that the figures in the clause are not founded on any exact estimate of the rights of the different partners, the figures being throughout round numbers which could hardly by possibility conform to pre-existing rights. It is obvious that it could not in any way make the slightest difference to the company, except for the stamp duty payable, that part of the consideration should be given for one part of the assets rather than for another. My conclusion is that the clause was intended to be operative only as regards stamp duty. The apportionment may have been a wrong apportionment, but that cannot alter the nature of the contract or entitle the company to deal exceptionally with it. I am not prepared to say that in no cases can the consideration in kind given for paid-up shares be inquired into, even though there may be nothing on the face of the contract to show the insufficiency of the consideration; but I abstain from attempting to define what the cases are. I think it sufficient to say that in my judgment the opinions of the noble and learned lords in The Ooregum case sufficiently indicate that such cases may arise. They must be dealt with when they do arise.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Walter Murton; Colyer & Colyer; A. E. Greville.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Chitty, L.JJ.) May 31.

MEXBOROUGH (EARL OF) v. WHITWOOD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Practice—Discovery of documents—Interrogatories—Action for forfeiture of land.

The defendant in an action to recover possession of land on a forfeiture for breach of a covenant contained in a lease, cannot be ordered to make an affidavit of discovery of documents or to answer interrogatories.

Seaward v. Dennington, 44 W. R. 696, disapproved.

Appeal from an order of Bruce, J., at chambers.

The action was brought to recover possession of land on the ground of forfeiture incurred by reason of a breach of a covenant contained in a lease.

The plaintiff applied for an order on the defendant to make discovery of documents and to answer interrogatories.

The defendant opposed the application on the ground that an order for discovery could not properly be made on a defendant in an action for a forfeiture of land.

Bruce, J., refused to make an order.

The plaintiff appealed.

Scott Fox, for the plaintiff.—The defendant is not entitled to resist an order for discovery. The case of Seaward v. Dennington, 44 W. R. 696, is a distinct authority that an order for discovery of documents may be made against a defendant in an action for a forfeiture of land. Such an action is not an action for a penalty in the sense of punishment on the defendant for doing something wrong. It is merely an action to enforce a covenant. The case of Martin v. Treacher, 34 W. R. 315, 16 Q. B. D. 507, on which the defendants will rely, was an action for a penalty. In the case of Spokes v. Grosvenor and West-end Railway Terminus Hotel Co. (No. 1), decided in this court a few days ago, ante, p. 545, it was held that in an action for fraudulent conspiracy a defendant could not resist the making of an order for discovery of documents, and that the proper time for him to take the objection that giving discovery would tend to criminate him was when he made his affidavit in answer. There ought to be no difference in this respect between an objection that discovery may tend to criminate the party and an objection that discovery may expose him to a forfeiture.

He also cited Ind, Coope, & Co. v. Emmerson, 36 W. R. 243, 12 App. Cas. 300.

Tindal Atkinson, Q.C., and Montague Lush, for the defendants.—No order for discovery can rightly be made in this case. This is an action directed to obtaining a forfeiture of the defendants' interest, and discovery is only sought with that object. It is not like the case where it may incidentally happen that an answer may criminate a man. The case of Martin v. Treacher shows that there is a distinction between the objection that giving discovery may criminate and the objection that discovery is sought to establish a forfeiture. Pye v. Butterfield, 13 W. R. 178, 5 B. & S. 829, is a clear authority to show that interrogatories cannot be allowed in an action brought, like the present, to enforce a forfeiture of land. And if interrogatories cannot be administered, an order for discovery of documents ought not to be made: see Hunnings v. Williamson, 31 W. R. 924, 10 Q. B. D. 459; Hobbs & Co. v. Hudson & Co., 38 W. R. 682, 25 Q. B. D. 232.

They also cited Lord Uxbridge v. Staveland, 1 Ves. sen. 56.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—This is an action in which the plaintiff seeks to obtain a judgment that the defendants' lease has become forfeited. The plaintiff therefore admits that the defendants have an estate in land, but he says that they have forfeited the estate by a breach of covenant. The plaintiff insists that he has a right to an order on the defendants to make discovery of documents, and also a right to an order on the defendants to answer interrogatories. The learned judge has refused both orders.

There are two rules which have always existed in the common law of England, and have never been taken away by any statute. One is that, if any person brings an action against another for penalties, the court will not assist the person claiming penalties by any order in the way of procedure. The other is that, where a person has an estate in land and another seeks to obtain a forfeiture of that estate, the court will not give any assistance to the person claiming the forfeiture. These are rules of procedure, but they are also something more; they are rules in favour of particular classes of defendants, they are intended to protect defendants against claims for forfeiture of land, and against informations for penalties brought by common informers. There is also another rule which is often spoken of together with these rules—viz., that a witness is not bound to criminate himself. But this rule really has nothing in common with the other rules.

In Martin v. Treacher, which was a qui tam action for penalties brought by a common informer, it was laid down that in such an action the court would not assist the plaintiff by any of its procedure with regard to discovery. The reasoning of the judgments applies as well to discovery of documents as to interrogatories. In Pye v. Butterfield, which was an action for forfeiture, the decision was that interrogatories could not be delivered at the instance of the plaintiff. Then unfortunately there is the case of Seaward v. Dennington, which was an action like the present to recover possession of demised premises on a forfeiture for breach of covenant, and there this court held that an order for discovery of documents might be made against the defendant. After hearing the law on the subject fully discussed I venture to think that that case was not rightly decided. With regard to the case of Ind, Coope, & Co. v. Emmerson, I do not think that the House of Lords there intended to decide that the two rules which I have mentioned were done away with by the Judicature Act. I think that an action for forfeiture of land is on the same footing as an action for penalties, and that where the only issue in an action is whether there shall be a forfeiture of land, as is the case here, the court must refuse to make an order either for interrogatories or for discovery of documents. The appeal must be dismissed.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This is an action of ejectment brought by a lessor against a lessee; it is what is called an action for forfeiture. The plaintiff seeks to put the defendant under discovery, both discovery of documents and by way of interrogatories. The learned judge disallowed both applications. In Martin v. Treacher, which was an action for penalties for forfeiture, this court held that interrogatories could not be allowed; and before that, in the case of Hunnings v. Williamson, which was also an action for penalties, the Divisional Court held that no order could be made either for discovery of documents or interrogatories. Then we come to the case where the action is for forfeiture other than penalties. Pye v. Butterfield was a case of an action for forfeiture of land exactly similiar to this case; and there it was held that no interrogatories could be administered. In the recent case of Seaward v. Dennington, which was heard before my brother Rigby and myself, we held that in such a case an order for discovery of documents might be made. But on further consideration I think that our decision in that case was not right. I therefore agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CHITTY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Vincent & Vincent, for North & Sons, Leeds.

Solicitor for the defendants, T. A. Jones, for C. A. Phillips, Castleford.

From Q. B. Div. (Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) May 18.

MACHADO v. FONTES. (a.)

Practice—Pleading—Striking out allegation—Libel—Publication abroad—No civil remedy in foreign country, but only criminal remedy at instance of the State—Plea of the foreign law.

Where an act has been committed abroad which if done here would by English law give rise to a right of action, an action may be brought in this country unless by the law of the place where it was done the act complained of is either justified or excused. It is therefore no defence to show that the law of the place where a libel was published provides for no civil action, but only for criminal proceedings at the instance of the State, in respect of such publication.

Appeal from Kennedy, J., at chambers. The plaintiff had brought an action in this country against the defendant for a libel alleged to be contained in a pamphlet published by the defendant in Brazil, and the defendant had put in a defence denying the allegations of the statement of claim. Afterwards the defendant applied in the Manchester district registry for leave to amend his defence by adding an allegation that if the pamphlet had in fact been published by him in Brazil (which he denied) such publication could not, by Brazilian law, be a ground of legal proceedings against the defendant in which damages could be recovered, or alternatively that such publication could not be a ground of legal proceedings against the defendant in which the plaintiff could recover general damages for any injury to his credit, character, or feelings. It was alleged on behalf of the defendant that in cases of libel the law of Brazil provided only for criminal proceedings being taken by the State for the punishment of the libeller, and gave no remedy of any kind to or at the suit of the person libelled; or, in the alternative, that the person libelled could recover only "special damage" occasioned to him by the libel.

The registrar at Manchester allowed the amendment, and on appeal Kennedy, J., at chambers affirmed his decision, but gave leave to appeal. The plaintiff appealed accordingly.

C. Montague Lush, for the appeal, cited Scott v. Lord Seymour, 10 W. R. 739, 1 H. & C. 219; The M. Moxham, 24 W. R. 597, 650, 1 P. D. 107, 113; The Halley, 16 W. R. 998, L. R. 2 P. C. 193; and British South Africa Co. v. Companhia de Moçambique, [1893] A. C. 602.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and A. J. Ashton, for the respondent.—A tort, to be sued upon here, must be actionable both here and where it is committed. By the law of Brazil the only remedy for a libel is a criminal one, and therefore this action cannot be maintained.

They cited Phillips v. Eyre, L. R. 6 Q. B. 1, 18 W. R. C. L. Dig. 2; and 1 Sm. L. C. (9th ed.), pp. 664-65.

Montague Lush, in reply.—Unless by the law of Brazil the act complained of is justified or excused the plaintiff can sue in England.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of opinion that this appeal must be allowed. An action has been brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for a libel alleged to have been published by the defendant in Brazil, and as to this publication in Brazil the defendant has pleaded the plea that such a publication cannot be the ground of legal proceedings against the defendant in Brazil, or, at any rate, it cannot be the ground of any legal proceedings in Brazil in which general as distinguished from special damages can be recovered. It appears to me that that is the meaning of the language used; that only special damages can be recovered. Mr. Walton says that that is not the meaning of the plea, but that it is intended to raise a larger question than that—that it is intended to say that in Brazil libel cannot be made the subject-matter of civil proceedings at all, but only of criminal proceedings. I will assume, for the purpose of my judgment, that that is the true meaning.

Now, where the words complained of have been published outside the jurisdiction, the general principle applicable is that the publication alleged to be an injury must be wrongful both by the law of England and also by the law of the country where the publication took place. The first thing for us to do, then, is to see whether the conditions have been satisfied.

In Phillips v. Eyre Willes, J., lays down very distinctly what the requisites are in such a case. He says: "As a general rule, in order to found a suit in England for a wrong alleged to have been committed abroad, two conditions must be fulfilled. First, the wrong must be of such a character that it would have been actionable if committed in England. . . . Secondly, the act must not have been justifiable by the law of the place where it was done." Then we find in The M. Moxham these words: "It is settled that if by the law of a foreign country the act is lawful, or is excusable, or even if it has been legitimized by a subsequent act of the Legislature, then this court will take into consideration that state of the law; that is to say, if by the law of the foreign country a particular person is justified, or is excused, or has been justified or excused, for the thing done, he will not be answerable here."

Both of those cases seem to me to go to the length of establishing that if the act complained of is one which in the foreign country where it was done would be an innocent act, that will be a good defence. There is no doubt that the present action complies with the requirements laid down by Willes, J., for the act of publication was not justifiable or excusable in Brazil. If the publication in Brazil is actionable, then the right of action in this country is established, and a remedy in this country, and according to the law of this country, follows from that. Therefore in this case damages would flow from the libel, just as in any action brought in respect of the publication of a libel in this country. It was said that it would be much better this question should not be decided at the present time, but that a commission should go for the examination of the witnesses in Brazil. But if our view is correct, that would be a mere waste of time and money. I think, therefore, that the plea put in by the defendant ought to be struck out.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not propose to decide this case upon any technical construction as to what may be the precise allegation which the defendant desires to insert in his defence. The construction contended for by the defendant is one which it will reasonably bear, and I will assume it to involve that no action for damages or other civil action can be maintained in Brazil in respect of a libel. But, even if that is shown to be so, does it follow that a libel published in Brazil is not actionable in this country? Other circumstances concurring—as that the plaintiff and the defendant are here within the jurisdiction of the English court—I think it does not follow. In Phillips v. Eyre Willes, J., laid down the rule, which he expressed without the slightest doubt or hesitation. I cannot doubt that the change in that statement from "actionable" to "justifiable" was deliberate. The first requisite is that the act alleged to be a wrong must be actionable in England. It was long ago settled that an action for anything of a "transitory" nature—according to the old phrase—may be brought in this country. But when an act is committed in a foreign country it may turn out to be, by the law of that country, an innocent act, and we in England pay such respect to the law of that country that we do not allow an action to be brought upon it here. But I conceive that that means exactly what it says; the act must be justified or excused by the foreign law. It is not of importance what may be the remedy provided by that law. The remedy, of course, must be according to the law of the country where the action is tried.

In The M. Moxham all the judges of the Court of Appeal laid down the law, so that there is a uniform decision of the court binding upon us, if it were necessary to consider that. One judge after another treats the rule laid down by Willes, J., as correct; not quoting Willes, J.'s words, but stating the principle to exactly the same purport and effect. I think there is no doubt at all that this action for a libel is maintainable unless it can be shown that the alleged libel is justified or excused by some law of Brazil, either existing at the time of publication or subsequent.

In fact you start from this: Here is an act which is primâ facie actionable, the only defence to an action in respect of that act is that the act was lawful according to the law of the place where it was done. All we have to do is to see whether there is a peremptory bar to our jurisdiction, because we are dealing with an act which ought to be considered an innocent or excusable act.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Grant, Bolcraig, & Co., for Parker, Ayre, & Moorhouse, Manchester; Chester & Co., for Crofton, Craven, & Worthington, Manchester.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, A. L. Smith, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Feb. 12.

In re LONDON HEALTH ELECTRICAL INSTITUTE (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Private company—Debentures issued to vendors—Debentures covering all assets—Right of unsecured creditors to winding-up order.

Where the available assets of a private company are insufficient to satisfy debentures which have been issued to the vendors of property to the company, in payment of the agreed price thereof, and which cover all the assets, the unsecured creditors of the company are not entitled to a winding-up order, as they could not get anything thereby.

Appeal by unsecured creditors of the company from Vaughan Williams, J.

The above company was formed for the purpose of acquiring certain businesses which were the property of G. & M. Spalding, and was duly registered under the Companies Act in 1892.

The company was what is known as a "private" company, and on its formation £3,000 debentures were issued to the above-named gentlemen as consideration for the sale of the businesses.

The company having become insolvent, a winding-up petition was presented by certain trade creditors.

The petition was opposed on the ground that the assets were insufficient to satisfy the debentures, and that there would therefore be nothing for the unsecured creditors in the event of a winding-up.

Vaughan Williams, J., dismissed the petition. The petitioners appealed.

Waghorn and Nepean, for the appellants.—The appellants are entitled to a winding-up order. This case is distinguishable from Salomon v. Salomon & Co., ante, p. 193, [1897] A. C. 22. There the debentures were issued in consideration of book debts; but here, although they purport to have been issued in part payment of the price of the business, they were in reality issued without consideration, as will appear if a winding-up order is made. They are therefore void as against the other creditors of the company under 13 Eliz. c. 5, and should be set aside. They are void under the statute on the further ground that they were not issued bonâ fide but with a view to defeat the future creditors: See Twyne's case, 3 Co. 212; Cadogan v. Kennet, Cowp. 432; Ex parte Mercer, In re Wise, 17 Q. B. D. 290, 34 W. R. Dig. 169. [LINDLEY, L.J.—The House of Lords in Salomon v. Salomon were of opinion that debentures duly registered were good against all creditors. I cannot see that 13 Eliz. c. 5 applies in the case of registered securities.] A mere plea of no assets does not afford a conclusive answer to a winding-up petition: In re Krasnapolsky Restaurant and Winter Garden Co., 40 W. R. 639, [1892] 3 Ch. 178; In re Uruguay Central and Hygueritas Railway of Monte Video, 27 W. R. 571, 11 Ch. D. 372. In In re Chapel House Colliery Co., 31 W. R. 933, 24 Ch. D. 259, which may be cited against us, it was not disputed that there were no assets. The same observation applies to In re St. Thomas Dock Co., 24 W. R. 544, 2 Ch. D. 116; and In re Free Fishermen of Faversham, 36 Ch. D. 329, 35 W. R. Dig. 107. [LINDLEY, L.J., referred to In re International Commercial Co., 75 L. T. N. S. 639.] At all events the petition should be allowed to stand over and an inquiry be directed at chambers as to whether the debentures should be set aside: In re Olathe Silver Mining Co., 33 W. R. 12, 27 Ch. D. 278, as coming within the statute of Elizabeth. The petitioners ought not to be required to pay costs.

Butcher, for the company, and Austen Cartmell, for opposing creditors, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J.—In my opinion we are bound by the decision of the House of Lords in Salomon v. Salomon, which is very far-reaching in its effects. It is impossible to draw any distinction between that case and the present. The material facts are the same in both.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

There, as here, the business was sold to the company in consideration of the issue of debentures to the vendors. Lord Watson, referring to the agreement for sale, says that it was "in the full knowledge of the facts, approved and adopted by the company itself, if there was a company, and by all the shareholders who ever were, or were likely to be, members of the company," and the court came to the conclusion that it could not be set aside. We must accept that decision and treat the agreement for sale in the present case as valid also. That being so the debentures cannot be got rid of, and it is conceded that unless they can be got rid of the unsecured creditors can get nothing. How, then, can it be said that there is any possibility of there being a farthing for the unsecured creditors in the event of a winding up? This is a very unfortunate state of things, and since the decision above referred to apparently without a remedy. The only course for tradesmen to adopt is to refuse to deal with such companies except for cash. The only way in which we could come to a different conclusion from Vaughan Williams, J., would be by deciding to order an examination as to whether there would be any assets in a winding up, but in face of the authority referred to we cannot do that. It has been suggested that the petition should be allowed to stand over, and that an inquiry like that which was directed in In re Olathe Silver Mining Co. should take place as to the validity of the debentures. But as the petitioners have not exercised their right of cross-examining Messrs. Spalding upon their affidavits, I do not think we ought now to put in force the powers conferred upon the court by section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, and section 8 of the Companies Act, 1890. We cannot differ from the decision of Vaughan Williams, J. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question is, Can this winding-up order be made? Vaughan Williams, J., held that it could not because there were no assets. It is conceded by the appellants that the only asset that could be realized would be by getting rid of the debentures. On their behalf an able argument has been addressed to us based upon 13 Eliz. c. 5, but it appears to me that it cannot prevail in view of the decision of the House of Lords in Salomon v. Salomon. That decision appears to me to imply that if a trader wishes to convert himself into a limited company all that is required of him is a literal compliance with the provisions of the Companies Acts. He may go on trading as a company with limited liability although he is the only member of the company who is worth anything at all. If he is entitled to form himself into a company he is entitled to issue debentures. That is what has been done in the present case. The debentures cannot be impeached, and it is therefore useless to ask for a winding-up order. I am of opinion that the decision of Vaughan Williams, J., should be affirmed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree with my learned brethren in thinking that nothing can be done to assist the unsecured creditors. It is admitted that if the debentures stand they can get nothing. In my opinion there is no possibility of setting aside the debentures.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellants, A. Arnold Hannay.

Solicitors for the respondents, Mann & Taylor.

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (Lindley, A. L. Smith, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — March 10, 11; April 7, 14.

BISHOP v. BISHOP.
JUDKINS v. JUDKINS. (a.)

Divorce—Judicial separation—Husband and wife—Separation deed—Covenant not to sue for greater allowance—Permanent alimony—Matrimonial Causes Acts, 1857, 1859, 1866 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, ss. 32, 35; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 4; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 1).

Although under a separation deed a wife may have agreed to accept a certain sum as maintenance from her husband, and may have covenanted not to sue for any further allowance, yet if the circumstances be altered to divorce or judicial separation by reason of subsequent adultery or otherwise the court has power to order a larger sum to be paid to the wife by the husband by way of permanent alimony and for the maintenance of her children.

Gandy v. Gandy, 30 W. R. 673, 7 P. D. 168, 33 W. R. 803, 30 Ch. D. 57, explained.

Appeal of the respondent in Bishop v. Bishop from the President of the Probate Division, and in Judkins v. Judkins from Barnes, J.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment of Lindley, L.J.

Willis, Q.C., and Barnard, for the husband in the first case.—There are three points to be considered—(1) Were the husband and wife legally capable of entering into this agreement? (2) Is this a settlement within the meaning of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5? (3) Even if it is such a settlement, will the court vary it? As to (1) Gandy v. Gandy, 33 W. R. 803, 30 Ch. D. 57, decided that the parties could enter into such an agreement: see also Rose v. Rose, 31 W. R. 573, 8 P. D. 98. There being cruelty before the deed of separation and adultery afterwards, husbands and wives must have a right to compromise all suits in the Divorce Court; and if they can compromise after the suit is commenced they can compromise before suit. (2) Gandy v. Gandy does not affect this question. We cannot argue that a covenant is not property; a covenant is a settlement. But this document must be looked at as a whole; it is headed "In the suit." If it is simply an agreement for an order it cannot be said to be a settlement. But no order was actually drawn up, though one was contemplated. On the true construction it is simply an agreement to agree to an order, and therefore is not a settlement within section 5. Further, nothing is settled on Mrs. Bishop in her capacity of wife, and therefore it is not a settlement. As to the definition of "property," see Worsley v. Worsley, 17 W. R. 743, L. R. 1 P. & D. 648; Maudsley v. Maudsley, 2 P. D. 256, 26 W. R. Dig. 80. [RIGBY, L.J.—I think Maudsley v. Maudsley entirely overrules the conclusion you have arrived at from Worsley v. Worsley.] We submit that the reasoning of Morrall v. Morrall, 29 W. R. 897, 6 P. D. 98, is binding in this case, and the President has wrongly applied it.

Deane, Q.C., and Dudley Grazebrook, for the wife.—Whatever happens, this is an allowance to the wife, even if they lived together again. The wife can at any time come and ask for additional maintenance for her children under Act of Parliament; and unless there is a definite covenant against such increased allowance which this court can enforce, the wife is entitled to come here for an increase of maintenance. This case differs from Williams v. Baily, L. R. 2 Eq. 731, 15 W. R. Ch. Dig. 45, because in that case there was a specific covenant by the wife not to do certain things; the Vice-Chancellor held that she had not assented to those terms, because she did not understand or approve of them. There are no decided cases to show whether this agreement which makes provision for future adultery is legal or illegal.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They referred to Rowley v. Rowley, L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. App. 63, 15 W. R. H. L. Dig. 6; Brunton v. Dixon, W. N., [1892] 105; Smyth v. Smyth, 4 Hagg. Ecc. Cas. 509; Matthews v. Matthews, 8 W. R. 591, 3 Sw. & Tr. 161; Powell v. Powell, 22 W. R. 62, L. R. 3 P. & D. 186.

Willis, Q.C., replied.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Priestley, for the husband in the second case.—Barnes, J., relied upon Bishop v. Bishop, and thought the second decision in Gandy v. Gandy was set aside. There is no jurisdiction to give increased alimony. Express power is given by statute allowing a petition for an increase of maintenance for children, but not a word is said about alimony. The principle of Gandy v. Gandy is that when a bargain made between husband and wife is still in force, the court has no power to relieve the husband from his obligations under the deed; this can only be done after decree of divorce. Here there is an express covenant that the wife will maintain herself out of her allowance of £150 per annum, and that covenant is still in force. The order made by Barnes, J., was wrong and is inconsistent with Gandy v. Gandy. The husband cannot under any circumstances repudiate his covenant to pay £150 a year.

Rawlins, Q.C., and Barnard, for the wife.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 14.—Judgment in the two cases was delivered by LINDLEY, L.J., as follows:

These are two appeals from two orders of the Divorce Court, and in both of them the appellants rely on the decision of this court in Gandy v. Gandy, which is said to be inconsistent with the orders appealed from. It will be convenient, therefore, in the first place, to examine the case referred to and to ascertain what exactly was there decided. Gandy v. Gandy came twice before the Court of Appeal—first, on one state of facts; and, secondly, on another and quite different state of facts.

The first decision of Gandy v. Gandy, 30 W. R. 673, 7 P. D. 168, appears to have been greatly misunderstood. Lord Hannen had held that a deed of separation between husband and wife ought to be treated as based on the implied condition that both parties should live apart in chastity; and he held that the subsequent adultery of the husband enabled the wife not only to sue for and obtain a decree for judicial separation, but also to sue for and, if the husband's means permitted, to obtain a larger allowance by way of alimony than she had agreed to accept when she separated from him. The wife had expressly covenanted not to sue for more than the agreed allowance; but this covenant was held by Lord Hannen not to be binding on her, the implied condition of chastity having been broken by the husband (7 P. D. 77). On appeal this decision was reversed (7 P. D. 168), and the condition held by Lord Hannen to be implied in all deeds of separation was decided by this court not to be implied, and, no other ground for relieving the wife from her covenant being suggested except that the husband's means had improved, this court held the wife to be bound by her covenant, and her petition for increased alimony was dismissed. This was all that the Court of Appeal then decided, and the court has never gone back from that decision.

When the case came before the Court of Appeal on the second occasion (33 W. R. 803, 30 Ch. D. 57) other circumstances were brought to the attention of the court—viz., that the Divorce Court had given the custody of the two youngest daughters to the wife, and that the husband refused to support them, which he had covenanted to do by the separation deed. Under these circumstances this court held that the wife was no longer bound by her covenant not to sue for further alimony, and that it was competent for the Divorce Court to grant her more than she had agreed to accept in the deed of separation. This court accordingly made an order giving her leave to present a fresh petition to the Divorce Court for increased alimony (see 30 Ch. D. 83). This she did, and she ultimately obtained a considerable allowance beyond what her husband had covenanted to pay her by the deed of separation. This decision was perfectly consistent with the first decision, which was based on a different state of facts. The decision in Gandy v. Gandy that continued chastity is not a condition underlying separation deeds, and to be implied in them accordingly, is obviously a decision of general application, and has no reference to the nature of the proceeding in which such a question arises. But, in considering the power of the Divorce Court to disregard agreements between husband and wife, it is very important to consider whether that court has decreed a judicial separation or a dissolution of marriage. The Court of Appeal in the first case of Gandy v. Gandy drew attention to this, and laid great stress upon it, and expressed no opinion on what the Divorce Court could or could not do in cases of dissolution of marriage. But the Court of Appeal on the first occasion, whilst negativing the implied condition of chastity, distinctly recognized that there might be circumstances which would entitle the Divorce Court, even in suits for judicial separation, to disregard bargains between husband and wife. Such bargains cannot prevent the court from doing what is right as regards infant children; and on the second occasion the Court of Appeal acted on this view, as already pointed out.

The short result of Gandy v. Gandy may be summed up thus—(1) Lord Hannen's decision that continued chastity was an implied condition in separation deeds was overruled; (2) in the first case of Gandy v. Gandy the court held the wife bound by her agreement, there being no circumstances to relieve her from it, and no power in the Divorce Court to disregard her covenant; (3) in the second case of Gandy v. Gandy, the wife having the custody of the children, and the husband refusing to support them, she was held no longer bound by the covenants in the separation deed, and the Divorce Court, being free to disregard it, had power to do what it thought just in making her an allowance in the shape of alimony, and to take into account whatever circumstances it considered material in arriving at a conclusion as to what was just under the altered position of the parties; (4) nothing was decided respecting any of the statutory powers of the Divorce Court in suits for dissolution of marriage; (5) nothing was decided in the first suit of Gandy v. Gandy as to the power of the Divorce Court to make orders respecting the custody, maintenance, and education of children.

We pass now to the appeals before us. First, as to Bishop v. Bishop. There is one child of the marriage—a daughter. In 1894 Mrs. Bishop presented a petition for a divorce, on the ground of her husband's adultery and cruelty. When the petition came on for hearing it was withdrawn, and the petitioner and her husband made and signed an agreement, dated the 20th of March, 1894, and in the words following: "The petitioner agrees to accept £130 per annum by way of permanent maintenance; this sum to include the maintenance of the child. The said allowance to be paid by Mr. Walter Harry Bishop, the respondent, by monthly payments during their joint lives. This allowance to be paid in any event, whether they remain married or whether the marriage should hereafter be dissolved. Mrs. Edith Bishop, the petitioner, is to have the custody of the child." The agreement contained no covenant by either party not to sue the other at some future time for restitution of conjugal rights, or for a judicial separation, or for a divorce, and, indeed, the possibility of proceedings in future for a divorce was evidently contemplated, for the parties agreed that the allowance should be paid whether they remained married or whether the marriage should thereafter be dissolved. Further than this, the agreement contained no covenant by the wife not to sue for more than the £130.

Counsel for the wife contend that the £130 a year was the minimum she would accept, but not the maximum she would endeavour to obtain if circumstances should occur enabling her to do so. After this Mrs. Bishop sued for and obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. This decree was disobeyed, and she then sued her husband for a divorce on the ground of fresh adultery and desertion, and on the 8th of June, 1896, she obtained a decree dissolving the marriage, and the custody of the child was given to her. In August, 1896, she presented a petition praying for an order that her husband should pay, or secure to her, such gross sum, or such annual or monthly or weekly sum for her permanent maintenance as to the court might seem meet, and, further, for an order that her husband should make such provision for the maintenance of the child as the court should think reasonable. The petition was referred to the registrar, and he in effect reported that the agreement above set out was binding on the petitioner, and that she was not entitled to more than £130 a year. On the 8th of February, 1897, an order was made by the President setting aside this report and directing the inquiry as to the means of the petitioner to proceed. From this order Mr. Bishop appealed to this court, leave to do so having been granted by the President. It is to be observed that the agreement provided that the wife should have the child and maintain her out of the agreed allowance. The decree giving the wife the custody of the child has therefore not imposed any additional burden on the wife in this respect. It is further to be observed that the agreement provided for a possible dissolution of the marriage, and it cannot therefore be said that the circumstances which have arisen were not foreseen and provided for by the parties. On the other hand, the agreement did not provide for the education of the child, but only for her custody and maintenance. Nor can the agreement in any way preclude any application on behalf of the child for a proper allowance for her maintenance and education, if any such can be made under the Divorce Acts. The case being one of dissolution of marriage and not of judicial separation, Gandy v. Gandy is not in point, except in so far as it negatives any implied condition of continued chastity.

The present case must turn on the power of the Divorce Court on a dissolution of marriage to compel a husband to provide for his divorced wife, and to make orders for the maintenance and education of the children. It is necessary, therefore, to examine the provisions of the Divorce Acts relating to these matters. The statutory powers of the court as to a divorced wife's maintenance are 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 32, and 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 1. The statutory powers of the court as to children are contained in 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 35, and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 4. As regards permanent maintenance section 32 of the Act of 1857 is very wide indeed, and it would not be right for this or any court to put a narrow construction upon it or to fetter in any way the court or judge intrusted with its application in cases of divorce. The section says that regard is to be had to the wife's fortune, to the ability of the husband, and to the conduct of the parties. The appellant contends that all these matters are to be disregarded, and attention is only to be paid to the terms of the separation deed. This cannot be right. The later Act, 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 1, which extends the power of the court and enables it to order monthly or weekly payments, must be read with the former section, and the same circumstances which the court is told to regard when ordering a gross or annual sum to be secured must be regarded when a monthly or weekly sum is ordered to be paid. The agreement no doubt contemplates the continuance of the agreed allowance, even in the event of a future dissolution of marriage. The validity of the agreement in this respect is very questionable. Wood, V.C., said in H. v. W., 3 K. & J. 382 at p. 387, 6 W. R. Ch. Dig. 29, "It is forbidden to provide for the possible dissolution of the marriage contract, which the policy of the law is to preserve intact and inviolable." This was before the Divorce Act had been passed, and before Lord Westbury's celebrated decision in Hunt v. Hunt, 10 W. R. 215, 4 De G. F. & J. 221. But we are not aware of any authority since the Divorce Act which shows that a covenant by a husband or wife not to sue the other for a divorce grounded on future misconduct is valid, and we doubt whether an express covenant not to sue for increased alimony in the event of such a divorce could be recognized. There is no express covenant to that effect in the present case; and a covenant of such very questionable validity certainly cannot be implied. In other words, the wife cannot be held to have precluded herself by her agreement from invoking the aid of the court to obtain further maintenance in the events which have happened. The foregoing statutory powers amply justify the order under appeal. But the statutory powers relating to the custody, maintenance, and education of children are also very wide, and no agreement between the parents can deprive the court of the jurisdiction thus conferred upon it. These powers are exercisable not only in suits for dissolution of marriage but also in suits for judicial separation. They amply warranted what was done in Gandy v. Gandy on the second occasion. On the first occasion nothing turned upon them, and they were not alluded to. The power of the Divorce Court to vary settlements does not assist the wife on the present occasion. Section 45 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 only enables the court to deal with property settled on the wife; section 5 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61 extends this power to property settled on either husband or wife. The other statutes do not extend the power to other property. Even if the agreement for separation in this case is a post-nuptial settlement, no variation of that agreement dealing with the property settled by it can be made which will in any way benefit the wife, and there is no other settled property that we are aware of which can be made available for her benefit. But on the ground that the other statutory powers to which we have referred are ample to justify the order appealed from, and there being no grounds for discharging that order if there is jurisdiction to make it, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

We turn now to Judkins v. Judkins. On the 30th of July, 1892, Mr. and Mrs. Judkins, who had been married some years and had two daughters, executed a separation deed, by which the husband and wife agreed to live apart, not to molest each other, not to sue each other for restitution of conjugal rights, nor for divorce or judicial separation in respect of any past misconduct. The two girls were to remain at the school where they then were, and the husband was to pay for their school bills. The wife was to have the custody and control of them during part of their holidays, and the husband was to have them for the rest of the holidays. The husband agreed to pay his wife an allowance of £150 a year, and she agreed to keep herself and to indemnify her husband from all debts and liabilities which she might contract. The husband further agreed to pay his wife £15 a year for the clothing of each girl until she should attain the age of fifteen, and such further sum afterwards as the husband and wife should agree upon until each girl should attain twenty-one. The agreement was to become void if the parties became reconciled or if their marriage should be dissolved for any future misconduct. On the 5th of August, 1896, the wife obtained a decree for judicial separation on the ground of adultery on the part of the husband since the date of the separation deed, and she obtained an order giving her the custody of both daughters, one of whom is now over seventeen, and she is to pass part of her holidays with her father. The wife afterwards applied for permanent alimony and maintenance for the daughters. The registrar dismissed her application, on the authority of the first decision of Gandy v. Gandy, 30 W. R. 673, 7 P. D. 168, but on appeal Barnes, J., reversed this decision, on the authority of the second decision in that case, and gave the wife liberty to proceed with her application. From this decision the husband has appealed to this court. It will be observed that this is a case of judicial separation, and not of divorce, and that, whilst the separation deed left the custody of the children with the husband, the decree of the Divorce Court has given that custody to the wife. Further, the husband's covenant to pay the school bills of the girls only extends to the bills at the school at which they were at the date of the deed, and one of the girls being over fifteen, no sum for her clothing is payable under the separation deed, the husband and wife not having agreed upon any allowance. The husband in this case has by his counsel expressed his willingness to do whatever the court may think right as regards the girls, but this offer does not affect the jurisdiction of the court, nor the right of the wife to invoke its aid. The separation deed contains no express covenant not to sue for a greater allowance than £150 a year, and is in this respect less explicit than the deed in Gandy v. Gandy. The covenant not to molest is shown by the next clause not to apply to proceedings in the Divorce Court based on subsequent misconduct, even if it could so apply apart from such context; and the covenant by the wife to pay her own debts and indemnify her husband against them does not prevent her from applying for maintenance for the children.

Under these circumstances Barnes, J., was right in holding the second decision in Gandy v. Gandy, rather than the first decision, applicable to the present case. No doubt there are observations in the judgments on the first occasion which favour the contention of the husband, but, as already pointed out, nothing then turned on the custody or maintenance of the children.

It was contended by counsel for the husband that even if an order were made for the maintenance of the children it ought to be confined to that, and ought not to extend to alimony for the wife. But it is obvious that in considering what ought to be done as to either allowance, the court must consider the other. Barnes, J., made the order in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon the court by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 17 (alimony), and section 35, amended by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 4 (maintenance). We see no reason to alter the form of the order, especially having regard to the form adopted in Gandy v. Gandy, and the observations of Cotton, L.J., in 30 Ch. D. 79, 80, and the orders ultimately made by the Divorce Court for alimony after the second decision of this court in that case. The whole case as to alimony and maintenance is properly open as soon as the position of the parties provided for by the deed is altered by the order of the court changing the custody of the children.

The appeal in this case must also be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Solicitors in Bishop v. Bishop, Edward J. H. Carter; Edwin Smith & Ellis.

Solicitors in Judkins v. Judkins, Arnold Williams & Co.; H. B. Wade.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. }
Stirling, J. } May 12, 13.

CROSHAW v. LYNDHURST SHIP CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Judgment creditor—Receivership order, effect of—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 88), ss. 87, 163.

A judgment creditor of a company who, at the commencement of the winding up of the company, has obtained a receivership order against the company but taken no steps under that order, has not acquired anything in the nature of a charge, but is in a position analogous to that of an execution creditor where the execution is incomplete, and accordingly will not be allowed to proceed further by the court in the absence of special circumstances, and gains no priority over the other creditors by virtue of the order.

In re Potts, [1893] 1 Q. B. 648, applied.

This was an action by a mortgagee of a ship's freight against the mortgagors who were a company and various incumbrancers and persons claiming to have incumbrances, amongst whom were the London and North-Western Bank (Limited). The bank were creditors of the company, and on the 5th of February, 1896, after prior mortgages and charges had been executed, they recovered judgment against the ship company.

On the 1st of April of the same year they obtained, after notice to the company, though the company did not appear, from a judge of the Queen's Bench Division this order, that the "manager of the plaintiff company (the bank) be appointed receiver upon first giving security by bond to the satisfaction of one of the masters of the Supreme Court of Judicature to receive the rents and profits and moneys receivable in respect of the defendants' (Lyndhurst Co.) interest in the following property—that is to say the ship Lyndhurst and her freight, but that the appointment be without prejudice to the rights of any prior incumbrancers upon the said ship and freight who may think proper to take possession of or receive the same by virtue of their respective securities, or if any prior incumbrancer is in possession then without prejudice to such possession, and that such receiver have liberty . . . out of the rents, profits, moneys to be received by him to keep down the interest upon the prior incumbrances according to their priorities and be allowed such payments (if any) on passing his accounts, and that such receiver shall, on the 1st day of July, 1896, and at such further and other times as may be ordered by the master leave and pass such accounts, and shall on the 1st day of August, 1896, and at such further and other times as may be hereafter ordered by the master pay the balance or balances appearing due on the accounts or left or such part thereof as shall be certified as proper to be so paid, such sums to be paid in or towards satisfaction of what shall for the time being be due in respect of the judgment signed on the 5th day of February, 1896, for the sum of £2,032 14s. 7d., and £4 14s. costs, . . . and that the balance (if any) remaining in the hands of the receiver after making the several payments aforesaid shall, unless otherwise directed by the master, be forthwith paid by the receiver into court to the credit of the action subject to further order."

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At the time that order was made the present action had been commenced, and a receiver had been appointed in it, which, of course, could not be interfered with by the order made in the Queen's Bench Division. The bank having obtained the order, proceeded in a regular way before the master to give an appointment to fix the security, and notice was served on the 19th of April on the company. The company did not appear, and it stood over from time to time, and on the 18th of June this modification of the order was introduced by indorsement to the effect that "the plaintiff (the bank) undertaking to be answerable for the receiver's receipts, any money received by him to be paid into court to abide further order, and security to be dispensed with."

In the meantime on the 21st of May, 1896, an order was made to wind up the company, and on the hearing of this action the company appeared by the liquidator, and he on behalf of the general body of the creditors resisted the contention of the bank that they were entitled to any balance out of the proceeds of the ship which had been sold, paid after satisfaction of the prior charges to the receiver or to the credit of the funds in court in priority to the general body of the creditors.

Hastings, Q.C., and Stokes, for plaintiffs.—Their claim was admitted by all parties.

Scrutton, C. Macnaghten, and Lightwood, for various creditors, took no part in the argument as to marshalling.

Methold, for Balfour, Williams, & Co.—We have a charge under the document of the 27th of June on the freight only, and we claim to marshal so that the freight may be available.

Grosvenor Woods, Q.C., and Jenkins, for the North-Western Bank.—[STIRLING, J.—Your charge being merely under the execution, only gives you what the mortgagor could give you.] The bank have a higher right. The order entitles the bank to stand in the position of an incumbrancer on the property, and to say that there shall be no marshalling to their prejudice. [STIRLING, J.—The question is, What is the construction of the document of the 27th of June?] Liverpool Marine Co. v. Wilson, 20 W. R. 665, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 507, at 512; The Dowthorpe, 2 W. Robinson 73. There must be a rateable distribution of the disbursements between the freight and the ship.

Methold, in reply, cited 2 W. & T. L. C. Eq. 113, as to marshalling by the Court of Admiralty; The Mary Ann, 9 Jur. 94, and The Constancia, 15 W. R. 183, as to the rights of the North-Western Bank under the receivership.

STIRLING, J., held that Balfour, Williams, & Co. were entitled to marshal.

Grosvenor Woods, Q.C., and Jenkins, on the claim to priority.—The bank are persons entitled to redeem: Rowe v. Bant, 1 Dickens, 150, and Beckett v. Buckley, 22 W. R. 294, L. R. 17 Eq. 435. A judgment creditor's rights against land depend on the statute, and if he has taken all such steps as lie in his power, he has such an interest as entitles him to redeem; and the same principle applies to other cases of execution, that, if the creditor has done all he can, he will obtain priority. Before the fund can be taken out of the hands of the bank's receiver, the bank's debt must be paid. Nothing in the Companies Act, 1862, affects the bank's title, and the court will not interfere with the bank's rights. Section 163 of the Companies Act, 1862, is the only section which applies. The order obtained by the bank does not come within the terms of that section. Even if the word "execution" be held to include such a receivership as this, the section is controlled by sections 85 and 87 of the Companies Act, 1862. A creditor who has issued execution obtains a preference, although the execution has not been completed; and the receivership order is equivalent to the sheriff taking possession: In re Great Ship Co., 12 W. R. 139, 4 De G. J. & S. 63; In re Milwood Colliery Co., 24 W. R. 398; In re Richards, 27 W. R. 530, 11 Ch. D. 676; Hatton v. Haywood, referred to in Cadogan v. Lyric Theatre (Limited), [1894] 3 Ch. 338, 43 W. R. Dig. 145; In re Roundwood Colliery Co., ante, pp. 217, 327, [1897] 1 Ch. 373. The appointment of a receiver gives a legal right (Anglo-Italian Bank v. Davies, 9 Ch. D. 275, 25 W. R. Dig. 185; Salt v. Cooper, 29 W. R. 553, 16 Ch. D. 554; In re West Cumberland Iron Co., 41 W. R. 265, [1893] 1 Ch. 713), and, although not itself equitable execution, it is equivalent to equitable relief (In re Shepherd, 38 W. R. 133, 43 Ch. D. 138); and the court has to consider who is entitled to the property: Levasseur v. Mason & Barry (Limited), 39 W. R. 596, [1891] 2 Q. B. 73. The Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10, does not introduce the bankruptcy definition of secured creditor into winding up, and was not intended to enlarge the assets to be distributed: In re Withernsea Brickworks, 29 W. R. 178, 16 Ch. D. 337; In re Maggi, 30 W. R. 729, Ch. D. 545; In re Oriental Bank Corporation, 28 Ch. D. 643; Gorringe v. Irwell India Rubber Works, 35 W. R. 86, 34 Ch. D. 128; In re Williams, 36 W. R. 34, 36 Ch. D. 573; Pratt v. Inman, 38 W. R. 200, 43 Ch. D. 175; In re Leng, 43 W. R. 406, [1895] 1 Ch. 652. The Irish case of Ex parte Thompson, [1896] 1 L. R. Ir. 29, is wrong on this point. In re Potts, 41 W. R. 337, [1893] 1 Q. B. 648, and In re Dickenson, 37 W. R. 170, 22 Q. B. D. 187, were decided on the definition of secured creditor in the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

McSwinney, for the mortgagors, the first defendants.—The defendants case is that the bank is not a secured creditor: Taunton v. Sheiff of Warwickshire, 43 W. R. 579, [1895] 1 Ch. 734. The appointment of a receiver does not create a charge, but is only a step towards putting in execution: Lloyd v. Lloyd & Co., 25 W. R. 872, 6 Ch. D. 339; Tyrrell v. Painton, 43 W. R. 163, [1895] 1 Q. B. 202; In re Pound, Son, & Hutchins, 38 W. R. 18, 42 Ch. D. 402; In re Wanzer (Limited), 39 W. R. 343, [1891] 1 Ch. 305. There is no analogy between cases of this kind and where you are dealing with a mortgagee; and the cases show that a creditor whose execution is not complete does not obtain priority;

London and Devon Biscuit Co., 19 W. R. 963, L. R. 12 Eq. 190. This case is covered by the decision of the Master of the Rolls in Ireland in Ex parte Thompson. By section 10 of the Judicature Act the rules in bankruptcy should be read into the administration of estates, whether of individuals or of companies. The terms of section 10 of the Judicature Act are sufficiently wide, and though the Act does not furnish any definition of secured creditor, it cannot have any other meaning than it has in the Bankruptcy Act; and, if so, In re Dickenson, Ex parte Charrington, and In re Potts must govern this case.

Grosvenor Woods, Q.C., in reply.—The cases as to the effect of section 87 cited on the other side must be treated as overruled by the cases cited which are of later date.

He also referred to Ex parte Evans, In re Watkins, 28 W. R. 127, 13 Ch. D. 352; In re Jones and Judgments Act, 1864, 39 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 671, [1895] W. N. 123, as showing that the order was equivalent to actual execution.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, continued: Now, the question is one of law which for its ultimate solution if all the formalities were strictly complied with might require the decision of a judge of the Queen's Bench Division, and, perhaps, ultimately of the judge to whose court the winding up is attached. But it has been very reasonably agreed that I shall dispose of this case as if I had jurisdiction over the case in the Queen's Bench Division and the winding up, and as if the application was made either by the bank as judgment creditors for leave to pursue their further remedies under the order—because as the matter now stands they have no right to pay themselves—or as if the liquidator were here applying to stay further proceedings under the order.

The first question is, What is the effect of this order? That was considered by the Court of Appeal in In re Potts. The question there did not arise under precisely similar circumstances, because in that case there had been a bankruptcy. The question there was whether an order almost exactly similar in terms to the order of the 1st of April before it was varied on the 18th of June, made judgment creditors secured creditors within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. In order to determine that question the nature and effect of a receivership order had to be considered. I do not propose to go through the judgments, but the court decided that that order did not create "a mortgage charge or lien" on the property in question. The ground of the decision may be stated in the few words of the judgment of Lindley, L.J., on p. 660 of the report ([1893] 1 Q. B.). In that case the bankrupt was entitled under the will of his mother to a share of residuary estate which consisted of realty and personalty. The order was in the form I have stated, and was served on the executors. The Lord Justice, after stating that, said: [His lordship read the judgment of Lindley, L.J., at p. 660: "The short question which we have to consider is . . . they had not acquired an equitable interest in the property as distinguished from a right to get by a process which was not yet completed," and continued:] Therefore it seems to me that it is quite clear, having regard to that judgment, that judgment creditors have not in these circumstances required anything in the nature of a charge. Then what is their position? They are in the position of judgment creditors who have recovered judgment and are attempting to obtain payment or satisfaction out of the assets of the debtor. In that state of things I have to consider what effect the winding up of the mortgagor company has upon their rights. Now, as is well known, this is governed by two sections of the Companies Act, 1862—namely, sections 87 and 163. [His lordship read these sections and continued:] Now, it has been held that these two sections are to be read together, and notwithstanding the strong language of section 163 there are cases in which a judgment creditor who, after the commencement of the winding up, had not actually realized his execution by sale may nevertheless be allowed to proceed by leave under section 87. There is a discretion in the court as to whether it will allow proceedings which have reached a certain point to go further, or no. That was laid down in the Great Ship Co., which has been commented on in many subsequent decisions. The general rule which has been laid down amounts to this, that where as regards execution creditors the sheriff has at the date of the commencement of the winding up actually seized goods belonging to the company but has not sold them, the court will, in the absence of special circumstances, allow the execution to be proceeded with and the goods to be sold and realized. On the other hand, if the writ has only reached the hands of the sheriff, and he has not seized, the court has said that it will not allow the proceedings to go further, again in the absence of special circumstances. An illustration of this is to be found in the London and Devon Biscuit Co., 19 W. R. 943, L. R. 12 Eq. 190, before Malins, V.C. Another illustration of the same rule is to be found in the case of In re Stanhope Silkstone Collieries Co., 27 W. R. 561, 11 Ch. D. 160, which relates to the effect of a garnishee order. There a judgment creditor had obtained a garnishee order nisi to attach the debts of the debtor but had not at the commencement of the winding up served the order on the garnishee. It was held that the creditor had not become a secured creditor at the commencement of the winding up, and that leave could not be given to proceed further. The case which was in the Court of Appeal was before the late Master of the Rolls and James and Bramwell, L.JJ. The judgment of James, L.J., is very short. [His lordship read the judgment and continued:]

These being the principles on which the court acts, the question is how they are to be applied in the present case? At the commencement of the winding up all that had been obtained by the judgment creditor was an order appointing a receiver who could not act until he had given security. Steps had been taken to fix the security but it had not been actually given. Therefore the order was to a certain extent ineffective. I should be sorry to decide the case on any such point as that, although no doubt it is a difficulty in the way of the judgment creditor. I will refer again on the effect of that order supposing it had been perfected, to what was said by Lindley, L.J., in In re Potts, "an order appointing a receiver is not the same thing as taking out execution. Such an order is not a fi. fa., it is something far short of that. . . . It is simply an uncompleted process to obtain payment of money. It is not a charge because there is no order upon their executors to pay the money." Therefore the view of the lord justice appears to me to be that it is an incomplete process and not complete or effectual until an order is got on the persons liable to pay over the money referred to in the order, and there is no charge or anything of the kind. Now, it is obvious from that, that if there is an order appointing a receiver it does not amount to putting in force the execution, but is short of that. Something more has got to be done to make it effective. That being so, no further steps after the winding up proceedings can be taken without the leave of the court to make that order effectual. Ought that leave to be given? The rule of the court is that where the execution is incomplete and there has been no seizure or anything equivalent to it the court does not give leave to proceed further except under special circumstances. There is an analogy in the cases of the delivery of the writ to the sheriff not followed by seizure, and there is an analogy in the case of a garnishee order not followed by service of the order. There are here no special circumstances which justify granting leave, and therefore it follows that the claim of the liquidator must prevail and the fund must be dealt with accordingly. I ought to add that is in accordance with the decision of the Master of the Rolls in Ireland (Ex parte Thompson) although there are some expressions in that judgment which may be open to question.

Solicitors, Parker, Garrett, & Holman; Harwood & Stephenson; T. B. Robinson; Thomas Cooper & Co., for Hill, Dickenson, & Hill, Liverpool; Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., for Simpson, North, Harley, & Birkett, Liverpool; Travers, Smith, Braithwaite, & Robinson.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } April 29, 30.

In re ERRINGTON.
ERRINGTON v. ERRINGTON. (a.)

Settlement—Trust for accumulation—Policies of assurance on the lives of the settlor and others—Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98), s. 1.

Where an indenture of settlement contains a direction for the accumulation of the moneys payable in respect of five policies of assurance, one on the life of the settlor and four on the respective lives of other persons, until the last of such four policies shall have fallen in, the first period for accumulation allowed by the Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98), s. 1—viz., the settlor's life—is the only period which, upon the proper construction of such a settlement, is applicable to the accumulation of the proceeds of the four policies.

By a marriage settlement dated the 13th of December, 1852, and made between George Henry Errington (the father) of the first part, the defendant George Henry Errington of the second part, Isabel Lannette Forbes of the third part, the plaintiff John Lancelot Errington-Turbutt (then John Lancelot Errington), Daniel Boys, and Alexander Forbes Tweedie of the fourth part, the Rev. John Richard Errington and the Rev. James Watham Hitch of the fifth part, and the Rev. George Wrenford Southouse and Frederick Lewis Austen of the sixth part, certain leasehold property, called "The Derbyshire Leaseholds" (which had been held for many years under renewable leases, and were then held under a lease from the Dean of Lincoln dated the 29th of April, 1843, for the lives and life of William Addesley Francis, Charles Bennet Calley, and the plaintiff J. L. Errington-Turbutt, and which lease had ceased to be renewable by reason of the reversion of the same lease having become vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners), and certain policies of assurance—namely: (1) Two policies in the University Life Assurance Society, one for £3,400 and the other for £1,600 on the life of the said W. A. Francis; (2) a policy for £5,000 in the same office on the life of the said C. B. Calley; (3) a policy for £5,000 in the same office on the life of the plaintiff J. L. Errington-Turbutt; and (4) a policy in the Equitable Assurance Society for £5,000 on the life of the said G. H. Errington, the father, were settled, to the use of the trustees for a term of 500 years and subject thereto to the use of the said G. H. Errington, the father, during his life with remainder to the use of the said J. R. Errington and J. W. Hitch during the life of the defendant G. H. Errington, upon trust to pay him the income during his life or until bankruptcy, and from and after his decease to the use that the said Isabel L. Forbes should receive a jointure of £600, and subject thereto to the use of the first and every other son of the defendant G. H. Errington successively in tail male with remainders over. And it was thereby declared that the trustees of the 500 years' term should (among other trusts) raise such annual or other sums of money as should be necessary for keeping on foot or reviving the said policy on the life of the said G. H. Errington (the father), and further to raise a certain annual sum therein referred to, and keep on foot thereout such of the remaining policies as should not have fallen in. And it was thereby further declared that the said J. L. Errington-Turbutt, Daniel Boys, and A. F. Tweedie should stand possessed of the said several policies of assurance upon trust to lay out and invest the moneys to be received therefrom respectively in manner therein declared, and to accumulate the annual income to arise from the investments of the said policy moneys, and all the resulting income thereof from time to time until all the said four policies in the said University Life Assurance Society should have fallen due by the deaths of the several persons on whose lives the same respectively had been effected, and thenceforth to stand possessed of the accumulated fund and the annual income thereof upon the trusts therein declared and contained concerning the moneys to arise from the sale or exchange of any freeholds thereby settled, provided always that if the said trust for accumulation as to any part of the said fund should exceed the period allowed by law for accumulation of income then the trust for accumulation should at the expiration of such period cease as to such part of the fund.

In the year 1873 C. B. Calley died, and the money received under the policy on his life were applied in paying off incumbrances on the settled lands.

G. H. Errington, the father, died on the 8th of March, 1883, and the sum of £10,100 was received under the policy on his life.

W. Addesley Francis died on the 14th of February, 1889, and the sum of £9,838 10s. was received under the policies on his life.

George Henry Forbes Errington, the eldest son of the defendant G. H. Errington, attained twenty-one on the 29th of September, 1874.

By a disentailing assurance dated the 18th of September, 1883, G. H. F. Errington barred his estate tail in the settled lands and in the policy moneys and accumulation fund, and resettled the said lands (subject to the uses and limitations thereof prior to his estate tail) to the use of himself for life with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail male, and under the same indenture the said moneys were to be held (subject as aforesaid) upon trusts similar to those declared of capital moneys arising from the sale of the settled lands.

The infant defendant G. H. Errington was the eldest son of G. H. F. Errington.

The defendant G. H. Errington now claimed to be entitled to all income and accumulations of income arising from the said sum of £10,100 received in respect of the policy on the life of G. H. Errington, the father, and from the sum of £9,838 10s. received in respect of the policies on the life of W. A. Francis, on the ground that the trust for accumulation of the policy moneys was valid only during the life of the settlor, G. H. Errington, the father.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiffs, who were the trustees of the said policy moneys and term of years and also of the said resettlement, took out the present summons for the determination of the following questions—namely (1) whether the trust for accumulation in the above-mentioned settlement of the 13th of December, 1852, contained, extended to the moneys received in respect of the policy on the life of G. H. Errington, deceased, and if it did so extend whether the same trust was or was not valid for any and what period? (2) the like as to the moneys received in respect of the two policies on the life of the said W. A. Francis, deceased.

A. W. Rowden, for the trustees.

Warrington, Q.C., and Dibdin, for the defendant, G. H. Errington.—The "Francis" policy moneys ought never to have been accumulated, for the only period during which they could lawfully have been accumulated was the life of the settlor, and he predeceased Francis. The period cannot be 21 years after the settlor's death, for then, if Francis had predeceased the settlor there would be a gap in the trusts for which no provision is made. We must admit that the moneys due under the policy on the settlor's life can be accumulated for 21 years after his death: Jagger v. Jagger, 32 W. R. 284, 25 Ch. D. 729; In re Lady Rosslyn's Trust, 16 Sim. 391.

J. G. Wood, for the infant defendant.—The trust for the accumulation of the proceeds of the "Francis" policy are still running and will run for 21 years from the death of the settlor; this is a reversionary interest, and the accumulation runs on for 21 years from the settlor's death (Webb v. Webb, 2 Beav. 493). At the date of the settlement the period for accumulation was uncertain, and so the longest period allowed by law can be taken.

KEKEWICH, J.—It is not contended on either side that these cases which have been cited—and there are very few of them—really decide the point before me in the sense of presenting a state of facts, I will not say on all fours with, but reasonably like that with which I have to deal. It is conceded that the point is new as regards facts, and the value of the cases, as often happens, is only to assist one in arriving at a principle of application of the provisions of the Legislature. I apprehend that the first thing one has to do is to construe the instrument which in this case is a deed. One must find out what was the intention of the testator or settlor and you must do that as if the Thellusson Act had never been passed. Having arrived at the intention as a question of construction, you must then bring in the paramount authority of the Legislature to see how far that intention can be supported, and how far it cannot be supported, and, as regards the latter, how it is to be controlled. There is no difficulty at all in ascertaining the construction of this instrument. It is perfectly clear. I am now dealing only, of course, with what has been called Francis' policy, because it is conceded on both sides that each policy must be treated as if it were a separate trust, and as if there were a separate witnessing part assigning that policy to trustees on separately declared trusts. This is what is to happen. The trustees are to receive the policy moneys, then they are to invest these moneys and to accumulate the annual income to arise from the investment until all the policies in the University Life Assurance Society have fallen due by the deaths of the several persons. This might have been the last of those policies, in which case there would have been no accumulation with regard to this policy at all; or it might have been the first, second, or third, but until the time arrives, which is a simple though contingent event, that is to say, when the last of the University policies fall in, until that time there was to be accumulation, and not until then was the corpus, with the accumulations, to be applicable according to the terms of the deed. So there is no difficulty in the construction.

Now let us consider the facts. We are dealing with the policy on the life of Francis, who was of course living at the date of the deed, and might or might not have survived the settlor; you must construe it with reference to that. The deed cannot possibly have meant, and the settlor cannot possibly have intended, that an accumulation was to take place from his death, because as Francis might have died in his lifetime you would have had a possible vacuum or interval between the death of Francis and the death of the settlor during which there would have been no destination of the income at all. It even does not stop there, for there would have been no direction for investment applicable to the case. The trustees would not have known what to do with the fund in hand; they could have invested it, but they would not have known what to do with the income. That confirms the construction which is otherwise clear that the intention was that the trustees should receive the policy-moneys when they fell in and invest and accumulate them until the last policy dropped. Having got the intention, I have to apply the Act of Parliament. Fortunately for the court, of the several contingencies or periods contemplated by the Act only two need be considered at all, and they are, the period during the life of the settlor, and the term of twenty-one years from the death of the settlor. It must be one or other of those two, because the other two are wholly inapplicable in language with reference to the particular deed. The Legislature has left one at large to apply one or other of those periods, whichever will fit the case. What it has said, according to the cases about which there is no doubt, is that you cannot apply more than one and you must choose that one which fits the case. You are not to choose the one which will give the longest period of accumulation, you are not to choose the one which you may suppose would best effectuate the intention, but you are to take the one which actually fits the intention as declared. It seems to me you cannot make to fit this direction a limitation of the accumulation for twenty-one years from the death of the settlor, because that, as I have already pointed out and as was forcibly urged in argument, leaves a gap for which no provision is made at all. You have to fit it as well as you can. The only thing you can do is to say that as the accumulation is to commence from the death of the assured it is to be limited to one of the periods commencing from that time, it cannot commence from the death of the settlor, who might not be dead, and therefore you must take it during his life.

The result is that it is really limited to so much of the period of his life as continued after the receipt of the policy-money; as a matter of fact there was none at all. The result is that, upon the proper construction of the instrument and upon the proper application of the Act of Parliament there was no accumulation of this particular fund. Of course that defeats the intention of the testator and defeats it grossly—that is to say, it is a destruction altogether of the intention. The Thellusson Act was, however, passed to destroy intention, the object of the Legislature was to prevent settlors and testators from giving effect to their full intention, and therefore that argument, though an extremely powerful one when applied to the construction of a will or deed, has no force whatever when you remember that you are considering the paramount authority of the Legislature superimposed on the otherwise free power of a settlor or testator. It seems to me, therefore, that I am bound to say that in the events which have happened the proceeds of this policy ought never to have been accumulated. The result must be that as the other can be accumulated, for Mr. Warrington felt himself incapable of arguing against that, that must be accumulated for twenty-one years from the death of the settlor.

Solicitors, A. F. & R. W. Tweedie.

Q. B. Div.
(Hawkins and Wright, JJ.) May 11.

FIRTH v. STAINES. (a.)

Metropolis—Management—Vestry—Committee—Approval of acts of committee—Ratification—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 58.

A committee appointed by a vestry under section 58 of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, resolved that a notice be served under section 85 of the Act upon the owner of premises requiring him to abate a nuisance thereon arising from defective drainage. The notice not having been complied with, the committee resolved that proceedings should be taken for the recovery of penalties, and a summons was issued against the owner. Section 58 provides that the acts of the committee shall be submitted to the vestry for their approval.

Held, that the fact that the vestry had not approved of the service of the notice until after the issue of the summons did not render the service of the notice invalid.

Case stated by a metropolitan magistrate.

The appellant was a sanitary inspector in the employment of the vestry of the parish of St. Leonard, Shoreditch. The vestry was the sanitary authority for the parish, which was a parish included in Schedule A of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855.

The vestry had, under the powers conferred by section 58 of that Act, appointed a committee, known as the Public Health Committee, for the purposes specified in the following bye-law: "The committee now known as the General Purposes and Sanitary Committee shall be called the Public Health Committee, and shall be empowered and authorized: (1) To execute and carry out the powers and duties of the vestry under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, the Margarine Act, 1887, the Sale of Horseflesh Act, the Metropolis Management Acts, and other Acts amending the same from time to time, so far as they relate to the public health of the parish."

On the 19th of September, 1896, the appellant served upon the respondent a written intimation as provided for by section 3 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, of the existence of a nuisance from a defective drain upon premises of which the respondent was the owner.

On the 15th of October the appellant attended before the committee and made a report upon the condition of the premises, and the committee passed a resolution that notice be served upon the respondent to abate the nuisance, failing compliance with which the appellant was to take proceedings.

On the 19th of October the appellant served the notice on the respondent, and on the 3rd of November, the notice not having been complied with, the appellant laid an information against the respondent for penalties, and a summons was issued. On the same day after the issue of the summons the proceedings and the resolution of the committee were reported to the vestry and were approved by resolution entered in the minutes of the vestry.

On the hearing of the summons it was submitted on behalf of the respondent that under section 58 of Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, the resolution of the committee authorizing the service of the notice ought to have been approved of by the vestry before the notice could properly be served.

The magistrate was of opinion that as the resolution of the committee had not been submitted to the vestry for their approval before the service of the notice the notice was invalid, and he therefore dismissed the summons.

The question for the consideration of the court was whether on the facts this decision was right in point of law.

The Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, s. 58: "It shall be lawful for the Metropolitan Board of Works, and the board of works for any district, and any such vestry respectively, to appoint a committee or committees for any purposes which, in the discretion of the board or vestry, would be better regulated and managed by means of such committee, and at any meeting to continue, alter, or discontinue such committee. Provided always that the acts of every such committee shall be submitted to the general body of the board or vestry appointing such committee for their approval."

Cripps, Q.C., and R. C. Glen, for the appellant.—The decision of the magistrate was wrong. The contention put forward by the respondent amounts to this, that each step in proceedings by the committee under sections 82 to 85 of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, for the abatement of a nuisance caused by defective drainage must be separately and formally approved of by the vestry before the committee can take the step in question. There is nothing in the language of section 58 to warrant such a construction, which would, moreover, have the effect of rendering the appointment of a committee absolutely nugatory.

R. D. Muir, for the respondent.—The approval required by section 58 must be something more than a mere formal subsequent approval. If the vestry are not bound to approve the acts of the committee until all the important steps in the proceedings have been taken, the provision as to approval in section 58 is practically useless. No vestry would ever withhold its approval if the consequences of so doing were to render the acts of the committee unlawful.

He referred to Barnsley Local Board v. Sedgwick, 15 W. R. 514, L. R. 2 Q. B. 185; St. Leonard's Vestry v. Holmes, 50 J. P. 132.

Cripps, Q.C., replied.

HAWKINS, J.—In this case I think that the decision of the magistrate was wrong, and that the appeal ought to be allowed. The case turns on several sections of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, and the question is whether the committee had power to do the acts complained of under the powers conferred by section 58 of that Act. That section gives to the vestry a statutory authority to appoint a committee for any purposes which, in the opinion of the vestry, would be better regulated and managed by means of such committee. Therefore, in order to make the appointment of the committee complete, it is necessary that there should be a formal document pointing out for what purposes the committee is appointed. [His lordship read the terms of the appointment of the committee.] There is no question that the matters which are the subject of the order which is sought to be obtained in this case are matters relating to the public health of the parish. By section 82 power is given to the vestry or their surveyor to inspect drains and to enter premises and to cause the ground to be opened. I hardly think that it could be contended that the committee would have no power to enter premises for the purpose of inspection, but if the contention of the respondent is valid, I do not see how we could avoid saying that the committee would have no power to enter without the previous approval of the vestry. However, that point has not been taken in this case, and I cannot doubt that the committee have power to enter premises.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In this case complaint was made of a nuisance followed by a written intimation of the nuisance served upon the respondent by the appellant. Turning now to section 85 we find that that section provides that if upon inspection, as aforesaid, any drain appears to be in bad condition the vestry shall cause notice in writing to be given to the owner or occupier of the premises requiring him to do the necessary work, and if the notice be not complied with the vestry may either do the work and receive the expenses, or proceed for penalties under section 64 of the Act of 1862. It is quite clear when one looks at sections 58 and 82, that when it is said that the vestry may take the steps mentioned, it means either the vestry or those lawfully deputed by the vestry under section 58 to act for the vestry. The committee have the same power as the vestry subject to the approval of their acts by the vestry. Here there was a nuisance of the character contemplated by section 85, and a notice was served on the owner requiring him to execute certain works, and on non-compliance with the notice a summons was issued against him. It is said that all the proceedings of the committee are absolutely null and void because, although the vestry subsequently gave their sanction to the order of the committee on which the summons was issued, the notice was served upon the respondent before the approval of the vestry was obtained, and it is further said that the vestry must judicially consider the matter before the notice is served. I cannot help thinking that if a committee is appointed to do acts which, in the judgment of the vestry, can be better done by a committee than by the vestry, the word "approval" in section 58 is used advisedly as meaning that, although the committee can do the acts in question they cannot justify themselves, unless at some time or other the approval of the vestry is obtained. If the notice referred to in section 85 to do the necessary works cannot be given without the approval of the vestry being previously given, I do not see why the twenty-four hours' notice of inspection under section 82 should not also require the previous sanction of the vestry; and if that is requisite there might just as well be no committee at all. I cannot see of what use the committee would be. A further point is that if the committee can do no act without first obtaining the approval of the vestry, then there can be no act done by the committee which, in the words of section 58, "shall be submitted to the . . . vestry appointing such committee for their approval." I have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the magistrate was wrong in holding that the approval of the vestry ought to have been given before the notice was served on the respondent. The committee, in my opinion, have power under the statute to first serve the notice and then afterwards to obtain the approval of the vestry.

WRIGHT, J.—This question is one of great and general importance, for it affects not only the metropolitan vestries but also all municipal corporations, and I apprehend that it may affect county councils and district councils. It is also a question of undoubted difficulty, as is shown by the fact that Blackburn, J., refrained from giving an opinion on the point in Barnsley Local Board v. Sedgwick.

The principle applicable both to the service of the notice and to the issue of the summons is, I think, the ordinary principle on which ratification obtains. Ratification requires, first, that the agent should purport to act on behalf of a principal; secondly, that at the time of the act the agent must have had a competent principal; and thirdly, the principal must be legally capable of ratifying the act. It seems to me that all these requisites of ratification were present in this case. I think that is sufficient to decide the case, and I prefer to go no further. On the approval of the vestry being given, the acts of the committee become valid from the time when they were first done. In this case the ratification was expressed on the day of the issue of the summons, but I think it would have been equally good if it had been given on the day the summons was served.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, H. M. Robinson.

Solicitor for the respondent, Jutsum.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams and Wright, JJ.) — May 24, 27.

In re BROSTER.
Ex parte PRUDDAH. (a.)

County court—Execution—Distress for rent—Poundage of high bailiff—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 154, 160—County Court Rules, 1889, Schedule A.

Where a high bailiff seizes goods on any premises under a warrant of execution, and then seizes further goods on the same premises under a claim made by the landlord for rent, he is entitled to a separate set of fees in respect of each seizure.

Appeal from a judgment of his Honour Judge Foulkes in the county court at Birkenhead.

Upon the 22nd of December, 1896, the high bailiff of the Birkenhead County Court entered upon the premises of one Broster and seized goods thereon sufficient to satisfy a warrant of execution for £20 11s. 3d., and proceeded to hold them for five days, as required by section 154 of the County Courts Act, 1888. While the high bailiff was thus on Broster's premises—namely, upon the 23rd of December, the landlord, acting as directed by section 160 of the same Act, delivered to the bailiff or his officer a notice in writing stating that the rent was in arrear to the extent of £55, and the high bailiff thereupon seized and held possession of further goods on Broster's premises to satisfy the claim for rent in addition to the amount claimed under the execution. The high bailiff claimed to be entitled to poundage at rate of sixpence in the pound on the value of the goods seized under the execution up to the value of £20, and to poundage to a similar amount on the value of the goods seized to satisfy the landlord's claim.

The county court judge treated the seizure under the execution, and the seizure under the landlord's claim as one proceeding, and allowed poundage upon £20 only.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The high bailiff appealed.

Buckmaster and L. Sanderson, for the appellant.—The county court judge was wrong here because he based his judgment on the case of In re Wells, Ex parte The Sheriff of Kent, 68 L. T. 231, 41 W. R. Dig. 221, which is not applicable to this case.

Muir Mackenzie, for the respondent.—The statute puts distress on a par with execution, and the high bailiff is only entitled to fees for one execution.

Buckmaster replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 27.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—This case raises a question as to the meaning of section 160 of the County Courts Act, 1888. The material facts seem to be that there was an execution and a subsequent claim by the landlord and the raising under section 160 of a sufficient sum, in addition to the execution, to satisfy the claim for rent. The high bailiff carried in a bill claiming to treat these two transactions as separate and entitling him to a double set of fees. The court below refused to allow two sets of fees, and taxed on the basis of there having been one execution.

The question for us is, What is the proper mode of taxation in circumstances of the kind I have described? To judge of this we must look at section 160 and section 154. It is best just to look at section 160: "Section one of the Act of the eighth year of the reign of Queen Anne, chapter fourteen, shall not apply to goods taken in execution under the warrant of the court, but the landlord of any tenement in which any such goods shall be so taken may claim the rent thereof at any time within five clear days from the date of such taking, or before the removal of the goods, by delivering to the bailiff or officer making the levy any writing signed by himself or his agent, which shall state the amount of rent claimed to be in arrear, and the time for and in respect of which such rent is due; and if such claim be made, the bailiff or officer making the levy shall, in addition thereto, distrain for the rent so claimed and the costs of such distress, and shall not within five days next after such distress sell any part of the goods taken unless they be of a perishable nature, or upon the request in writing of the party whose goods shall have been taken; and the bailiff shall afterwards sell such of the goods under the execution and distress as shall satisfy—first, the costs of and incident to the sale; next, the claim of such landlord, not exceeding the rent of four weeks where the tenement is let by the week, the rent of two terms of payment where the tenement is let for any other term less than a year, and the rent of one year in any other case; and lastly, the amount for which the warrant was issued; and if any replevin be made of the goods so taken, the bailiff shall, notwithstanding, sell such portion thereof as will satisfy the costs of and incidental to the sale under the execution, and the amount for which the warrant issued; and in either event the overplus of the sale, if any, and the residue of the goods shall be returned to the defendant, and the poundage of the high bailiff and broker for keeping possession, appraisement, and sale under such distress shall be the same as would have been payable if the distress had been an execution of the court, and no other fees shall be demanded or taken in respect thereof."

Then one has to turn to section 154 to see what the poundage is. Section 154, after providing for methods of execution and for the employment of persons to keep possession and of sworn brokers and appraisers, says: "And no goods taken in execution under this Act shall be sold for the purpose of satisfying the warrant of execution except by one of the brokers or appraisers so appointed, and the brokers or appraisers so appointed shall be entitled to have, out of the produce of the goods so distrained or sold, sixpence in the pound on the value of the goods for the appraisement thereof, whether by one broker or more, over and above the stamp duty, and for advertisements, catalogues, sale and commission, and delivery of goods, one shilling in the pound on the net produce of the sale."

It will be observed that in section 154 the words are "out of the produce of the goods so distrained or sold." "Distrained" does not seem to me strictly applicable to an execution but only to a distress.

The question for us to answer is this: Is the high bailiff entitled to a double set of fees, to treat the proceedings as separate, and have one set of fees for the execution, and one set for the distress? I do think that he is so entitled, and I think so because section 154 seems by its plain words to treat execution and distress as different, and to give fees by way of remuneration to the bailiff in respect of each transaction. I should point out that if this were not so the effect of the rule in Schedule A as to fees would be to deprive the high bailiff in many cases of any remuneration for distress at all, for it is provided in that rule: "All poundage, except where otherwise herein specified, shall be estimated upon the amount of the value of the subject-matter of the proceeding upon which it is payable, except where the said amount or value exceeds twenty pounds, where the poundage shall be estimated upon twenty pounds only." The result of that would be that if there were an execution for £20 and a distress, and the proceedings were not treated as separate, there would be no remuneration for the distress. I think that the words of the section and the provision with regard to the fees lead one to the conclusion that the transactions were intended to be dealt with as separate for the purpose of poundage.

WRIGHT, J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, E. H. Scott.

Solicitor for the respondent, Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Chitty, L.JJ.) — May 13

NEW'S TRUSTEE v. HUNTING. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Voluntary conveyance — Making good breaches of trust—Revocable deed—Fraudulent preference—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 48.

A bankrupt, a few days before his bankruptcy, executed a deed conveying certain real estate to a trustee upon trust to raise thereout a certain sum and to apply the same in making good divers breaches of trust which he had committed as trustee of certain specified estates. The deed, which contained recitals that the bankrupt was desirous of executing the deed to rectify the breaches of trust and thereby to shield and exonerate himself from liability to proceedings to which he might be exposed, charged the real estate with the payment of the said sum, and conferred upon the trustee, his executors and administrators, power to appoint new trustees for the purpose of carrying into effect the trusts of the deed. The deed was not communicated to any of the beneficiaries or creditors.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, first, that the intention of the bankrupt was to execute a deed, which should be binding upon him, in favour of his cestuis que trustent, and that therefore the deed was irrevocable; and, secondly, that the deed was not a fraudulent preference within section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

The bankrupt, before his bankruptcy, deposited certain share certificates in the boxes in his office in which the documents relating to the trust estates were usually kept, along with a memorandum that the certificates were deposited as security for the moneys owing to the trust estates. The trustee in bankruptcy claimed the certificates.

Held, that there was a valid appropriation of the certificates to the particular trusts, and that the trustee was not entitled to them.

Middleton v. Pollock, 2 Ch. D. 104, 24 W. R. Dig. 88, approved.

Appeal from the judgment of Vaughan Williams, J., reported [1897] 1 Q. B. 607.

The action was brought by the trustee in bankruptcy of New, Prance, & Garrard, against the defendant Hunting and others, claiming a declaration that a deed executed by the bankrupt Prance, two days before the bankruptcy, was void against the plaintiff either as a fraudulent preference within section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, or as a voluntary conveyance for the benefit of certain creditors which was revocable by Prance, and was, in fact, revoked by the bankruptcy.

There was also a claim to recover certain share certificates.

Messrs. New, Prance, & Garrard had for many years practised in co-partnership as solicitors at Evesham, in the county of Worcester.

In 1893 New died insolvent, and the business was carried on by the two surviving partners.

On the 31st of March, 1894, a receiving order was made against them on their own petition, and they were adjudicated bankrupt.

Their trustee in bankruptcy became trustee under an administration order made in bankruptcy of the estate of New.

On the 29th of March, 1894, Prance executed a conveyance of certain real estate, of which he was sole owner in fee, to the defendant Hunting (since dead) upon trust to raise thereout £4,200, and to apply the same in making good divers breaches of trust which he, Prance, had committed either as sole trustee or as joint trustee of certain trust estates specified in the schedule to the deed.

By the same deed Prance charged the estate with the payment of the said sum of £4,200, and gave Hunting, his executors and administrators, power to appoint new trustees for the purpose of carrying into effect the trusts of the deed.

The deed contained recitals in general terms of the breaches of trust that had been committed, and also a recital that Prance was desirous of executing the deed to rectify such breaches of trust as far as might be, and thereby to shield and exonerate himself as far as possible from liability to the proceedings he was then, or might at any time hereafter, be exposed to by reason of such breaches.

The deed was executed without any pressure being put upon Prance, nor was it communicated to any of the beneficiaries or creditors.

As regards the claim for the share certificates, it appeared that these had been deposited by Prance in the several boxes in his office in which the documents relating to the above trust estates were usually kept, along with a memorandum in each case that the certificates were deposited as security for the moneys owing to the trust estates.

These certificates were subsequently collected and placed in one box with the above memoranda.

Vaughan Williams, J., gave judgment for the defendants.

The plaintiff appealed.

Muir Mackenzie and R. Harington, for the plaintiff.—This deed was revocable, and was revoked by the bankruptcy. The principle is stated in Synnot v. Simpson, 5 H. L. Cas. 121, following the decisions in Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, 3 Sim. 1; Walwyn v. Coutts, 3 Sim. 14; Gibbs v. Glamis, 11 Sim. 584; and Acton v. Woodgate, 2 My. & K. 492, to be that where a person who is indebted makes provision for payment of debts by vesting property in trustees for the purpose of discharging them, but does so behind the backs of the creditors, and without communicating with them, the trustees do not become trustees for the creditors. The arrangement is for the debtor's convenience only, and is the same as if he had put money into the hands of an agent with directions to apply it in paying certain specified debts. The debtor may at any time revoke the authority given to his agent. That principle was followed in Johns v. James, 26 W. R. 821, 8 Ch. D. 744; In re Ashby, Ex parte Wreford, 40 W. R. 430, [1892] 1 Q. B. 872. Simmonds v. Palles, 2 Jo. & Lat. 489; and Smith v. Hurst, 10 Hare 30, were also referred to. Secondly, this deed constituted a fraudulent preference within section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The relation between a trustee who has misappropriated trust funds and his cestui que trust is that of debtor and creditor: In re Smith, Fleming, & Co., Ex parte Kelly & Co., 27 W. R. 830, 11 Ch. D. 306; In re Paine, Ex parte Read, ante, p. 190, [1897] 1 Q. B. 122. If a person executes a deed when his bankruptcy is imminent, which he knows must have the effect of preferring a creditor, it is a fraudulent preference. The dominant motive of the bankrupt was to benefit his cestuis que trustent at the expense of his other creditors. They referred upon this point to Ex parte Stubbins, 29 W. R. 653, 17 Ch. D. 58; Ex parte Taylor, 35 W. R. 148, 18 Q. B. D. 295; Ex parte Ball, 35 W. R. 264. Thirdly, the deposit of the share certificates was not a sufficient appropriation of the shares to the cestuis que trustent, and Prance could at any time have disposed of the shares as he pleased. It is admitted that the facts of this case cannot be distinguished from those in Middleton v. Pollock, 2 Ch. D. 104, 24 W. R. Dig. 88, but it is submitted that the decision in that case is inconsistent with Wilson v. Balfour, 2 Camp. 579, and is wrong.

Upjohn, Clayton, and Van Neck, for the various defendants, were not called upon.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—The first question we have to decide is whether this is a revocable deed. To enable us to come to a decision upon that point we have the great assistance of a most careful and most able judge—Lord Justice (then Vice-Chancellor) Turner, and his guidance enables me to come to a conclusion upon the question. In Smith v. Hurst, 10 Hare 30, at p. 47, he said: "Many of the cases upon voluntary deeds were cited and commented upon in the argument of this case, and I have thought it right, therefore, to examine the authorities upon the subject.

They appear to me to result in this, that in cases of deeds vesting property in trustees upon trust for the benefit of particular persons, the deed cannot be revoked, altered, or modified by the party who has created the trust; but that in cases of deeds purporting to be executed for the benefit of creditors, the question whether the trusts can be revoked, altered, or modified depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. It is difficult, at first sight, to see the distinction between the two classes of cases; for in each of the classes a trust is purported to be created, and the property is vested in trustees; but I think the distinction lies in this: In cases of trust for the benefit of particular persons, the party creating the trust can have no other object than to benefit the persons in whose favour the trust is created, and, the trust being well created, the property in equity belongs to the cestuis que trust but as much as it would belong to them at law, if the legal interest had been transferred to them; but in cases of deeds purporting to be executed for the benefit of creditors, and to which no creditor is a party, the motive of the party executing the deed may have been either to benefit his creditors or to promote his own convenience; and the court there has to examine into the circumstances for the purpose of ascertaining what was the true purpose of the deed." We must therefore look at all the circumstances of this case. Prance had committed a fraud upon his cestuis que trustent in reference to the trust estates. He had also various creditors. He accordingly executed this deed in favour of certain persons only. The persons intended to be benefited by it are, in my opinion, sufficiently identified. They were the persons with regard to whom he had committed breaches of trust. That brings the deed within the description above given of irrevocable deeds, as the trustee of the deed became, not his trustee, but trustee for the particular persons in whose favour he executed the deed. There is, however, another reason why this deed is irrevocable. Prance had committed frauds against his cestuis que trustent for which he would have been liable to various penalties. He might have been struck off the rolls, and, as far as I can see, might have been indicted. Now, what was in his mind when he executed this deed? What he was proposing to do would have, or he thought it would have, a material effect upon the punishment he would receive. He thought that he would mitigate, at all events, his punishment, if he put the persons whom he had wronged into the same position as if he had acted rightly. Now, they could not be in the same position as if he had done right, unless he meant by what he did to give them the absolute right to the property he was conveying, and unless he made the trustee under the deed their trustee and not his trustee. Therefore his intention, when all the circumstances of the case are looked at, was—first, to do something for certain persons, who could be easily identified; and, secondly, not to reserve to himself any right of undoing what he had done. The deed is therefore an irrevocable deed.

It was next said that the deed amounted to a fraudulent preference. The doctrine of fraudulent preference is a well-known doctrine. The question to be determined is one of fact in each case, and depends upon the state of mind of the person who brings about that preference. There must not only be a creditor preferred, but the preference must be with the fraudulent intention of preferring the creditor. It is said that a man must be taken to intend the necessary consequences of his acts. To my mind that is entirely fallacious. It may, in many cases, be wholly untrue. One must find out whether he did or did not intend that his act should have that necessary consequence. What did Prance intend here? Did he intend to give these persons a preference? We have the recitals in the deed which shew what his intention was. Having considered the deed and all the circumstances of the case, can it be said that he intended to make these persons the object of his bounty? In my opinion he had no care for anybody except to benefit himself. He thought to benefit himself by taking from these persons the inclination to press him to the extreme end. He thought that, by putting these particular persons in the same position as if no fraud had been committed, it would greatly mitigate the consequences to himself. What he had done would, he knew, come out in a few days, and he did this to protect himself. That is not a fraudulent preference within section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

The last point has reference to the deposit of the share certificates. When the case was before Vaughan Williams, J., it was admitted that the case was governed by the decision of Sir George Jessel in Middleton v. Pollock, as the facts were not distinguishable, but it is now contended that that decision is wrong. That is the sole point taken. It is not sought to distinguish that case from the present. It is said that it is in conflict with a decision of Lord Ellenborough in Wilson v. Balfour. In my opinion, however, the cases are totally different. I cannot see that the decision in Middleton v. Pollock is wrong. I am not in the least prepared to overrule it. That point therefore fails, and the appeal must be dismissed.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The first question is, Was this deed irrevocable? It seems that Prance was a solicitor who had misappropriated certain trust funds, and he executed this deed. Whether or not the deed was revocable depends upon whether it was, as has been said, an agency deed—that is to say, whether the property was conveyed to Hunting as the agent of Prance, or whether the deed was executed so as to create a trust between Hunting and the persons who were described in the schedule to the deed. I have no doubt that there was a valid trust created for the benefit of those persons as cestuis que trustent. The recitals in the deed show that Prance executed the deed for the purpose of shielding and exonerating himself as far as he could from proceedings to which he might be exposed by conveying the property to a trustee, not for himself, but for his cestuis que trustent. Further, the clause giving Hunting, his executors and administrators, power to appoint new trustees to carry out the trusts of the deed goes to show that it was not a deed merely for the convenience of Prance, but a binding deed entered into for the benefit of his cestuis que trustent.

The next question is whether this amounted to a fraudulent preference. The tribunal which has to determine whether a transaction is or is not a fraudulent preference must ascertain what was the dominant motive in the mind of the bankrupt. Was his dominant motive to prefer some of his creditors? It seems to me clear that his dominant motive was to avert the punishment to which he had exposed himself. His motive was to save himself. The case of Ex parte Taylor seems to me to be absolutely conclusive that this cannot be a fraudulent preference. There was, therefore, no fraudulent preference.

As regards the third point I entirely agree with what has been said by the Master of the Rolls.

CHITTY, J.—I concur. As regards the first question, primâ facie every deed of conveyance made upon trusts declared is binding upon him who created the trusts, unless he has reserved to himself an express power of revocation. But there is a class of cases, of which Garrard v.

Lord Lauderdale is one, where the deed is for the benefit of creditors, in which the courts of equity have held that the deed is a mere agency deed, and that the trustee under the deed is a mere agent for the grantor and is not a trustee for the creditors. Turner, L.J., has shown in Smith v. Hurst why such a distinction has been allowed, and in Johns v. James James, L.J., stated what seemed to him to be the reasons for the decision in Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale —namely, that the intention of the grantor in such a case would necessarily be defeated if the deed were held to be irrevocable, for if it were he would have no opportunity of paying a creditor who was pressing, or of settling an action, or of getting any food for himself or his family. In the present case it seems to me to have been the clear intention of Prance that the deed should be irrevocable. It would have defeated the very object he had in view if he had power to revoke it. The recitals, which are admittedly true, show that that must have been his intention. It would be a strange thing indeed were we to hold that he could revoke the deed which he intended to be a shield to protect himself from the consequences of his fraudulent acts. It seems to me that the charge upon the estate and the power conferred upon the trustee, his executors and administrators, to appoint new trustees are circumstances which support the view that this deed is irrevocable.

As regards the question of fraudulent preference, I agree with what has been already said. As regards the last question, in my opinion Middleton v. Pollock was rightly decided. There was in that case a valid appropriation of the securities to the particular trust. I agree that that case was well decided.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Burton, Yeates, & Hart, for Johnson, Barclay, & Rogers, Birmingham.

Solicitors for the defendants, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co.; M. H. Prance; R. White.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) May 7.

REMMINGTON v. SCOLES. (a.)

Practice—Pleadings—Striking out pleading—Frivolous and vexatious—Abuse of process of court—Affidavit evidence.

Though the court will not in general, on an application to strike out a pleading, inquire into the truth or falsehood of the allegations pleaded, yet an affidavit will be admitted to show that the allegations which a party denies by his pleading have previously been so admitted by him as to make his pleading a mere abuse of the process of the court; and in that case the pleading may be struck out.

Hildige v. O'Farrell, 8 L. R. Ir. 158, 30 W. R. Dig. 169, distinguished.

Appeal from Romer, J.

The defendant had by his defence in general terms denied or refused to admit all the material allegations of the statement of claim, but had given no explanation or other version of the transactions alleged by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then applied to strike out the defence as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the court, and as having been put in solely for the purpose of delaying the plaintiffs. In support of this application one of the plaintiffs made an affidavit (which was not contradicted by the defendant), showing that in previous interlocutory proceedings in the same action the principal allegations in the statement of claim (now denied or not admitted by the defendant) had, with the exception of certain specific allegations that the defendant had acted fraudulently, been sworn to on behalf of the plaintiff, and that none of them had been denied, while several of them had been distinctly admitted, by the defendant.

Romer, J., held that the affidavit evidence was admissible, and after considering the evidence made an order striking out the defence, and allowing the defendant within a fortnight to put in a fresh defence.

The defendant appealed.

Frank Russell, for the appeal.—The question is not res judicata, and the court will not strike out a pleading because its statements are shown by affidavit to be untrue. Boswell v. Coaks, 31 W. R. 540, 23 Ch. D. 302, which Romer, J., relied upon, was as to striking out a statement of claim; it is a stronger thing to strike out a defence, and make the defendant liable to judgment in default. Hildige v. O'Farrell, 8 L. R. Ir. 158, 30 W. R. Dig. 169, is a very strong case in favour of the defendant here.

He also cited O'Donnell v. Reilly, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 329; and Marquis of Drogheda v. Hanlon, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 319. [RIGBY, L.J., referred to Lawrance v. Lord Norreys, 38 W. R. 753, 15 App. Cas. 210.]

G. P. C. Lawrence, for the plaintiffs, was not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J.—Now that we understand the case, there is no doubt that what Romer, J., has done is a very unusual thing to do. It is a very strong thing to say, and it cannot be said as a general proposition, that the defendant is not at liberty to put in a defence merely denying the statements in the statement of claim. Of course he is entitled to do so, as a general rule; that is obvious enough. The learned judge is quite right; he recognises the rule which is referred to and illustrated by the case of Hildige v. O'Farrell. In a case of that kind the court will not try whether the statement of defence states what is true or false. But the ground on which the learned judge has proceeded is that this defence is a mere sham. The character of the defence can be seen through, and is stamped by, the first three paragraphs, which are mere shams. That gives a character to the whole thing, and, bearing in mind what has occurred in this very case, I think the learned judge has not gone wrong when he says, as he does, that it is a defence which never ought to have been put in, and that the whole proceeding is with a view to gain time. It is a mere sham defence, and not an honest defence at all. If the defendant has an honest defence, which probably he has not, he is at liberty to put it in. The learned judge has guarded himself. He says it will not do, after what has passed, simply to deny everything. The defendant may deny the plaintiff's allegations if he chooses, but if he does he must give some explanation to show that he is acting honestly. This defence is a mere trick to gain time. I think the learned judge is right, and that the appeal must be dismissed, and dismissed with costs.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The learned judge observes that this is an exceptional case, and I think it is an exceptional case. Such a case can only be dealt with in the way in which he has dealt with it, and in which we propose to deal with it, where the circumstances are exceptional.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

We are entitled to deal with it, and to strike out the defence on account of the inherent jurisdiction in every court of justice to prevent an abuse of its procedure. I think that this defence, if it was permitted to remain on the file, would be an abuse of the procedure. But I desire to say this, that it is not enough to invoke this kind of jurisdiction of the court if the court thinks the facts alleged in the statement of defence, or the statement of claim, as the case may be, improbable or false. But what the learned judge thought here, and I think he was right in so thinking, was that—having regard to the character of this defence, bearing in mind what is known about the case beforehand, what is known about the previous proceedings in the case—this is a sham defence, and that it has been set up, not honestly and bonâ fide as a substantial defence, but for the purpose of delay. I think, therefore, we ought to support his decision.

RIGBY, L.J.—I do not wish in any way to infringe upon the salutary rule that a defendant has a right to put in issue any fact that he pleases, and to have that tried in the regular manner. Therefore the court will not, as O'Donnell v. Reilly and the other cases cited show, although it may be reasonably satisfied, or quite satisfied, as far as the affidavit goes, that the defence is untrue, strike it out for that reason. But if the court can, on the facts that are not in dispute, ascertain that the actual defence put in is really a defence which has no relation to the merits of the case at all, in other words that it is a sham defence, why then, of course, the court has jurisdiction, and in this very exceptional case ought to act upon the jurisdiction, and to have that sham defence taken off the file. I think this is a case clearly of that kind, and on that ground the decision of Romer, J., ought to be upheld.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, George F. Clark; Darley & Cumberland.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, A. L. Smith, and Rigby, L.JJ.) March 17, 18; April 2.

HORNSEY DISTRICT COUNCIL v. SMITH. (a.)

Local government—Street—Paving expenses—National school—Charge upon the premises—Enforcement of charge by sale or mortgage—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 150, 257.

The trustees of a National school, the site of which had been conveyed to them under section 6 of the School Sites Act, 1841, are liable as "owners" under section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to be charged with the expenses of making up roads adjoining their land; and until payment such expenses are a charge upon the premises under section 257 of the same Act.

So held, affirming the decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 231.

But such charge cannot be enforced by sale or mortgage of the premises.

So held, reversing the decision of Kekewich, J.

Appeal of the defendants from Kekewich, J., reported ante, p. 231.

The plaintiffs had a charge upon some school premises in their district in respect of paving and other expenses which had been incurred and apportioned against the trustees of the school under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The plaintiffs asked for the enforcement of the charge by sale or mortgage of the premises.

Kekewich, J., made an order for sale or mortgage. The trustees of the school appealed.

Dibdin, for the appellants.—The first question here is, Is there an owner? The trustees are not the owners of premises which can be let at a rack-rent, and do not come within the definition of section 4.

He referred to In re Randell, Randell v. Dixon, 36 W. R. 543, 38 Ch. D. 213; Walsh v. Secretary of State for India, 11 W. R. 823, 10 H. L. Cas. 367; Christ's Hospital v. Grainger, 1 Mac. & G. 460; Corporation of Birmingham v. Baker, 17 Ch. D. 782, 30 W. R. Dig. 121; Guardians of Tendring Union v. Dowton, 40 W. R. 145, [1891] 3 Ch. 265; Wright v. Ingle, 34 W. R. 220, 16 Q. B. D. 379.

My second point is that the order for sale must be wrong because there is a statutory fetter, and the court will not make an idle order. A purchaser could make nothing out of these schools, because they must be carried on in a particular way without profit under section 14 of the School Sites Act, 1841. [LINDLEY, L.J.—If the charge is valid, and there is no sale, what is the remedy?] There is none. If I am wrong on the first point, the charge is a barren charge, and cannot be enforced by sale.

Macmorran, Q.C., and E. Beaumont, for the respondents.—The trustees must hold for school purposes only. They could sell under the Elementary Education Act, 1870, by transferring the premises to the School Board, and they could actually let the school at a rent: In re Burnham National Schools, 22 W. R. 198, L. R. 17 Eq. 241. The principle of Bowditch v. Wakefield Local Board of Health, L. R. 6 Q. B. 567, 19 W. R. C. L. Dig. 66, has never been overruled. The contention on the other side is that where land is by the common law or by statute incapable of being let at a rack-rent there cannot be an owner. The answer is that the incapacity must be stamped upon the property itself, and must not be merely on a casual owner. The charge given by the statute is a charge on the premises, and not on any particular person. The trust deed only affects the use in the hands of the trustees. So long as they hold it under the School Sites Act the use is limited, but if they part with it the use is gone. If the property were subject to a private trust it could be sold under a charge freed from that trust, and the case is precisely the same if the trust is statutory. The incapacity does not affect the land, it only affects the trustees dealing with the land.

Dibdin replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 2.—The judgment of the court was delivered by

A. L. SMITH, L.J., as follows: By an indenture dated the 29th of April, 1847, the rector of Hornsey, pursuant to the provisions contained in section 6 of the School Sites Act of 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 38), conveyed to the Archdeacon of Middlesex a piece of the glebe land belonging to the rectory to hold unto the use of the archdeacon and his successors for ever, to be applied as a site for a school for poor persons of the parish and for no other purpose whatever, such school to be always in union with the Incorporated National Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor; and it was provided that the management, direction, control, and government of the school and premises should be vested in and exercised by a committee consisting of the rector for the time being and of five other persons. The piece of land so conveyed was bounded by and abutted upon a high road upon its eastern side, which road of late having become a new street, the urban district council of Hornsey, under the powers conferred upon them by section 150 of the Public Health Act of 1875, have executed paving and other works thereon; and the district council now seek under section 257 of the Act to recover the expenses they have so incurred by means of a charge upon the school premises, and an order for sale of these premises to satisfy such charge. There is in this case no question as to the school premises not being bounded by and abutting upon the new street, nor whether the appellants were trustees of the school when the works were executed.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The first question is whether the appellants are "owners" of the land within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875, in which case a charge by virtue of section 257 of the Act would be created upon the premises; and the second is, if there be such a charge, whether the court can enforce it by ordering a sale of the school premises.

As regards the first point, this depends upon whether the appellants are "owners" of the school premises within the meaning of section 257 of the Act of 1875. This section enacts "Where any local authority have incurred expenses for the repayment whereof the owner of the premises . . . is made liable under this Act . . . such expenses may be recovered . . . from any person who is the owner of such premises when the works are completed, . . . and until recovery of such expenses and interest, the same shall be a charge on the premises in respect of which they were incurred." By section 4 of the same Act "'Owner' means the person for the time being receiving the rack-rent of the lands or premises in connection with which the word is used, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such lands or premises were let at a rack-rent." In the case of Bowditch v. Wakefield Local Board of Health in the year 1871 the court of Queen's Bench held that the trustees to whom premises had been conveyed for the purposes of a school under the provisions of section 2 of the School Sites Act of 1841 were "owners" within the meaning of section 2 of the Public Health Act of 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), which is identical so far as "owner" is concerned with section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and if this case is good law and has not been overruled, there can be no doubt that the appellants are "owners" within the meaning of section 257 of the Public Health Act of 1875. Blackburn, J., in delivering his judgment in this case, said: "The definition 'owner,' however, in section 2 does not say 'owner shall include,' but 'shall mean.' Now, though these premises are and must be held as schools and cannot be let for any purpose, yet if they were let the rent would come to the appellant. I think, therefore, he is 'owner' within the meaning of the definition. There is no apparent reason why a trustee of these schools should not be within the Act; and as to the difficulty of the appellant getting recouped, those who undertake trusts do often incur liability, and must have recourse to such measures as are open to them." Mellor and Lush, JJ., based their judgments upon the ground that as there was no special exemption in the statutes as regards schools as there was with regard to churches, schools were liable to the expenses. It cannot be said that this Wakefield case has ever been in terms overruled, nor do we find that it has ever been doubted; but, on the contrary, as will be seen hereafter, it was treated as good law as late as in the year 1885 by this court in the case of Wright v. Ingle, and by Stirling, J., in In re Christchurch Inclosure Act, 42 W. R. 614, [1894] 3 Ch., 209, and by Mathew, J., in 1895, in the case of Vestry of St. Mary, Islington v. Cobbett, 43 W. R. 44, [1895] 1 Q. B. 369. It is, however, argued on behalf of the appellants, the trustees of the school, that two cases—the one in the Exchequer Chamber, Plumstead Board of Works v. The British Land Co., 23 W. R. 634, L. R. 10 Q. B. 203, and the other in the House of Lords, The Great Eastern Railway Co. v. The Hackney District Board of Works, 31 W. R. 769, 8 App. Cas. 687—show that the ground of Blackburn, J.'s decision in the Wakefield case was erroneous, and consequently that the case is no longer law. It was said that the ground of his decision was that "owner" in the Act included, amongst others, the case of the owner of premises which were never capable of being let at a rack-rent, and that the two cases above mentioned showed that this was not so. Blackburn, J., in the same year as he decided the Wakefield case—1871—in the case of Lord Northbrook v. Plumstead Board of Works, 20 W. R. 177, L. R. 7 Q. B. 183, and again, in 1874, in Plumstead Board of Works v. British Land Co., reaffirmed what he had said in the Wakefield case, but this later case was taken upon appeal to the Exchequer Chamber and reversed, and it is said that this reversal overruled the Wakefield case, and that the House of Lords, in the year 1883, in The Great Eastern Railway v. Hackney Board of Works, had done the same thing. The appellants' point is this—that it is not now correct to say that a person is an "owner" within the meaning of section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, if the property which he possesses is by law for ever incapable of being let at a rack-rent. They point out that, in the year 1868, prior to the Wakefield case, Blackburn, J., in the case of Angell v. Vestry of Paddington, 16 W. R. 1167, L. R. 3 Q. B. 714, had stated that he could not see how commissioners for building additional churches could be said to be owners within section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, which, as regards "owner," is identical with section 4 of the Public Health Act of 1875. In the case of Plumstead Board of Works v. British Land Co., in the Exchequer Chamber, it was held that, assuming the Land Co. to be owners of the soil of the roads, they were not "owners" thereof within section 250 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120 (the Metropolis Management Act of 1855), because the roads had been irrevocably dedicated to the public—in other words, because the roads had for ever become incapable of being let at a rack-rent, and therefore the Land Co. were not "owners" within the meaning of the section. We must point out that that judgment, which was delivered by Lord Coleridge, in which Bramwell, Cleasby, Pollock, and Amphlett, BB., and Grove, J., concurred, leaves out of consideration that the minerals under the roads were still the property of the defendants; but that case is nevertheless an authority binding upon us, that, if the land of an owner be irrevocably dedicated to the public, he is not an "owner" within the meaning of the Act. The Wakefield case was not cited in the Plumstead case in the Exchequer Chamber. Again, in the House of Lords in 1883, in the case of Great Eastern Railway Co. v. The Hackney Board of Works, the same thing was held. One point which arose in that case was whether the Great Eastern Railway Co. were "owners" of land within the meaning of the Act. Lord Watson, at p. 693, sums up the previous authorities, though the Wakefield case was again not referred to. He says: "The authorities cited in the course of the argument appear to me to establish this proposition—that the person vested with the property of heritable subjects which have been placed extra commercium, or are subject in perpetuity to the burthen of a public right which deprives him of their lawful use, is not an owner within section 77 of the Act of 1862 (the Metropolis Local Management Act of 1862). The fences are mere accessories of the public highway, and are not, in my opinion, land capable of yielding a rack-rent to the appellants within the meaning of the statutes." Lord Blackburn agreed in this opinion. These two cases, in our judgment, show that if land be by statute for ever incapable of yielding a rack-rent, the owner thereof is not "owner" within the meaning of the Acts. In the year 1855, in Wright v. Ingle, this court had to consider the meaning of the word "owner" in the 250th section of the Metropolis Local Management Act of 1885, which, as before stated, is identical with section 4 of the Act of 1875. The court by no means overruled the Wakefield case, but on the contrary Lord Esher expressly says that he thought he was not overruling any previous case and that the Wakefield case remained untouched. He says: "If by statute a house or building . . . is put into such a category that it cannot, so long as the statute lasts, be let at all at a rack-rent, there never can be the 'owner' described in the 250th section." Bowen, L.J., says: "But section 250 does not confine the term 'owner' to those persons who could receive a rack-rent from the particular premises or who could let them at a rack-rent; it includes those persons who would receive the rack-rent if the premises were let at such a rent, and I think Bowditch v. Wakefield Local Board is a conclusive authority, if authority were wanted, to show that a man is not the less the 'owner' of premises because by the provisions of the deed under which he holds them they cannot so long as he holds them be let at a rack-rent. Whether in the case of premises which were prevented by Act of Parliament from being let at a rack-rent there ever could be an owner within the meaning of section 250 I very much doubt. I am inclined to think that, if the incapacity to be let were stamped on the premises, they never could have an owner within the meaning of section 250." As before stated, Stirling, J., in In re Christchurch Inclosure Act, treated the case of Bowditch v. Wakefield Local Board as still standing, and in 1895, in the case of The Vestry of St. Mary, Islington v. Cobbett, Mathew, J., treated it as a binding authority. It is true that there is no provision for reverter in section 6 of the Act of 1841, under which the land was conveyed to the predecessors of the appellants, as there is in the prior sections—why this was omitted we do not know—but it will be seen that under section 14 of the Act of 1841 the present school premises and buildings may in certain events be sold or exchanged by the trustees for other land or buildings suitable to the purposes of their trust, in which case the school premises would become unfettered from the obligation "of being applied for the site for a school for poor persons of the parish and for no other purpose whatever"; and it would also seem that under section 23 of the Elementary Schools Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), the school might be transferred to a School Board either at a nominal rent or otherwise. In these circumstances, in our judgment, it cannot be said, as is said by the appellants, that the school premises are by statute incapacitated for ever from earning a rack-rent, and consequently the first point taken by the school trustees fails. It may be that the reason given by Lord Blackburn in the Wakefield case has been dissented from, but that does not necessarily make the decision itself wrong, for if in the Wakefield case, as in the present, the premises were not subject "in perpetuity to a public right," the decision is correct. In our judgment the Wakefield case as a decision stands, and consequently the district council have a charge upon the premises of the appellants.

We now come to the question whether this charge can be enforced by this court making an order for the sale of the school premises. It appears to me clear that the School Sites Act, 1841, never contemplated such a proceeding, for it enacts by the statutory form of conveyance that "the premises were to be conveyed for the purposes of the said Act and to be applied as a site for a school for poor persons of the parish, and for no other purpose whatever." As long as the premises remain a site for the school and are used as such, the court by ordering a sale, would be obviously acting in direct contravention of the special legislation of 1841, and, indeed, when the Act of 1841 was passed there was not, to our knowledge, any means by which a third party could obtain a charge upon the property, and a fortiori he could obtain no order for its sale. It is true by the general Act of 1875 (the Public Health Act of that year) in certain cases a local authority may get a charge upon premises for expenses incurred by them, but we can find nothing in the general Act to show that it was intended by the Legislature to override the manifest object of the special Act of 1841, which an order for the sale of the school premises would clearly frustrate. It may be said, Why give a charge if it is not to be enforced by an order for sale; but where in the general Act of 1875 can be found any indication of the Legislature that school sites when used for school purposes should be sold to pay paving expenses? It is familiar law that special Acts are not repealed by general Acts unless there is some express reference to the previous legislation upon the subject, or unless there is a necessary inconsistency in the two Acts standing together. The cases of London and Blackwall Railway Co. v. Limehouse Board of Works, 5 W. R. 64, 3 K. & J. 123, at pp. 127-128: Thorpe v. Adams, 19 W. R. 352, L. R. 6 C. P. 125; and Fitzgerald v. Champneys, 9 W. R. 850, 2 J. & H. 31, at pp. 54 and 55, are good examples of this.

For these reasons we are of opinion that Kekewich, J., was right when he held that the district council held a charge upon the school premises, but was not right in ordering a sale of them. The district council have a remedy against the trustees personally under the Act of 1875, but the time in this case has been allowed to elapse for the exercise of this remedy. As regards the charge which they have upon the school premises, the district council are not, in our judgment, entitled to ask the court for an order for the sale of them in the circumstances at present existing. The charge will stand, but the order for sale must be set aside, with costs here and below.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Lee, Bolton, & Lee; Leonard J. Tatham.

From Prob. Div. and Adm. Div. (Lindley, A. L. Smith, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — March 24; April 5.

SAUNDERS v. SAUNDERS. (a.)

Divorce—Practice—Co-respondent—Necessary party—Leave to proceed without—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), ss. 27, 28—Divorce Rules, 2, 4, 5, 6.

The court has a discretion, under section 28 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, as to whether the petitioner may present a petition for divorce without adding a co-respondent. Such discretion is to be exercised having regard to the facts of each particular case, and it would be wrong in principle for the court to impose fetters upon the exercise of the powers which are left by law to its discretion in each case as it arises.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

So held by the Court of Appeal, Lindley and Rigby, L.JJ. (A. L. Smith, L.J., dissenting as to the exercise of the discretion in this particular case).

Appeal of the petitioner, the husband in a suit for divorce, from Barnes, J.

The petitioner left this country on the 17th of April, 1894, and went to America. He returned on the 27th of May, 1896, and discovered that his wife had given birth to a child on the 27th of April, 1896, of which he was not the father. The birth of the child was registered without the name of any father. On the 2nd of June, 1896, the wife took out a bastardy summons against one Isaac Harry, alleging that he was the father of the child. The summons was returnable for the 17th of June, and was adjourned until the 8th of July for the attendance of witnesses. On the latter date the summons was struck out by the magistrates, the wife having failed to attend. The wife informed the husband's solicitors that Harry was the father of her child, and that she had never committed adultery with anyone else. On the other hand, Harry was prepared to swear that he had never had intercourse with Mrs. Saunders.

The husband moved before Barnes, J., for leave to proceed with his suit without adding a co-respondent.

Barnes, J., following a previous decision of his own (Jones v. Jones, [1896] P. 165, 44 W. R. Dig. 55) which had the approval of the President, refused leave.

The husband appealed.

Priestley, for the appellant.—There are cases both ways, and the practice is unsettled. It is not a fair construction of section 28 of the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, to say that there must be a co-respondent in every case. Different judges have adopted different views, and in some of the following cases leave has been given and in others leave has been refused on different grounds. Although the last decision of Barnes, J. (Jones v. Jones), had the approval of the President, the practice is not settled and is not binding on this court.

The following cases were then referred to and discussed: Jinkings v. Jinkings, L. R. 1 P. & D. 330, 15 W. R. P. & D. Dig. 18; Hook v. Hook, 6 W. R. 868, 1 Sw. & Tr. 183; Muspratt v. Muspratt, 31 L. J. P. & M. 28, 10 W. R. Div. Dig. 15; Quicke v. Quicke, 10 W. R. 448, 31 L. J. P. & M. 28; Carryer v. Carryer and Watson, 13 W. R. 507, 4 Sw. & Tr. 94; Payne v. Payne, Rodway, and Eddels, 60 L. T. Rep. 238, 37 W. R. Dig. 67; Gill v. Gill, 37 W. R. 623, 60 L. T. Rep. 712; Cornish v. Cornish, L. R. 15 P. & D. 131, 38 W. R. Dig. 68; Bagot v. Bagot, 62 L. T. Rep. 612, 38 W. R. Dig. 68; Miles v. Miles, "Times" 20th March, 1896; and Jones v. Jones.

On the true reading of the section the persons to be before the court are those who are implicated by the petitioner, and not by the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 5.—LINDLEY, L.J.—This is an appeal from the refusal of Barnes, J., to allow the petition of a husband, who seeks a divorce from his wife on the ground of her adultery, to proceed without making the person who she says committed adultery with her a co-respondent.

Before considering the facts, I will state what I conceive to be the legal principles applicable to the case.

By section 27 of the Divorce Act every petition for dissolution of marriage "shall state as distinctly as the nature of the case permits the facts on which the claim to have such marriage dissolved is founded"; and by section 28, "upon any such petition presented by a husband the petitioner shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent on the said petition unless on special grounds, to be allowed by the court, he shall be excused from so doing." By section 11 of 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, a person named as co-respondent may be dismissed by the court from the suit if the court thinks there is not sufficient evidence against him. By the Divorce Rules of 1865 every petition must be verified by the petitioner's verifying the facts of which he has personal cognizance and deposing as to his belief in the bulk of the other facts alleged in the petition (rule 2). Alleged adulterers must be made co-respondents unless the judge shall otherwise direct (rule 4), and applications for such direction must be supported by affidavits (rule 5). If the name of the alleged adulterer is unknown to the petitioner when he presents his petition, the name must be supplied as soon as known, and the petition must be amended accordingly (rule 6).

Now, looking at these Acts and rules, and construing them without assistance from authorities, it appears to me that by "alleged adulterer" in section 28 and rule 4 is meant alleged by the petitioner in his petition. If the petitioner does not allege any adulterer, section 28 and rule 4 do not apply to the case. But rule 6 shows that if the petitioner knows the name of the alleged adulterer the petitioner must insert his name in the petition, and then by section 28 and rule 4 the person so named must be made a co-respondent unless the judge on special grounds otherwise directs. This, however, raises the question what is meant in rule 6 by the name of the alleged adulterer being unknown to the petitioner. Actual personal knowledge by the petitioner of the adultery charged and of the guilt of an adulterer cannot be expected, and it appears to me absurd to suppose that no name of any adulterer need be stated in the petition unless the petitioner has personal knowledge of his guilt and identity. The expression "unknown" in rule 6 refers to name and not to guilt, and the expression "alleged adulterer" in rule 6 cannot refer to any person already named in the petition, for the rule only applies where the name of the alleged adulterer is known. It seems to me plain that, if a petitioning husband is in any way informed of the name of anyone said to have committed adultery with his wife, he must make up his mind whether he will charge such person with adultery or not. If he decides that he will, he must in his petition allege adultery between his wife and such person and make him a co-respondent, unless the judge excuses the petitioner from so doing. On the other hand, if the husband decides that he will not charge adultery between his wife and the person named to him as guilty of adultery with his wife, whether because the husband does not believe in the truth of the accusation, or because he is convinced that he cannot prove such person's guilt, or for any other reason, there is a difficulty, for such a case is not very clearly provided for either by the statute or by the rules. The practice in such cases I understand to be to charge adultery with some person unknown and to apply to the court for leave to dispense with a co-respondent upon a special affidavit stating the information which the petitioner has as to the supposed adulterer, and stating the grounds on which the petitioner asks to be excused from making him a co-respondent: see Pitt v. Pitt, L. R. 1 P. & D. 464, 16 W. R. P. and D. Dig. 8; Tollemache v. Tollemache, 28 L. J. P. & M. 2, 7 W. R. Div. Dig. 12. This is what the petitioner has done in this case. The Act and the rules, and the practice of the court based upon them, make it quite plain that in such cases as these it is for the court, and not for the petitioner, to decide whether a person whose name is known to the petitioner as a person accused of adultery with his wife on the occasion of the adultery charged against her shall or shall not be made a co-respondent. On the other hand, it is for the petitioner to decide whether damages shall be claimed against a co-respondent or not. (See sections 33 and 50 of the Act.) What ought to be done about the costs of a co-respondent unwillingly made so by the petitioner, but ordered by the court to be made a co-respondent as a condition for proceeding with the petition, is a matter for the court to decide in each particular case. (Section 51 of the Act.) The court must be trusted to do what is right when all the facts are before it. The duty of the judge in deciding whether the petitioner is to be excused from making co-respondent a person who has been named to him as an adulterer is clearly indicated by section 28 of the Act; and although confined in its terms to the case where that person is accused by the petitioner, that section has very properly been taken as a guide in other cases, and I gather from the decisions on the subject that special grounds are required to be shown for not making co-respondents persons who the petitioner is informed are the delinquents. This practice is quite in accordance with the Act and rules.

On all applications to be excused from making a person a co-respondent, whether such person is charged with adultery in the petition or not, the judge's duty is by no means confined to the consideration of the interests of the petitioner, the respondent, and the other persons implicated. The Act shows plainly enough that the judge's duty is far wider than this. The provisions in the Divorce Act relating to the Queen's Proctor show that divorce is not regarded as a matter which concerns only husbands and wives and those guilty of adultery. Divorce is regarded as a matter of grave social importance, in which the public are greatly concerned; and the judge, in considering what ought to be done in such cases as that now before us, is bound to protect this public interest, and to do what he can to prevent collusive divorces, and to check all other abuses of divorce proceedings which experience may show are likely to occur. This has always been the view taken by the eminent men who have been entrusted with the duty of exercising jurisdiction in divorce cases, and will, I trust, never be lost sight of. The Legislature have purposely refrained from defining or enumerating special circumstances, and to define them is really to legislate. All that can be said is that the judge must be guided by the great principles laid down in the Act and rules, or to be gathered from them, and by the circumstances of each particular case as it arises. No doubt cases with common features constantly recur, and the best mode of dealing with them may be learned by experience, and become part of the ordinary practice of the court. But that practice should not be allowed to become a fetter, and should give way at once if circumstances arise which render its observance unjust or inexpedient. I am induced to make these observations because in Jones v. Jones a practice which may be conveniently followed in many cases looks as if it were in process of becoming a fetter on the judge. And in this very case we are told that the learned judge acted in accordance with the rule laid down in Jones v. Jones, rather than on an independent consideration of the circumstances of the case itself. It appears to me wrong in principle for any court or judge to impose fetters on the exercise by themselves or others of powers which are left by law to their discretion in each case as it arises. In Jones v. Jones, which was a case very like the present, Barnes, J., reviewed all the previous cases to be found in the reports. It appears from the last paragraph of his judgment that he was not satisfied that the petitioner there could not obtain evidence of adultery by the person whose name he knew. This was an abundantly sufficient reason for refusing leave to the petitioner to proceed without making that person a co-respondent. But Barnes, J., as I understand his judgment, laid down, and intended to lay down, with the consent of the President, a general rule which he thus expressed: "Where the relief sought against the respondent is on the ground of adultery alleged to have been committed with a man whose name and identity are known, and who is alive, the petitioner must make such person a co-respondent, and the court ought not to excuse him from so doing merely because he finds that he cannot obtain evidence which will prove his case against such co-respondent." If I understand this passage correctly, it means that if a husband seeks a divorce from his wife on the ground of adultery, and he knows the name of a person who the petitioner is informed was her paramour, the petitioner must make that person a co-respondent, although the petitioner is convinced that he cannot obtain evidence to prove the man's guilt, and although he adduces satisfactory evidence that he really cannot do so. No such rule can, in my opinion, be extracted from the statutes, nor from the rules promulgated under their authority, nor from previously decided cases. It is, in my opinion, rather opposed to than supported by the course adopted by Sir Cresswell Cresswell, Lord Penzance, and Lord Hannen. See Muspratt v. Muspratt, Carryer v. Carryer, Jinkings v. Jinkings, Bagot v. Bagot. Some cases before Butt, J., appear to be in conflict with these. But the truth is, there is no settled rule applicable to all cases, nor can I see how there should be. The rule laid down in Jones v. Jones might be well suited to many cases, yet it might in many other cases press very hardly on a petitioner, without being the least necessary for the protection of the public. Such a rule might well be often relaxed where a wife had been living in a brothel, or where she had had a child of which her husband could not have been the father; and the rule would be most mischievous in those common cases in which a wife falsely accuses one man in order to screen another. Instead of following any such rule as that laid down in Jones v. Jones, the court ought, in my opinion, to apply its mind to each particular case; and, being guided by the statute, the rules of court, and what experience shows to be dangers to be avoided, the court should decide what in each case it is most just and expedient to do. Guided by this principle, I proceed to examine this particular case. [His lordship referred to the facts, and continued:] The adultery of the wife seems capable of easy proof. No evidence can be obtained against the man she accuses, and the petitioner cannot bring himself to swear that he believes that man to be the real adulterer. The solicitor's affidavit shows that honest efforts have been made to obtain evidence against him. I see no reason to doubt any part of this story. But if Barnes, J., had considered the evidence and had said that he was not satisfied with it, I should have thought it wrong to overrule his decision on such a point. He appears, however, simply to have decided the case on Jones v. Jones. I cannot think this was right; and as it is the duty of this court to make the order which ought to have been made in the first instance, I am of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, and that leave to proceed without naming any co-respondent should be granted.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The respondent's non-attendance upon the 8th of July, 1896, is, in my opinion, to be accounted for by the fact that by the Bastardy Act only a single and not a married woman can by law support such a summons, and that her non-attendance does not show that her statement as regards Harry is necessarily untrue. Now, in circumstances such as these, is a petitioner entitled to proceed without making the supposed adulterer co-respondent? The petitioner asserts that he is, because, as he says, he has only the wife's acts and statements to rely upon as proof of Harry's adultery with her, which are not evidence against him; that he cannot obtain other evidence against him; and that, as he can establish the adultery of the wife by proof of the child's birth, and by his own evidence of absence beyond the seas, he need not make Harry a co-respondent; and that, if Harry is not made a co-respondent, the case will probably be undefended and of small expense, whereas, if Harry is made a co-respondent, he will be dismissed from the suit for want of evidence against him, and the petitioner will have to pay his costs. Assuming the wife's statement to be true, and that she did in fact commit adultery with Harry, I should think that the judge who tried the case would not by any means necessarily condemn the petitioner in Harry's costs, but, on the contrary, would leave Harry to pay his own costs, which he would richly deserve to pay. [His lordship read sections 27 and 28 of the Act of 1857, and rules 4 and 6 of the Divorce Court Rules, and continued:] The "alleged adulterer" in the Act and rules, in my judgment, means the person with whom the accused wife is supposed to have committed the adultery charged; it does not mean only the person whom the petitioner may charge with the adultery in his petition as being the adulterer. The case of Pitt v. Pitt shows that this is so. I apprehend that one object, at any rate, which the Legislature had in view when it enacted that "the petitioner shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent" was that the court should have before it a person whose interest it was to prevent a decree from being obtained at his expense by collusion between the husband and the wife, and who might be able to check statements made by the one or the other. That some husbands and wives do agree together to, if possible, obtain from the court a decree for divorce for purposes of their own cannot be denied. If the petitioner has been informed of the name of the person with whom the accused wife is supposed to have committed the adultery charged, in my judgment he is bound to insert the name of that person in his petition as co-respondent, "unless on special grounds he shall be excused by the court from so doing." No dispensing power is given to a petitioner in the matter, as I understand that the practice of the Divorce Court is that, if it finds that a petitioner was informed of the name of a person supposed to have committed the adultery charged with the wife, and has not made him co-respondent (no leave having been obtained to dispense with him), the court stays the petition, and orders the supposed adulterer to be joined as co-respondent. The statute and the rules are not to be evaded by a petitioner leaving out of his petition upon his own motion the name of the person supposed to have been guilty of the adultery charged. This person cannot be left out, unless on special grounds the court gives leave that he should be. The petitioner cannot proceed with his petition if he names no co-respondent, without the leave of the court. Pitt v. Pitt and Tollemache v. Tollemache decide this. [His lordship then said that the argument was that the decided cases showed that the court was bound to allow a husband's petition to proceed without a co-respondent where the alleged adultery was with a person unknown. His lordship having reviewed the cases upon the point decided between 1858 and 1890, continued:] In this remarkable want of unanimity of practice amongst the great judges who have presided over the Divorce Court since its formation, I can collect no such consensus of opinion as to establish any rule as to what constitutes "special grounds," within the meaning of section 28 of the Act of 1857, for dispensing with a co-respondent. Since 1890 what authorities there are show that the mere fact that the petitioner has only the wife's confession to rely upon as to her adultery does not afford special ground for dispensing with a co-respondent, if the petitioner has in fact information of the supposed adulterer's name and place abode. This class of case is ever and again recurring. In the year 1896, in Jones v. Jones, Barnes, J., went through the cases, and, with the assent of the President (Sir Francis Jeune), laid down the rule, as I read it, that the mere fact of a petitioner being unable to obtain evidence against a man who is alleged to have committed the adultery charged with his wife, although he has evidence that she has committed the adultery with him, is not of itself a sufficient special ground for exempting a petitioner from making that man a co-respondent. There must be something more. I agree with the rule. If it were held that the alleged want of evidence against the adulterer was sufficient, it would open the door wide to many a collusive suit, not only between the petitioner and the respondent, but also between them and the supposed adulterer, which certainly was not the intention of the Legislature, and against which the Court of Divorce is ever on its guard. This rule does not, as it seems to me, fetter the discretion of the court, which is given to it by the Legislature, when considering generally what are sufficient special grounds for dispensing with a co-respondent; it simply lays down that this one ground by itself is not sufficient.

In the present case, for the reasons above, I think that Barnes, J., came to a right conclusion in refusing leave to the petitioner to proceed with his suit without making Harry a co-respondent; and that the appeal should be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—The ground on which the petitioner asks for relief is very simple—viz., that he left this country for America in 1894, was absent during the whole of 1895, and did not return until May of 1896, when he found that in April, 1896, his wife had given birth to a child. If he is in a position to prove his absence beyond seas during the whole time alleged by him, proof of the birth of the child would, of course, be conclusive as to his wife's adultery without further inquiry into the parentage of the child. His wife alleges that the father of the child was a man whose name she gives, but the petitioner's affidavits show that he has tried and failed to find any evidence against this man, and that the petitioner is unable to say that to the best of his belief the man is the father of the child. Under the circumstances he does not make a charge of adultery against him or propose to use evidence pointing to him as the father, and continues to charge against his wife adultery with some person unknown. No doubt it was the duty of the petitioner, though he does not allege adultery with his wife against any named adulterer, to apply to the court for liberty to proceed without making a co-respondent. This he has done, alleging the facts above stated as special grounds on which the liberty should be granted. Barnes, J., has refused the liberty, relying, as we are told, on a rule laid down by him in Jones v. Jones, that where the relief sought against the respondent is on the ground of adultery alleged to have been committed with a man whose name and identity are known and who is alive, the petitioner must make such a person a co-respondent, and that the court ought not to excuse him from so doing merely because he finds that he cannot obtain evidence which will prove his case against such co-respondent. Now, I entirely concur in all that has been said by Lindley, L.J., on the duty of the court to avoid laying down any rule which can prevent it from exercising in any case the discretion given by statute as to relieving a petitioner on special grounds from the necessity of making a co-respondent. In my opinion the 28th section of the Act of 1857 shows that the intention of the Legislature was that such a discretion should always be vested in the court. But even as an enunciation of what ought to be the practice of the court, I think the rule as interpreted by its application in Jones v. Jones and in the present case goes far beyond what is authorized either by the statutes or the previous decisions of the court.

The interpretation given by the decisions in Jones v. Jones and the present case to the rule would make it go to this extent, that relief is sought on the ground of adultery with a particular man when the petitioner himself disclaims any such ground of relief, and does not propose to give evidence even against the respondent which in any way points to the person suggested as a proper co-respondent, and that the wife's mentioning the name of a man as father to her child is sufficient to oust the discretion of the court and to make it compulsory on the petitioner to make a charge which he never intended to make against a man whom he may believe to be quite innocent. I took a note of the decisions referred to by Mr. Priestley, including all that are commented upon by Barnes, J., in his judgment in Jones v. Jones and down to the year 1896. There are several in which liberty to proceed without a co-respondent has been given, notwithstanding that the petitioner has taken up a charge against him and named him in the petition. I do not think that there is one in which the court has refused leave to the petitioner to proceed without making a co-respondent unless the petitioner has taken up the charge against a particular man, by whomsoever made originally, and relied upon it in his petition. I do not say that it ought never to be done. There ought to be no hard and fast rule; each case should be determined on its own facts. Quicke v. Quicke, as I understand it, decided nothing more than that there must be an affidavit by the petitioner as to the facts on which he relied. But it is obvious that great hardship might be inflicted upon a petitioner, without any compensatory probability of advantage to the person charged by the wife or the public, by acting upon a rule that the wife's naming an adulterer should practically decide that he must be made a co-respondent. A guilty wife naming one or more men as adulterers with her, even though it might be for the purpose of screening the real adulterer, might thus render it practically impossible for the petitioner to proceed, and so deprive him of a divorce to which, on the merits, he would be entitled. In the present case, whether it falls within the rule of Jones v. Jones or not, I am of opinion that the petitioner ought to be allowed to proceed without making a co-respondent.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Crowders & Vizard, for W. Howard, Danelly.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. — March 23, 24; April 6.

VISCOUNT HILL v. BULLOCK. (a.)

Fixtures—Tenant for life and remainderman—Mansion house—Natural history museum—Stuffed birds and animals.

Specimens of stuffed birds and animals which form part of a natural history collection in a museum built on to the mansion-house, are not fixtures so as to devolve with the freehold under the limitations of the settlement.

This was an action by the Right Honourable Rowland Richard Clegg Hill, Viscount Hill, the tenant for life of the mansion-house and settled estates at Hawkstone, in the county of Salop, and William Slaney Kenyon-Slaney, the surviving trustee of the settlement, for an injunction to restrain the defendant, his servants and agents, from removing or causing to be removed from the said mansion-house any pictures or other chattels fixed to the walls or floors of the said house, or other fixtures therein, or any heirlooms or settled chattels, and also for a mandatory injunction ordering the defendant to restore any such fixtures, heirlooms, and chattels as had been removed by him.

The defendant was the trustee in bankruptcy of the Right Honourable Rowland Clegg, late Viscount Hill, deceased, who was adjudicated bankrupt on the 24th of August, 1894, and who died on the 30th of March, 1895. The defendant claimed the articles in dispute on the ground that they were the personal property of the late viscount and did not pass as fixtures to the present viscount under the limitations of the settlement. The settled estates had been disentailed by the plaintiff and his father in 1887, and on the subsequent resettlement they were conveyed to the use of the late viscount for life with remainder to the use of the plaintiff for life with remainders over. The list of the articles so removed and claimed by the defendant comprised the following: (1) The fixed cases with the birds and animals and other objects in "The Bird Gallery"; (2) the picture rods and stair rods throughout the house fitted in rings or brackets attached to the stairs or walls; and (3) the fixed tables and other furniture and decorative objects in the hall. The room above referred to as "The Bird Gallery" was built between the years 1831 and 1834, and was intended to form a museum for a natural history collection. Iron cases had been fixed to the walls of the museum, being supported or attached thereto by iron brackets let into the wall. The cases in the middle of the room were made of wood and were not fixed, but rested by their own weight. Wooden trays or drawers were fitted into these iron cases and were removable at pleasure. The specimens of birds and animals were of considerable value and were mounted in the usual manner, some standing by themselves, others being fixed to imitation rockwork or branches lying on the wooden trays and fitting inside the cases. At the trial the dispute between the parties was mainly confined to the question whether the specimens comprising the natural history collection were fixtures or personal chattels.

Renshaw, Q.C., Christopher James, and H. J. Rowlands for the plaintiffs.—These metal cases were as much a part of the structure of this museum as were the windows and the doors. The cases were fixed to the walls, and the birds are accessory to the cases and are therefore part of the freehold.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They cited the following cases: Lawton v. Lawton, 3 Atk. 12; Lord Dudley v. Lord Warde, Ambl. 113; D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 15 W. R. 186, L. R. 3 Eq. 382; Norton v. Dashwood, 44 W. R. 680, [1896] 2 Ch. 497; Bulkeley v. Lyne Stephens, 11 T. L. R. 564; Holland v. Hodson, 20 W. R. 990, L. R. 7 C. P. 328; Hobson v. Gorringe, ante, 356, [1897] 1 Ch. 182; Ex parte Astbury, 17 W. R. 997, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 630; Elwes v. Maw, 3 East. 38.

P. O. Lawence, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the defendant.—The defendant does not claim the cases, but the birds; he admits the cases are fixtures. The birds are not fixtures, for they are not accessory to the cases, but on the contrary the cases are accessory to the birds just as book-cases are accessory to books or drawers to the butterflies they contain. All these cases were made so that the birds might be enjoyed as chattels. The freehold was built for the birds, the birds were not collected so that the freehold might be enjoyed.

Christopher James, in reply.—The argument that the cases are accessory to the birds does not make any difference, they are one whole thing, they are cases filled up with birds, they are not merely cases with a few birds put anyhow. The plaintiffs want neither cases nor birds, they want cases of birds. These birds have been in the cases fifty years, and it cannot be argued that they are only put there temporarily. Books are not analogous, they are used daily, and they are not put in the shelves for ornament, as these birds were.

April 6.—KEKEWICH, J.—It is conceded that all the articles in question belong to the defendant as trustee in bankruptcy of the late Viscount Hill, except and so far as they can be treated as in fact or in the eye of the law annexed to the mansion-house of Hawkstone, of which the present Viscount Hill is now tenant for life in possession.

In the course of the argument, Mr. Lawrence, on behalf of the defendant, abandoned his claim to certain tables which had been removed, but not sold, and which were alleged to have been fixed to the walls of the apartments in which they stood in order to complete the design of these apartments. Mr. Lawrence did not admit that he did this on compulsion, and the abandonment of these particular articles cannot be treated as weakening his case or strengthening that of the plaintiff as regards any others. On the other hand, it was practically, if not nominally, admitted by the plaintiff that all such things—e.g., glasses—as are generally treated as personal chattels, and which can be removed without injury to the freehold, passed to the defendant, and no more need be said about them. There was a contest to the last about a Royal uniform, generally described as "the trophy," which was fixed to a case hung on a wall. This having been not only removed, but sold, the defendant was not in a position to restore it, and I think he cannot be made liable for it. I am of opinion that "the trophy" falls within the class of personal chattels above mentioned.

There remains to be considered the question whether any and which of the contents of the museum belong to the defendant, or must be treated as part of the freehold. These contents consist of a collection of stuffed birds made with some care and catalogued. Mr. Lawrence from the first admitted that he could not remove the cases, which are of solid manufacture and are securely fixed to the walls in such a manner that they undoubtedly form part of the apartment—the museum—in which they stand. This, of course, does not satisfy the plaintiff, whose position was neatly and forcibly stated by Mr. James in reply. "I want," said he, "neither cases nor birds, but cases of birds." The birds are fixed as such things usually are—on twigs or imitations of rock, which in their turn are fixed on wooden trays fitted into the metal cases. There is really no difficulty in removing these wooden trays, nor really would there be any difficulty in leaving the trays and removing the birds so that they could be fixed in a similar or different manner elsewhere. It seems to me that the contents of the cases must be regarded as movable personal chattels, unless they can be brought within some recognized exception to the general law respecting fixtures. In fact the argument on behalf of the plaintiff depended entirely on the application to the circumstances of this case of the decision of Lord Romilly in D'Eyncourt v. Gregory. Before considering the principle which that case is said to have established, or, in other words, the exception to the general law which it is said to have laid down, it is well to observe what question was then before the court in respect of which the decision is applicable to the present case. The question arose on a will by which the tenant for life of settled estates and the owner of other estates in fee simple had endeavoured, by the doctrine of election, to force both into one settlement and to comprise in it the decorative contents added by himself to a mansion-house forming part of the settled estates. The key to the decision is found in a passage in Lord Romilly's judgment, commencing at the bottom of p. 393: "In the first place, I think it is obvious that the testator by the shifting clause meant to coerce as powerfully as he could the tenant in tail in possession of the settled estates, and to induce him to resettle those estates; and, in the event of his refusing to do so, the testator intended to take away from him every article of property he could." We must read the rest of the judgment, so far as it concerns the present case, with reference to that passage. "Having that in view," Lord Romilly says, on p. 396, "I think it does not depend on whether any cement is used for fixing these articles or whether they rest by their own weight, but upon this—whether they are strictly and properly part of the architectural design for the hall and staircase itself and put in there as such as distinguished from mere ornaments to be afterwards added." And a little lower down he admits the distinction which he endeavoured to make to be extremely thin and difficult of application. I do not think that any of the other authorities cited directly bear on the point before me. Lawton v. Lawton was cited more for showing how the court deals with these questions as between tenant for life and remainderman than for any other purpose, and I cannot see that it otherwise assists the plaintiff. Reference was made to some other decisions where well-recognized rules in favour of what are called "trade fixtures" were applied, and also to some where equally well-recognized rules touching the relative rights of mortgagor and mortgagee were discussed. There is no advantage in further alluding to them, for they really do not bear on the question in hand. D'Eyncourt v. Gregory has been cited and followed in two recent cases. In the first of these, Bulkeley v. Lyne Stephens, Stirling, J., applied Lord Romilly's principle to circumstances which, in his judgment, brought that case within it. He upheld the report of a referee who had found that certain statutes and other things specified formed part of the original design of the mansion-house, and in that sense were annexed to the freehold. In the second, Norton v. Dashwood, Chitty, J., again followed D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, and held that tapestry passed as a fixture under a devise of the mansion-house, but, as I understand the judgment, because the tapestry was physically annexed, and not by reason of any architectural design. Here I have a case quite different in detail from Bulkeley v. Lyne Stephens, and, though not failing to note that the principle was there applied, I do not find in Stirling, J.'s judgment any lines according to which I can determine the limits of its application here. I, of course, see that if the cases are emptied of their contents the character of the museum will be entirely altered. In truth, it will cease to be a museum and will be converted into a room which may become a museum again, and in which some extensive and useful preparations have already been made towards that end. Until the cases have been again stored with their appropriate contents they not only answer no useful purpose, but may well be regarded as an eyesore. Yet I think the architectural design of the museum must be restricted to the preparations just mentioned, and cannot properly be extended to the collection in view of which those preparations were originally made. The contents of any particular case cannot be regarded as permanent, and, in fact, it appears that, as was natural, additions have from time to time been made to the museum, so that now, although still comprising those originally placed there, it also comprises others intended to make the collection more perfect. So far as I know, these additions have not introduced any variations into the original arrangement, but successive owners of the mansion-house might well from time to time make variations, and I should rather suppose that some would be occasionally required to maintain the scientific order of the collection.

These and other considerations force me to the conclusion that the contents of the cases cannot be regarded as falling within the principle stated by Lord Romilly, and I must hold that they are not annexed to the mansion-house but belong to the defendant. If this view be sound, it follows that the many objects of a like character to the contents of the cases which are to be found in the museum placed where the convenience of the moment or the taste of the occupant dictated also belong to the defendant. As regards all these, the position of the plaintiff is far weaker than as regards the contents of the cases, about which only I have entertained any serious doubt.

Solicitors, Stibbard, Gibson, & Co., for Rowlands & Co., Birmingham; Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., for E. Bygott, Wem.

Q. B. Div.
(Vaughan Williams and Kennedy, JJ.) April 1.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. FAIRLEY AND OTHERS. (a.)

Inland revenue—Settlement estate duty—Contingent settlement—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 5, sub-section 1 (a)—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 2, sub-section 1.

A contingent settlement of property is a settlement within the meaning of section 5 (1) of the Finance Act, 1894, and the property so settled is liable to settlement estate duty under that section.

A testator devised his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his wife during her life, and after her death in trust for all his children who being sons should attain the age of twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry under that age, in equal shares, and if there should be only one such child the whole to be in trust for that one child, and he directed that the trustees should retain the share of each daughter upon trust to pay the income thereof to her for her life, and after her death in trust for the children of such daughter. The testator died leaving at his death two sons and one daughter, all being under the age of twenty-one and unmarried.

Held, that settlement estate duty was payable under section 5 (1), not only upon the daughter's share, but also upon the whole residuary estate, as the whole was settled within the meaning of the section.

Information claiming settlement estate duty under section 5, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act, 1894.

By his will John Fairley appointed the defendants to be executors and trustees of his will, and he devised all his real and personal estate not thereby otherwise disposed of to his trustees upon trust for sale and conversion into money, and after payment of debts and legacies to invest the residue and to stand possessed of the residuary trust moneys and the investments for the time being representing the same (called the residuary trust funds) in trust to pay the income thereof to his wife during her life if she should so long remain his widow, and if she should marry again then from and after her second marriage in trust to pay to his wife during her life an annuity of £50, and after her decease or second marriage in trust for all the testator's children, who, being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry under that age, in equal shares, and if there should be only one such child then the whole to be in trust for that one child, provided always that his trustees should retain the share of each of his daughters upon trust to pay the income thereof to his same daughter for life for her sole and separate use without power of anticipation during coverture and from and after her death in trust for the children of his same daughter or any of them, or any of their issue, in such shares if more than one, and in such manner as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment in trust for the children of the same daughter, who, being male, should attain the age of twenty-one, or, being female, should attain that age or marry under that age in equal shares, and if there be only one such child the whole to be in trust for that one child, and in case there should be no such child of the same daughter then upon such trusts as such daughter should by deed, when not under coverture, or by will appoint, and in default of such appointment in trust for the testator's other children who, being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry under that age, in equal shares, the shares accruing to daughters to be subject to the trusts thereby declared concerning their original shares.

The testator died on the 7th of November, 1895, and his will was proved by the defendants, his executors, on the 30th of November, 1895, and estate duty was paid on a net estate of £33,000.

The testator at the time of his death left three children—namely, two sons and one daughter, all being under the age of twenty-one years and unmarried.

The Commissioners of Inland Revenue claimed from the defendants, as such executors, settlement estate duty under section 5, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act, 1894, on the whole of the testator's residuary estate; but the defendants refused to pay settlement estate duty on more than one equal third part of the residuary estate.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

The Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), enacts:

Section 5 (1).—"Where property in respect of which estate duty is leviable is settled by the will of the deceased, or, having been settled by some other disposition, passes under that disposition on the death of the deceased to some person not competent to dispose of the property:—

"(a) A further estate duty (called settlement estate duty) on the principal value of the settled property shall be levied at the rate hereinafter specified, except where the only life interest in the property after the death of the deceased is that of a wife or husband of the deceased; but

"(b) during the continuance of the settlement the settlement estate duty shall not be payable more than once."

Section 22.—"(h) The expression 'settled property' means property comprised in a settlement.

"(i) The expression 'settlement' means any instrument, whether relating to real property or to personal property, which is a settlement within the meaning of section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882."

The Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), enacts:

Section 2 (1).—"Any deed, will, agreement for a settlement, or other agreement, . . . or other instrument, . . . under or by virtue of which instrument or instruments any land, or any estate or interest in land, stands for the time being limited to or in trust for any persons by way of succession, creates or is for purposes of this Act a settlement, and is in this Act referred to as a settlement."

Sir R. Webster, A.G., Sir R. Finlay, S.G., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the Crown.—By section 22 (h) and (i), a "settlement" for the purposes of the Finance Act, 1894, is to be a "settlement" as defined by the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 2. The question then is, whether there is in this case a "settlement" within the meaning of section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882; whether in fact this property by this will "stands for the time being limited to or in trust for any persons by way of succession." We submit that there is a settlement within that section. In the first place, there is a settlement in trust, as the property is settled in trustees upon certain trusts. Then there is a life interest given to the widow, and after the death of the widow there are interests given in succession to the children. The property was therefore settled in trust under this settlement, and it was so settled for persons by way of succession. In addition to the life interest given to the widow, there is also a life interest given to the daughter, and there is a succession amongst the children, and shares which would accrue to them upon a contingency would constitute a succession: In re Goodwin's Settled Estates, 10 W. R. 612, 3 Giff. 620. Upon similar words in other Acts it has been held that there was a settlement: In re Shepheard's Settled Estate, L. R. 8 Eq. 571. 18 W. R. Ch. Dig. 122, and Collett v. Collett, L. R. 2 Eq. 203, in which cases it was held there was a settlement within section 1 of the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 120), and in Dixie v. Dixie, W. N. [1881] p. 49, there was held to be a settlement within the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act, 1877. There is also a right of accruer of the whole fund to the daughter upon the happening of certain contingencies, in which case the whole would be subject to the settlement and would stand limited in trust by way of succession as between her and her children. Again it will be said that the exception in the section applies, but in addition to the life interest given to the widow there is also a life interest given to the daughter which takes the case out of the exception. There is therefore a settlement of the whole estate within the meaning of the section.

Warrington, Q.C., and Dibdin, for the defendants.—It is admitted that the daughter's third share is settled and settlement estate duty has been paid with respect to that. The Act does not impose settlement estate duty upon the whole because by the happening of contingencies which may not happen the whole estate may afterwards become settled. If the daughter's life interest creates a settlement of the whole so as to render the whole liable to this duty then if she died under the age of twenty-one she would never become entitled to a share at all, and her life interest would not take effect, and yet duty would have been paid upon the whole. The period at which it is to be determined once for all what duty is payable is the death of the deceased, that is, the testator, at which time duty would not be payable upon the whole. For the purposes of this section the life interest given to the widow must be left out altogether, and the only thing not covered by that exception is the daughter's life interest in her share.

He referred to In re Burdin's Will, 28 L. J. Ch. 840, 8 W. R. Ch. Dig. 35.

WILLIAMS, J.—In my judgment the settlement duty imposed by the 5th section, is a duty imposed upon that part of the property which is settled, and not on the whole estate if only part of that estate be settled. Secondly, a contingent settlement of the whole or part is a settlement of the whole or part, as the case may be, and not the less so because there may be, by the same instrument, an alternative prior mode of dealing with the same property or part of the property, the continuance of which would exclude the contingent settlement altogether. Then, thirdly, I think the existence of such a contingent settlement for a life estate and estates in remainder excludes the defendants from the benefit of the exception in section 5. And, lastly, I think that an absolute settlement of a part of an estate (in this case we have it in the daughter's third), together with the contingent settlement of the residue—that is, of the two-thirds in this case given to the brothers—constitutes for the purpose of the Finance Act a settlement of the whole estate.

KENNEDY, J.—I entirely concur, and I merely state the last proposition, that the settlement of a part of an estate, such as the daughter's third share in this case, coupled with a contingent settlement of the residue—in this case represented by the brothers' two-thirds—ought to be treated for the purpose of this Act as constituting a settlement of the whole estate.

Judgment for the Crown.

Solicitor for the Crown, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the defendants, Hewitt & Urquhart, for Doyle & Bowden, Manchester.

Privy Council.

(From the Supreme Court of Natal.)

March 10.

THE SALISBURY GOLD MINING CO. (LIMITED) v. HATHORN AND OTHERS. (a.)

Company — Adjournment of meeting — Chairman's authority—Articles giving power to adjourn—Leave to appeal.

Where the articles of association of a company provided that the chairman might, with the consent of the members present at any meeting, adjourn the same from time to time and from place to place in P.,

Held, that the chairman was not bound to adjourn the meeting, even though a majority of those present desired the adjournment.

Under the special circumstances of the case special leave to appeal was given at the hearing.

This was an appeal from the Supreme Court of Natal.

The facts are given in their lordships' judgment.

Buckley, Q.C., Danckwerts, and Gwynne James, for the appellants.

Israel Davies, for the respondents.

The judgment of their lordships (Lord HALSBURY, C., and Lords HERSCHELL, WATSON, HOBHOUSE, MACNAGHTEN, MORRIS, SHAND, and DAVEY, and Sir RICHARD COUCH) was delivered by

Lord HERSCHELL.—This appeal arises in an action brought by the respondents in the Supreme Court of the Colony of Natal. They are duly registered shareholders in the appellant company, against whose secretary, as representing the company, the action was brought. The respondents stated in their declaration that they sued for and on behalf of themselves and all others the shareholders of the company. The declaration alleged that an extraordinary or special general meeting of shareholders was held at Pietermaritzburg on the 9th of July, 1895, and that the meeting was called for the purpose of enabling the shareholders to consider—and, if deemed expedient, to confirm—a provisional agreement said to have been entered into by the directors for the "flotation" of about forty-nine claims of the Rand Mines (Limited), and about thirty-three and three-quarter claims, comprising the joint battery sites of the appellant company and the Jubilee Gold Co. into a company to be registered under the limited liability laws of the South African Republic. The company was to have a nominal capital of £275,000, divided into 275,000 shares of £1 each. It was further alleged that the circular convening the meeting said the shares would be dealt with as follows:

(a) 80,000 shares shall be issued as fully paid up to the Rand Mines Co.

(b) 70,000 shares shall be issued as fully paid up to this company and the Jubilee Gold Co.

(c) 100,000 shares shall form the working capital of the new company, the underwriting of which has been guaranteed by Messrs. Eckstein & Co. at par.

(d) 25,000 shares will be held in reserve.

The declaration then alleged that the chairman of directors of the appellant company, who presided at the meeting held on the 9th of July, explained that under the provision (c) set out above Eckstein & Co. were to have the 100,000 shares allotted to them at par, and that such shares would not be allotted to the public or to the shareholders of the defendant company, who would have no opportunity of subscribing to the same, whereas the terms of provision (c) did not bear the interpretation put upon them by the chairman, and did not authorize the action which the directors contemplated taking in the event of the proposals being accepted.

The declaration went on to allege that a motion for the adjournment of the meeting of the 9th of July, 1895, until the 8th of November, 1895, was duly made and seconded, and, if put to the meeting, would have been carried, but that the chairman illegally and improperly declined to put the resolution, claiming that under article 66 of the articles of association of the appellant company no such adjournment could take place without the consent of the chairman, who thereupon put the motion for the confirmation of the provisional agreement specified in the circular, which was lost on a show of hands, but a ballot being demanded, the appellant company have assumed that the confirmation was then carried. The declaration further alleged that all proxies used at the vote by ballot must have been given by shareholders, the majority of whom reside in Europe or elsewhere beyond the borders of the colony, and whose knowledge of the agreement submitted for confirmation must have been derived from the first circular convening the meeting.

The plaintiff claimed—

1. A declaration that the motion for the adjournment of the meeting should have been submitted to the vote of the shareholders present, and that the action of the chairman in declining to put the motion was wrong and contrary to law.

2. A declaration that the motion if duly put would have been carried.

3. An order of the court declaring the adjournment of the meeting for a period of four months from the date of the judgment in the action.

4 and 5. That the resolutions which the company purported to pass at the meeting after the chairman had refused to put the motion for adjournment should be declared void and invalid and be set aside, and that the company should be interdicted from treating as valid and acting upon any such resolutions.

6. That the company should be interdicted from giving effect to any agreement by which Eckstein & Co. would be allowed to subscribe for 100,000 shares at par in the intended new company, and by which the shareholders in the appellant company would be debarred from subscribing to any portion of such capital contrary to the meaning and intent of provision (c) as above set out.

The appellant company excepted to the declaration as showing no grounds of action in that—

(a) The adjournment of the meeting in terms of article 66 of the articles of association was at the discretion of the chairman.

(b) The provisional agreement put before and dealt with by the meeting was the provisional agreement set out in the notice and in the declaration.

(c) It was not alleged in the declaration, nor is it the fact, that the resolutions against the carrying out of which an interdict was sought were outside the powers of the meeting.

(d) There were no averment in the declaration that the plaintiffs would sustain damage, or that any of their rights would be infringed, by carrying out the resolution.

When the case came on for argument before the Supreme Court it was ordered that the defendant company's exceptions to the plaintiffs' declaration should be, and the same were, thereby overruled. This decision was arrived at by Gallwey, C.J and Wragg, J., Beaumont, J., dissenting.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Chief Justice and Wragg, J., expressed the opinion that the construction placed upon the 66th clause of the articles of association by the chairman was incorrect, whilst Beaumont, J., was of the contrary opinion. The Chief Justice appears to have entertained the view that the refusal to put the motion for adjournment invalidated the subsequent proceedings. Wragg, J., however, reserved his opinion as to the effect of the chairman's action. An application was afterwards made to the Supreme Court for leave to appeal to her Majesty in Council, and the leave prayed for was granted by a majority of the court, Wragg, J., dissenting.

It was contended before their lordships that it was not a case in which it was competent for the court below to grant leave to appeal, inasmuch as the order against which the appeal was brought was not a final judgment, decision, or sentence, nor was it a rule or order having the effect of a final or definitive sentence. During the discussion of this point before their lordships it became evident that even if the order appealed against was not a final judgment or an order having the effect of a definitive sentence, a point which had caused a difference of opinion in the court below, and which was certainly open to doubt, the questions in controversy on the face of the pleadings were of much importance, and that a determination of them might put an end to further litigation. Under the circumstances, therefore, their lordships thought it right without occuping further time in the discussion of the preliminary question to recommend her Majesty to give special leave to appeal.

It may well be doubted whether, in any view of the case, the declaration discloses a good cause of action, but their lordships think it desirable to pronounce judgment upon the construction of the 66th article, which it is asserted justified the course taken by the chairman, without expressing an opinion on the validity of the objection urged, that even if the chairman erred in not putting the motion for adjournment the action could not be sustained.

The article is in these terms so far as material: "The chairman may, with the consent of the members present at any meeting, adjourn the same from time to time and from place to place in Pietermaritzburg." Before discussing the language of this article it is important to notice the provisions of the articles which immediately follow. By article 67 it is provided that, "Upon all questions a show of hands shall, in the first instance, be taken, and the question shall be decided by such show of hands unless upon or immediately after such show of hands a ballot be demanded in writing by at least five members personally present entitled to vote, but no ballot shall be allowed on a question of the adjournment of the meeting." The 68th article provides that when the vote is being taken by show of hands, each member present shall have one vote only, and proxies as such shall not be admitted to vote.

Their lordships are of opinion that upon the true construction of article 66 the chairman is not bound to adjourn the meeting, even though a majority of those present desire the adjournment. If the intention had been that the majority of the members present should have the right to adjourn the meeting whenever they pleased, their lordships think the article would have been differently worded. According to the terms of article 66 it is the "chairman" who may adjourn the meeting, it is to be his act, not that of the meeting, or of those present at it. He cannot, it is true, adjourn it of his own mere motion, but the terms in which the members present are given a controlling voice strengthens the view that the adjournment is to be the act of the chairman. It provides for the "consent" of the members present, which implies that the act is not theirs but his. It is said that there is an inherent power in any meeting to determine on an adjournment if it pleases, and that it is the duty of the chairman to put any motion for that purpose made and seconded. Whether this be so or not in a case where no such articles are to be found as those now under consideration, their lordships do not think it can be so in a case where the articles have expressly prescribed the conditions under which an adjournment may take place. It was contended for the respondents that the construction which the natural meaning of the language used suggests would lead to unreasonable results, and therefore could not have been that intended by those who framed the articles. It is true that it vests in the chairman large powers which might conceivably be used improperly by him, but on the other hand, if there were no check upon the power of those present at a meeting to adjourn it to a future date, it is equally conceivable that a small minority of the shareholders might seriously prejudice the interests of the company and defy the wishes of the majority of its members. The facts stated in the declaration of the present action will suffice to illustrate this. The meetings are to be held at Pietermaritzburg, many of the shareholders reside in Europe or elsewhere beyond the borders of the colony. They can vote by proxy and so express their views on any proposed action by the company that may come before a meeting for consideration, but the articles provide that proxies are not to be used on the question of the adjournment of the meeting. This being so, a limited number of members resident in or near Pietermaritzburg might, by carrying motions for adjournment, defeat proposals which the great majority of the members thought in the interest of their company. It is no doubt possible that a chairman might abuse the power which their lordships think vested in him; on the other hand, he may use it to protect the rights and interests of those who may be unable to be present. Their lordships see no sufficient reason, then, for departing from what seems to them to be the plain and natural meaning of the language used.

What has been already said is enough to show that this appeal must succeed, but it may be well to add that in their lordships' opinion the fact that, after the motion for adjournment was rejected by the chairman, the confirmation of the provisional agreement was declared carried, can, in their opinion, afford no ground for complaint. The agreement which was thus confirmed was that specified in the circular convening the meeting, and no gloss of the chairman, even if incorrect, and no statement by him as to what was intended to be done under it, could modify or affect the confirmation of the specified agreement.

Their lordships will humbly advise her Majesty that the appeal should be allowed. The respondents must pay the costs of the appeal and in the court below.

Solicitors for the appellant, R. S. Taylor, Son & Humbert.

Solicitors for the respondents, Atkinson & Dresser.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.)
[and Q. B. Div.
(Vaughan Williams, J.)]

May 10, 11; June 16.

In re MORTER.
Ex parte NICHOLLS. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Scheme—Amendment of proof—Liability of guarantors—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 3.

A scheme provided for the payment of 7s. 6d. in the £ to the creditors on the amount of their unsecured debts by three instalments of 2s. 6d. each. The trustees under the scheme guaranteed the composition by the deposit of their promissory notes for 7s. 6d. in the £ on the amount of the unsecured debts proved at the date of the approval of the scheme.

After two instalments had been paid a creditor whose securities had fallen in value claimed to raise his proof from £285 to £611, and also to be entitled to the benefit of the guarantee on the larger amount.

Held, by Vaughan Williams, J., that he was entitled to have his proof admitted for the larger amount; but that the guarantee of the trustees was limited to their liability on the promissory notes they had signed, and that there was no further contractual or statutory obligation which could be enforced against them.

The Court of Appeal (Lord Esher, M.R., A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) affirmed this decision.

Motion by Nicholls & Co., creditors of Morter, against Messrs. Harris, Reed, and James Morter, the trustees and guarantors under a scheme of arrangement with Morter's creditors.

The scheme in this case was one approved by the court in accordance with the terms of section 3 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, and provided for the payment of 7s. 6d. in the pound to the creditors on the amount of their unsecured debts, by three instalments of 2s. 6d. each. It vested the estate of the debtor in the respondents, who guaranteed the payment of the composition, and in fulfilment of their guarantee lodged their promissory notes with the official receiver a few days after the approval of the scheme to the amount of 7s. 6d. in the pound on the unsecured debts proved for at that date.

The applicants were entered by the debtor in his statement of affairs as creditors fully secured, but at the date of the approval of the scheme their securities were not equal in value to their debt, and they proved for £285. After two of the three instalments of 2s. 6d. had been paid, their securities fell considerably in value, and they sought to amend their proof by altering the valuation of the securities and proving for £611 as unsecured.

The respondents rejected the amended proof.

The applicants thereupon launched the present motion, by which they asked:

(1) A declaration that they were entitled to the benefit of the guarantees of the respondents.

(2) For leave to amend their proof by raising it from £285 to £611.

(3) For the reversal of the rejection of their proof by the respondents.

(4) For an order on the respondents to pay to them 7s. 6d. in the pound on the sum of £611.

Muir Mackenzie, for the applicants.

H. Reed, Q.C., and Morten, for the respondent James Morter.

A. R. Poole, Q.C., and P. Rose-Innes, for the respondent Harris.

The respondent Reed had become bankrupt since the approval of the scheme, and was not represented.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—In this case the notice of motion asks me to declare that the applicants are entitled to the benefit of the guarantees of the respondents, that they are entitled to amend their proof by raising it from £285 to £611, and that the respondents were wrong in rejecting such amended proof. It also asks me to order the respondents to pay to the applicants 7s. 6d. in the pound on the amount of their proof as amended.

Now, the scheme in this case is one which has been approved by the court in accordance with section 3 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, and by it the estate of the debtor was vested in the respondents, who were to carry on the debtor's business and realize his assets and apply them, firstly, in payment of the usual costs; secondly, in payment of preferential claims; and thirdly, in payment of 7s. 6d. in the pound to the creditors on the amount of their unsecured debts by these instalments of 2s. 6d. each. In lieu of payment of such debts in full, further security was given by the joint and several promissory notes of the respondents to the amount of 7s. 6d. in the pound on the unsecured debts and deposited with the official receiver, to be distributed among the creditors upon the approval of the scheme by the court. On payment of the composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound the debtor's surplus assets were to be re-assigned to him. The scheme was in fact approved by the court upon the 13th of May, 1893, and upon the 25th of May the official receiver reported that the respondents had lodged with him their promissory notes to the value of 7s. 6d. in the pound on the sum of £8,586.

Under these circumstances I must first say whether I can make the declaration asked for as to the right of the applicants to benefit by the guarantees of the respondents or the consequential order against the respondents to pay the applicants what they ask for. In my opinion I can do neither. The only liability undertaken by the respondents was their liability upon the notes they signed, and there is no further contractual or statutory obligation in the nature of a guarantee which this court can enforce against them.

In the next place I should like to say something generally as to the effect of such a scheme as this. It is a scheme by virtue of which the property of the debtor is vested in trustees for distribution among certain persons described in the scheme. In my judgment that property, being so vested for distribution, must be distributed amongst the proper persons as defined by the scheme, and that none the less because some of them happen not to be entitled to the benefit of the guarantees. I do not know if it occured to the court when it approved this scheme that there were persons who might subsequently become unsecured creditors and entitled to benefit by this scheme by reason of a fall in the value of their securities, or whether the court foresaw that such persons would have no promissory notes in their favour, and no means of getting them. Such, however, is the fact, but I do not think that that fact excludes them from benefiting under the scheme if otherwise they fall within the terms of it. I do think myself that these persons are entitled to come in under the scheme by reason of the provisions in paragraph 3 thereof, for the payment "to the creditors of 7s. 6d. in the pound upon these unsecured debts."

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE and ERSKINE REID, Esqs., Barristers-at-Law.

It seems to me that, having now valued their security, they are entitled to prove in the scheme for the balance, but that they cannot disturb the two dividends of 2s. 6d. which have been already paid.

It is obvious that the framers of the Bankruptcy Act of 1890 meant a scheme under that Act to be a form of liquidation for the benefit of all the creditors in the insolvency, not a mere agreement with such creditors as might choose to come in under it. Section 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, ran on the lines of only binding such creditors as came in and assented to a scheme, but section 3 of the Act of 1890 runs on the lines of binding everybody, and the words of any scheme under that section should, if required, be strained so as to benefit everybody.

That being so, although I decline to make any order against the respondents as guarantors, I think that the applicants are entitled to have their amended proof admitted even now when there may be no estate, though I think it is possible there may be a residue against which they can prove. As each side has failed here on a question of principle there will be no order as to costs.

Nicholls & Co. appealed.

June 18.—Muir Mackenzie for the appellants.

H. Reed, Q.C., and E. Morten; Bousfield, Q.C., and P. Rose-Innes, for the respective respondents, were not called upon to argue.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—The only point remaining in this case for us to decide is whether the learned judge who tried the case ought to have made the declaration which the appellants asked him to make, and which really came down to this: that the trustees should pay him 7s. 6d. in the pound upon the unsecured debt due to this creditor from the debtor. We have nothing to say as to the form of the order drawn up by him, for it is admitted that everything was regular, and therefore all we have to decide is whether the judge should have made this particular order under the particular circumstances of this case, and our decision will therefore be limited to that question alone. To decide that question it is necessary to look first at the scheme of arrangement itself. Under that we find that in consideration of the property of the debtor being assigned to the trustees, they, as a further security, offered to give personal security up to 7s. 6d. in the pound, to be secured by promissory notes lodged with the official receiver. Now, these trustees were not in the position of debtors of the creditors of the bankrupt. There was no liability upon them to pay anything to the bankrupt's estate irrespective of the fact that they were trustees. There was no contract, they were simply trustees, and they gave these promissory notes in respect of no debt due from themselves, but merely in order to secure to the creditors the payment of a certain part of their debts. Their relation, therefore, became that of simple guarantors, and there is nothing under the statute which says that as such guarantors these trustees were not to be entitled to all the rights which otherwise as guarantors they would be able to claim. When they undertook to become guarantors they placed a limitation on their liability. The promissory notes, which were to come to maturity on certain fixed dates, were to be delivered to the various creditors who accepted the arrangement immediately after it received the approval of the court. The scheme was accepted by a certain number of the creditors and received the approval of the court, but it was not until two of the instalments had become due and payable that the appellant thought fit to intimate for the first time that he desired to take advantage of the arrangement, and claimed to be entitled on proof of debt to the benefit of the guarantee given by the trustees. The trustees refused to entertain his claim, and quite rightly, because they were entitled to say that, not having sent in his claim at the time the others did, they had calculated what their liability as guarantors then was, and had arranged to meet the amount of that liability, and it would be obviously unfair that they should be liable to have their calculations upset by a creditor putting in a claim at some subsequent date. If this kind of thing were allowed, then guarantors might at any moment find the amount of their liability so altered that the arrangements they had made to meet it would be totally insufficient. For these reasons I think the learned judge was perfectly right in holding that this creditor had by his own act lost the right to call upon these gentlemen. His grounds for coming to that decision are set out with great clearness in his judgment, and I agree with them entirely. This appeal, therefore, must be dismissed.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I agree thas our decision in this case should rest upon what is the true construction to be placed upon the terms of this particular scheme. The appellants was perfectly aware that a scheme had been put forth under which these gentlemen, as the debtor's trustees, were to carry on his business as best they could for the benefit of his creditors. In spite of knowing all these facts, and also, we must assume, all about the guarantee, the appellant permitted more than a year to pass by before he attempted to come in under the scheme at all, and it would be certainly a violation of the rights of these gentlemen as guarantors if this court were to hold that in these particular circumstances a call could now be made upon them. That alone forms a sufficient reason why in my opinion this appeal ought to be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Hollams, Son, Coward, & Hawkesley.

Solicitors for the respondent Morter, Hillearys.

Solicitor for the respondent Harris, R. Chapman.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — May 12.

In re MONTAGU'S SETTLEMENT.
DERBISHIRE v. MONTAGU. (a.)

Jurisdiction—Settled land—London leaseholds—Raising of money by trustees on mortgage for purpose of pulling down and rebuilding houses—Permanent benefit.

Where land is settled in favour of infants, the court has no jurisdiction to sanction the raising of money by mortgage of the settled land for the purpose of pulling down and rebuilding houses thereon, although the value of the settled land would be greatly increased thereby.

Decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 380, affirmed.

Appeal of the defendants from Kekewich, J. (reported ante, p. 380).

An application was made to Kekewich, J., on originating summons for the sanction of the court to the proposed expenditure of a sum not exceeding

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

£8,500 by the trustees of a settlement for the purpose of pulling down and rebuilding certain houses, by which the value of the property would be considerably enhanced.

Kekewich, J., held that the court had no jurisdiction to sanction such a scheme.

The defendants, the tenant for life and remaindermen under the settlement, appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and H. E. Wright, for the appellants.—If the trustees were absolute owners acting for the best, the scheme would probably be carried out; the question is, can the court authorize it where no express power is given? The court is not acting as guardian of infants, but is administering a trust. What is proposed is not salvage, but the parties will not have what the settlor intended them to have. Hibbert v. Cooke, 1 Sim. & S. 552, is cited in order to show that there is no jurisdiction, but that is not correct. Section 70 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, would give a clear title to a mortgagee.

T. A. Nash, in support of the appeal.

B. B. Rogers, for the trustees of the settlement.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I don't think any of us can see our way to saying that we have jurisdiction. Parliament has never gone so far as to cure this blot on the jurisdiction. If the parties were all of full age, no doubt it could be done. No authority goes the length of saying that such an expenditure can be sanctioned. Frith v. Cameron, 19 W. R. 886, L. R. 12 Eq. 169, goes to the very extreme, and there the rebuilding of the house was only sanctioned because it had become ruinous, owing to the foundations having given way. As to Hibbert v. Cooke, I do not understand the principles on which that case was decided. I regret the result at which we are bound to arrive, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

LOPES, L.J.—The applicant in this case wishes to raise money for the purpose of pulling down and rebuilding property. I have very little doubt that if it could be done a considerable increase of income would be secured. Has the court jurisdiction to make such an order? It is perfectly clear that there is no provision for it in the settlement, and there is nothing to help in the Settled Land Acts. It is said that the court has jurisdiction because it would be vastly for the benefit of the infants; but I don't think that is enough. In In re Jackson, Jackson v. Talbot, 21 Ch. D. 786, 31 W. R. Dig. 204, Kay, J., said: "I think that this jurisdiction should be jealously exercised, and only in cases which amount to actual salvage." This case cannot come within that, and I think Kekewich, J., was right in not exercising a jurisdiction which he did not possess.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. If the Chancery Division has the jurisdiction, it must be conferred by Act of Parliament, and not assumed. Section 70 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, was not intended to make the exercise of the jurisdiction any less carefully exercised than it was before. The appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Cree & Son; Wood, Bigg, & Nash; Cree & Son.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. — March 31; April 1, 2, 3, 6; May 4, 5, 12, 19.

EXCHANGE TELEGRAPH CO. (LIMITED) v. THE CENTRAL NEWS (LIMITED). (a.)

Copyright—Infringement—Injunction—Exclusive information—Right of property.

Information acquired by the expenditure of labour and money becomes a valuable property in the hands of the person so acquiring it and can be communicated upon such terms as he thinks fit. Any person inducing anyone to whom the information is communicated to break the contract under which such information is received will be restrained by injunction. It is immaterial that the information so acquired has already been partly published so long as it has not been published to the whole world and there are persons who are willing to pay to acquire it.

Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory, [1896] 1 Q. B. 147, 44 W. R. Dig. 44, followed.

This was an action by the plaintiffs to restrain the defendants from improperly copying information collected by the plaintiffs and communicated by them to their subscribers, and from communicating the information so copied to the subscribers of the defendant companies, the Central News, and the Column Printing Syndicate (Limited).

The plaintiffs, who are a well-known news agency, have a system whereby they collect news of various kinds, including the results of horse-races, and by means of telegraphic apparatus communicate that news to subscribers subject to certain conditions, one of such conditions being as follows:

"The news supplied by the company is to be used only in the newspaper, or posted only in the club, newsroom, office, or other place at which it is delivered. No copy of it shall be made for any other purpose than for such publication, and it shall not be transmitted, communicated, or delivered to any other party or parties by messenger, telegraph, telephone, or otherwise, nor shall the subscriber assign the benefit of the whole or part of this agreement, nor let upon hire the instrument or the right to use it, nor in any way part with the possession of the instrument without the written consent of the company."

It appeared that for about a year previously to November, 1896, the officers of the plaintiff company had suspected that their racing information was being improperly copied by the Central News. They were consequently on the watch for anything which might enable them to establish a case against their rivals.

On the 26th, 27th, and 28th of November, 1896, a race-meeting was held at Manchester, and on each of these days occurrences took place which confirmed these suspicions, and led to the bringing of the present action. Shortly stated, the nature of these occurrences was as follows:

The plaintiffs, after the conclusion of certain races, published results which, in some respects, either by accident or design, were erroneous, and immediately afterwards published corrections of the inaccuracies. The errors thus published by the plaintiffs were repeated in the information published by the defendants, as also were the plaintiffs' corrections. There being three separate instances of this kind on the 3rd of December, 1896, the plaintiffs issued their writ against the Central News, and a motion for an injunction was made. The witnesses for the Central News by their affidavits denied that the Central News had copied the plaintiffs' telegrams, and stated that the information issued by them on the three days in question was received in the ordinary course of business from the Column Printing Syndicate. The writ was then amended by adding the syndicate as defendants, and a statement of claim was delivered, alleging that both the defendants, or one or other of them, copied the information without the consent of the plaintiffs.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At the trial of the action the plaintiffs relied upon the three instances of copying already alluded to, and also upon an occurrence which took place on the 1st of January, 1897, when a race-meeting again took place at Manchester. On that occasion the National Hunt was run, with the following result: "Knight of Rhodes, 1; Starlight, 2; Summer Lightning, 3." This result was transmitted from Manchester to the plaintiffs' office at Cornhill, where the plaintiffs' officers deliberately altered it by substituting for "Summer Lightning" "Common Blue," the name of another horse engaged in the race. The communications made by the plaintiffs to their subscribers ran as follows: "3.39, Manchester.—Knight of Rhodes, Starlight, Common Blue; four ran. 3.39.—Race started at 3.34. 3.44, Manchester.—Correction, Summer Lightning was third." The communications made by the Central News to their subscribers ran thus: "Knight of Rhodes won, 3.41, Manchester.—Knight of Rhodes, Starlight, Common Blue; four ran. Manchester, 3.42.—. . . another result places Summer Lightning third."

McCall, Q.C., and M. Shearman, for the plaintiffs.—We submit that this case comes within the Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory, [1896] 1 Q. B. 147, 44 W. R. Dig. 44.

G. Hastings, Q.C., and Rufus Isaacs, for the Central News.—Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory was a different case. In that case the plaintiff company paid for the particular information, and the plaintiff company would not give it to anyone else.

C. Macnaghten, for the Column Printing Syndicate.—The case against me is based on the Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory, and that fails here. In Gregory's case the information could only have been got from a subscriber, but here it might have been obtained from outside sources.

McCall, Q.C., replied.

[Shearman referred to Lamb v. Evans. 41 W. R. 405, [1893] 1 Ch. 218; Caird v. Sime, 36 W. R. 199, 12 App. Cas. 326; Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 Mac. & G. 25; Pollard v. Photographic Co., 37 W. R. 266, 40 Ch. D. 345; Robb v. Green, 44 W. R. 25, [1895] 2 Q. B. 315; and Kiernan v. Manhattan Quotation Co., cited in Scrutton on Copyright, 3rd ed., p. 65.]

Cur. adv. vult.

May 19.—STIRLING, J., stated the facts, and held that it was established on the evidence that the communications made by the plaintiffs to their subscribers on the four days in question were the result of the labour of persons employed and paid by them, and continued: This being the conclusion of fact, the question next is whether there is any and what right accruing to the plaintiff in respect of it. On that point it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the case was governed by the Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory, in which injunctions of different kinds were obtained by this same plaintiff company against the defendants. One of the injunctions so granted was based on the right of property in the plaintiffs in certain information communicated by the committee of the Stock Exchange to the present plaintiffs, and by them communicated in a similar way as in the present case to their subscribers subject to their conditions as to publication. The defendant, who was not a subscriber to the plaintiff company, in that case induced a person, which was contrary to his contract, to communicate the information so communicated by the Stock Exchange, and paid for by the plaintiff, to him. An injunction was granted against that. It was sought to distinguish the present case, as it was said that in that case the information had never become public. It was collected by the committee of the Stock Exchange for their own purposes and sold to the plaintiffs, and was never in any sense published until it came to their subscribers, whereas in the present case it was said that the information had become public to the world at Manchester, and that there could be no property in it.

Now, it appears to me that, although the information was made known to a large number of persons, it was not made known to the whole world. A great number of persons were ignorant of it. By the expenditure of labour and money the plaintiffs acquired this information, and it was in their hands at the particular time valuable property in this sense, that persons to whom it was unknown were willing to pay and did pay money to acquire it. The plaintiffs were at full liberty to communicate that information upon such terms as they thought fit, and accordingly they communicated it to their subscribers upon terms which I have already mentioned. A subscriber who communicated the information to third parties contrary to those terms would commit a breach of contract, and he might be restrained by injunction from so doing. The third party who induced a subscriber to break his contract, and in that way acquired and published information contrary to his contract, might, according to the decision in The Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory, be also restrained by injunction.

[His lordship then held that it was established in the evidence as against the Column Printing Syndicate that they published for their own benefit information acquired from or through some subscriber to the plaintiffs, with knowledge or notice on the part of their manager that it was information acquired contrary to the terms imposed on the plaintiffs' subscribers, but that as regards the Central News the case was not made out.]

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors, Nicholson & Crouch; Smith & Goften.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. — March 27; April 8.

In re SINCLAIR.
ALLEN v. SINCLAIR.
HODGKINS v. SINCLAIR. (a.)

Administration—Annuity payable during life or until alienation — Administration action — Valuation of annuity—Payment into court—Annuitant entitled to payment out of whole fund.

Where an annuity, payable to the annuitant for life or until alienation, had been valued in a creditor's action for the administration of the grantor's estate and the amount of such valuation paid into court to the account of the annuitant,

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that, notwithstanding the condition relating to alienation, the annuitant was entitled to have the whole fund in court paid out to him.

Petition.

By an indenture dated the 23rd of June, 1890, and made between George Sinclair, of the one part, and Rose Lethbridge of the other part, George Sinclair covenanted, until the petitioner (George William Cavendish Venn, the nephew of Rose Lethbridge) should attain or die under the age of seventeen, to pay Rose Lethbridge for the benefit of the petitioner an annuity of £120, and until he should attain or die under the age of twenty-one, to pay her for the petitioner's benefit an annuity of £100, and would, after the petitioner attained twenty-one, pay the petitioner £80 a year for his life or until he should do or suffer some act or thing whereby or by means whereof the said annuity or any part thereof, if belonging to him absolutely, would become vested in or payable to some other person or persons, whichever should be the shorter period, the said annuities to be payable by equal quarterly payments on the usual quarter days.

By another indenture bearing the same date and made between the same parties, George Sinclair entered into covenants of a similar nature for the benefit of Margaret Cavendish Venn, Rose Lethbridge's neice.

The petitioner was born on the 19th of November, 1875.

George Sinclair died in July, 1893, and in the same year the two creditor's actions above-named were commenced against his executrix for the administration of his estate, and by the certificate of debts, dated the 10th of May, 1895, and made in pursuance of the order on further consideration, Rose Lethbridge was certified to be a creditor of the estate of George Sinclair to the amount of £3,897 3s. 2d., of which sum £1,903 3s. was admitted to proof in respect of the petitioner's annuities, and the residue in respect of Margaret Cavendish Venn's annuities. Such sum of £1,903 2s. was made up of the following items—namely, £257 16s. for arrears unpaid up to the 24th of June, 1893, £1,642 13s. 6d. for capitalized value of the annuities as in July, 1893, the date of George Sinclair's death, and £2 12s. 6d. for one-half the allowed costs of proving the said debt.

In pursuance of an order in the said action dated the 18th of July, 1895, and the schedule thereto, the sum of £951 11s., being a dividend of 10s. in the £1 on £1,903 2s., was carried over to the "account of George William Cavendish Venn (the petitioner), an infant, and Rose Lethbridge, the wife of Charles Lethbridge, his trustee," and a similar dividend was carried over to the account of Margaret Cavendish Venn.

By another order, dated the 25th of November, 1895, a sum of £445 10s. was directed to be paid to Rose Lethbridge out of the above-mentioned account for arrears of the petitioner's maintenance, and £12 3s. 3d. for the cost of the application, and the residue of the fund was ordered to be invested in Consols to the account of the petitioner and the income thereof paid to Rose Lethbridge up to October, 1896, if the petitioner should so long live.

By a further order dated the 15th of February, 1896, a second dividend of 10s. in the £1 on the said debt of Rose Lethbridge was ordered to be paid, and, pursuant thereto, a further sum of £951 11s. was invested in Consols and carried over to the petitioner's account, and the income of the whole fund was directed to be paid to Rose Lethbridge for the petitioner's maintenance.

The petitioner attained twenty-one on the 18th of November, 1896.

Before Rose Lethbridge was admitted as a creditor of the estate of George Sinclair in respect of the sum of £3,897 3s. 2d., the above-mentioned annuities were valued by Mr. Colquhoun, an actuary appointed by the judge in chambers, and the forfeiture clause affecting the petitioner's annuity was pointed out to him, and he valued such annuity with full knowledge of the facts. [The tenour of Mr. Colquhoun's report appears in the following judgment.]

By his petition the petitioner submitted that he was entitled to the fund in court, being the capitalized value of his annuity, but that, if he was not so entitled, he was entitled to have the fund invested in the purchase of an annuity for his life, and to have provision made for the payment of such annuity until such event as would work a forfeiture under the above-mentioned forfeiture clause.

Warrington, Q.C., and Beaumont, for the petition, asked that the fund in court might be paid out to the petitioner, and referred to Ex parte Blakemore, 25 W. R. 488, 5 Ch. D. 372,; Ex parte Neal, 28 W. R. 875, 14 Ch. D. 579; and In re Jackson, 20 W. R. 1023.

A. J. Allen, for George Sinclair's executor.—I submit that this conditional annuity was not capable of being properly valued and that the petitioner is not entitled to have the fund paid out to him. He is only entitled to have £80 a year paid out to him so long as the fund will last and he fulfils the condition. I do not object to that. I submit the right course to pursue is that adopted in Carr v. Ingleby, 1 De G. & Sm. 362, cited in Seton, 5th ed., vol. 2, p. 1384, and reported as a note to Wroughton v. Colquhoun, 1 De G. & S. 357. [KEKEWICH, J., referred to Seton, pp. 1377 and 2138 (Addenda), and to Gratrix v. Chambers, 2 Giff. 321, 9 W. R. Ch. Dig. 5, and Todd v. Beilby, 27 Beav. 353.]

Warrington, Q.C, in reply, referred to Ex parte Bates, 27 W. R. 927, 11 Ch. D. 914.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 8.—KEKEWICH, J.—The question which I took time to consider was whether the fund now representing the annuity of £80 secured by the deed of covenant of the 23rd of June, 1890, might now be paid to the annuitant in satisfaction thereof, or what other provision ought thereout to be made for such annuity. It became necessary, under the circumstances mentioned in the petition, to value the annuity, and the fund in court must be taken as representing that value. The covenant cannot be strictly fulfilled—that is to say, the annuity cannot be paid from year to year unless (which one cannot anticipate) forfeiture should ensue before the fund is exhausted. The rights of the annuitant have therefore been altered by operation of law without his default or assent. There can be no doubt that if the annuity had been covenanted to be paid for life simply, the rule which is universally adopted in the administration of estates where annuities are given by will and cannot be paid in full would have been followed, and the fund in court would have been paid to the annuitant. This course is adopted as a rough method of giving the annuitant the best that can be obtained for him, and it is recognized as a fair solution of a problem otherwise presenting some difficulties. The practice may be said to have been settled by Wroughton v. Colquhoun, and it has long been of universal application in cases of the character above mentioned. The difficulty here is occasioned by the limitation of the annuity to George William Cavendish Venn for life, "or until he shall do or suffer some act or thing whereby or by means whereof the said annuity or any part thereof, if belonging to him absolutely, would become vested in or payable to some other person or persons." It is strange that there should be so little authority on the question what ought to be done when an annuity is thus limited, and because it cannot be paid in full has been valued and become represented by a fund in the hands of executors or in court. In Seton on Decrees, 5th ed., vol. 2, p. 1384, there is this passage: "Where assets are deficient, an annuity should be valued and abate proportionately, and the apportionment belongs to the annuitant absolutely: Wroughton v. Colquhoun, 1 De. G. & Sm. 357; Innes v. Mitchell, 1 Ph. 710, unless given subject to condition: Carr v. Ingleby, 1 De. G. & Sm. 362." There can be no doubt that the case of Carr v. Ingleby here referred to is an authority for the exception to the general rule. There appears to be no other authority for it. Counsel have been unable to find any, and my own researches have been equally fruitless. Carr v. Ingleby is reported only as a note to Wroughton v. Colquhoun. There is a statement of facts, and this, with the order, which is set out at length, justifies what is said in Seton, but there is no report of argument or judgment, and to this extent the case is unsatisfactory as a guide, standing as it does alone.

I have found some later cases in which it was cited but in none of them is there any comment on it, and the only case which it appears to have influenced is that of Gratrix v. Chambers where Stuart, V.C., held that a proviso as to forfeiture of an annuity prevented the application of Wroughton v. Colquhoun. That decision is open to two observations as regards the case in hand. First, there was no valuation of the annuity in fact (though one was urged by counsel as the proper method of arriving at the proper result); and secondly, the Vice-Chancellor took advantage of a charge of the annuity on a share of the estate to direct it to be paid in full out of that share until exhausted. Here there has been a valuation and the only fund out of which annuity can possibly be paid is that with which the petition seeks to deal. It is argued on behalf of the respondent that the contingency of forfeiture was not and could not be valued. That it is difficult of valuation is true, but that it could not be valued I take leave to doubt; and in bankruptcy such valuations are of necessity made. It is important to observe that although the continuance of the annuity depends on the non-happening of one event, on the happening of which it would, so to speak, be forfeited, yet there is no gift over, and the covenantor's estate can have no claim to the fund. It seems to me that whatever I do, strict technical justice is beyond my power. If the fund is paid to the annuitant and forfeiture ensues within a short period he will get more than was intended for him. If on the other hand I order the dividends to be paid to him he will certainly get far less than is due, while the fund itself would remain for the benefit of someone having no claim to it; and the first part of this result will probably follow if I take the intermediate course of directing the annuity to be paid out of income and capital until the fund is exhausted. A better attempt at justice would be made by investing the fund in the purchase of an annuity for the life of the petitioner. I say distinctly for his life, because it appears from Mr. Colquhoun's statement that it is not possible to purchase from an insurance office an annuity calculated on a valuation of the contingency of forfeiture, and what cannot be done with an insurance office is certainly out of the question with that of the National Debt Commissioners. Mr. Colquhoun suggested a way in which the difficulty might perhaps be met—namely, by fixing a surrender value to accrue if forfeiture occurs, but here again I am met by the objection that there is no one to whom this advantage can properly be given. Moreover, although by reason of the covenantor's estate having paid twenty shillings in the pound there was in the first instance appropriated to this debt a sum sufficient to purchase an annuity of the full amount, yet by certain reductions which have been made, and others which must now be made, the available money is, or at any rate may be, not sufficient for the purpose. Some of the reduction is due to expenditure on maintenance of the petitioner, and to that extent he could not complain if an annuity of less than £80 were secured to him; but it is a mere accident that in this case the fund over was sufficient to purchase an annuity of the full amount, or is nearly sufficient for that purpose now. The principle properly applicable to the case must necessarily be the same whether the sum calculated to be the value of an annuity is provided in full out of the covenantor's or testator's estate, or so abates with other demands on the estate that only a small proportion of the annuity can be secured. Under these circumstances and in view of the general rule of administration established by Wroughton v. Colquhoun I am disposed to order the fund to be paid to the annuitant, and then the only question is whether I am prevented from doing this by the authority of Carr v. Ingleby. Of course I am not competent to overrule that case, but having regard to what has already been said, I do not think that I am bound to follow it. I shall therefore order the fund to be paid out to the annuitant.

Solicitors, W. W. Box; Allen & Son.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } March 26; April 2.

In re JONES.
CHRISTMAS v. JONES. (a.)

Administration action—Costs—Administrator—Rights of administrator—Disallowance of charges—Interest on balances—Debt due from next-of-kin—Set-off by administrator—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 1.

Where, in an administration action brought by the next-of-kin against an administrator the greater part of the administrator's claim for expenses of realization had been disallowed, but the administrator had acted bonâ fide throughout,

Held, that the administrator should be allowed his general costs of an administration action, notwithstanding the disallowance of a portion of his claim for expenses of realization, inasmuch as his claim was neither dishonest, improper, nor monstrous; and also that he should not be ordered to pay interest on balances of the estate which he had retained to meet such claim.

Some of the next-of-kin in the above administration action had brought an action against the administrator in his capacity of executor in another estate. This action had failed, and the next-of-kin were ordered to pay the costs, but had not done so.

Held, that the administrator was entitled to set off this debt due for costs against the shares in the intestate's estate due from him to such next-of-kin.

This was a summons in an action brought for an account of the share of an intestate, Eleanor Jones, in the estate of James Wright Jones, which was in the hands of the defendant David Jones, as administrator of the estate of Eleanor Jones.

The defendant, by an account delivered pursuant to an order in the action, claimed, inter alia, to be repaid the sum of £60 advanced by him for the maintenance of Eleanor Jones, and a sum of about £500 in respect of expenses incurred by him for two journeys to South Africa (where J. W. Jones's estate was situated) and for realization. The account showed that he had received £708 9s. 5d. in respect of the estate, against which he claimed to be allowed for expenses £706 7s. 11d.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant was son of Eleanor and brother of James Wright Jones. The defendant was also sole executor to his father, James Jones, who died in 1880, and in 1891 an action was brought against him by John Jones and Mrs. Elizabeth Williams (his brother and sister) to revoke the probate of the will of James Jones. This action failed, and John Jones and Elizabeth Williams were ordered to pay to the defendant the taxed costs, amounting to £265 15s. 9d. This sum had not been paid.

By an indenture of the 13th of January, 1893, Elizabeth Jones assigned to H. W. Christmas (the plaintiff in this action) all her interest under the intestacy of Eleanor Jones.

On the 2nd of January, 1895, John Jones assigned all his share under such intestacy to William Parker to secure £175.

By his certificate made in the present action on the 17th of May, 1895, the chief clerk found that David Jones had, as legal personal representative of Eleanor Jones, received £708 9s. 5d. in respect of her share in the estate of J. W. Jones, and had paid, or was entitled to be allowed on account thereof £93 11s. 10d., leaving a balance due from him of £614 17s. 7d., and disallowed the above-mentioned claims of £60 and £500.

David Jones having taken out a summons to vary the certificate, which was dismissed with costs, subsequently, under an order of the 12th of July, 1895, paid the balance found due from him into court, and an inquiry was directed as to what balances had been in his hands as administrator, during what periods, and under what circumstances.

By his certificate, made on the 21st of May, 1896, the chief clerk found that the defendant as administrator had in his hands from the 31st of March, 1893, to the 31st of January, 1894, a sum of £602 4s. 6d., and from the 31st of January, 1894, to the 15th of August, 1895, the sum of £614 17s. 7d.

The plaintiff, Harry William Christmas, on the 13th of June, 1896, took out the present summons, asking that the defendant might be ordered to pay interest on the sum of £614 17s. 7d., being the balance found due from him, costs of the plaintiff and other parties attending, and that the sum of money in court might be distributed as specified in the schedule.

The estate of J. W. Jones was situate in the Transvaal, and was at first supposed to be worth £20,000. It was necessary to take steps to ascertain who, under the Roman Dutch law, was entitled to the estate, and the defendant being advised it was necessary for the purpose of realization, took two journeys to South Africa, believing bonâ fide that he was entitled to be repaid his expenses in so doing.

The questions as to the interest on the balances and as to costs were argued first.

C. E. E. Jenkins, for the plaintiff.—The administrator should pay the costs as nearly the whole of his claims and charges were disallowed. It is within the discretion of the court (in R. S. C., ord. 65, r. 1). The proviso makes the claimant simply a creditor, though here he happens to be administrator as well. The journeys to the Transvaal were not in his capacity as administrator. This is in effect a breach of trust. He was the causa causans of these proceedings; he kept money and applied it to his own use, and the onus is shifted upon him to show that he is entitled to his costs. The balances should have been invested, and he should pay such interest as the court may direct.

Warrington, Q.C., and Rolt were only called upon as to costs of the disallowed charges.—The defendant retained these sums bonâ fide believing he was entitled to repay himself expenses incurred. Therefore he ought to be allowed costs. Ord. 65, r. 1 provides for the case where an executor has been guilty of misconduct, and unless he is so guilty he is entitled to costs: In re Love, Hill v. Spurgeon, 33 W. R. 449, 29 Ch. D. 348. The administrator has not "unreasonably resisted proceedings." The right of a trustee to the general costs of a suit is the same as that of a mortgagee, "unless he has forfeited them by some improper defence or other misconduct: Turner v. Hancock, 30 W. R. 480, 20 Ch. D. 303; Cotterell v. Stratton (per Selborne, L.C.), 21 W. R. 234, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 295. As to interest on balances, it is only on definite sums in his hands that the administrator can be ordered to pay. In this case the administrator never had such sums in his hands.

C. E. E. Jenkins, in reply.—It is a shocking thing for a trustee to keep a whole estate in his hands and say, "I will not give you any of it." In re Beddoe, Downes v. Cottam, 41 W. R. 17, [1893] 1 Ch. 547, defines what is "unreasonably resisting proceedings." The question is not "was the administrator honest," but, "has he acted reasonably?" The certificate found that definite balances were in his hands at definite times.

KEKEWICH, J.—It is quite possible that, if the defendant is allowed all his costs, charges, and expenses, and all costs as between solicitor and client of this action, this estate—already small—will be made much smaller; and I agree with plaintiff's counsel that it is not an inaccurate use of language to describe that as shocking. The estate was supposed to be £20,000, but afterwards it turned out to be only about £708; and thus the beneficiaries may in any event get very much less than they anticipated. That is also shocking. But what I have to consider is something of very much greater moment. If I disallow the administrator these costs — to which, according to the rules and practice of the court, he is fairly entitled—that would be far more shocking, because it would not only be against the rules and practice of the court, but directly contrary to honesty. A man who fulfils the difficult duties of administrator or executor and trustee is, in common sense and common justice, entitled to be recouped to the very last penny everything that he expends honestly and properly—that is to say, without impropriety—in his character of administrator, executor, and trustee; and the question which I have to consider is whether these costs, which the administrator here claims, have been incurred by him without impropriety in that character.

Plaintiff's counsel puts his case well enough, and says this man comes in with a claim against the estate which he is unable to support; that he claims as an outsider; and that as such he would come in as an ordinary creditor, and as regards these costs he ought to fail and to pay the costs with which otherwise the estate will be saddled. But if the costs are not those of an outsider, but are costs incident to the performance of his duty as administrator, then I have only to consider whether he has incurred these costs properly —that is, without impropriety. What is the meaning of that? Of course, if an action is brought for the purpose of making the executor or administrator liable for breach of trust, and he is proved to have committed a breach of trust, and costs are incurred by resisting the action and bringing the breach of trust home to the executor, then it is only right that the executor should pay them as part of the penalty for the breach of trust. Again, if an executor brings in any claims strictly in his character of executor, which the court can see from the evidence—documentary or arising out of cross-examination or otherwise—or by a sort of intuitive process or general view of the case, are not honestly brought forward, then the court, notwithstanding the general rule, may fairly deprive the executor of his costs, and, if he is convicted of dishonesty may order the executor to pay the costs incurred. And again, apart from dishonesty, I say also that the court may visit the executor with costs or deprive him of costs where the claim is of a monstrous character—that is, one which no reasonable man could say ought to have been put forward, even although the executor may have believed it, and a solicitor may have prepared the case and counsel may have argued it. In a case of that kind the court has quite sufficient power to deprive an executor of costs, or even to order him to pay the costs occasioned to the estate. But, subject to these limitations, there is no doubt that the general rule prevails, and that an executor, even although he makes a mistake, and endeavours to charge against an estate items which the law will not allow him to charge, even though one could see that they ought to have been omitted and not claimed, and even though, as in this case, the endeavour to prove them has failed, and a summons to vary the certificate has been refused, with costs, still the executor or administrator is entitled to have his costs out of the estate if incurred without impropriety or fraud or anything which can be termed monstrous.

[On the facts his lordship came to the conclusion that there was no want of honesty or breach of trust on the part of the defendant, nor impropriety or anything that could be termed monstrous in the claims which he put forward, although the claims for the £60 and the £500 could not be sustained.]

It seems to me that, under these circumstances, I have no discretion. If I had I should certainly exercise it by allowing these costs. I think the defendant is entitled to them, because he has acted honestly. These are expenses which were not incurred in the first instance in his character as administrator; but he has now come here in his character as administrator to sustain his claim, and all that I am now considering is whether his reasonable costs of trying to sustain it ought to be allowed. It seems to me, on the principle of several cases which have been cited, and upon the general rule laid down by Lord Selborne in Cotterell v. Stratton, and the general practice of the court under the general order, that I am bound to do that; and if it is a matter for my discretion I think I ought to do it, and not a bit the less because I shall very much lessen the money coming to the beneficiaries interested in the estate. I think, therefore, I must allow the defendant all his costs of the action, including his costs, charges, and expenses. It will be necessary in sending the matter to the taxing-master to explain that the costs, charges, and expenses are not to include item 5 or items 14 to 36 (being the items which make out the two sums of £60 and £500) in the account. They must not be brought in as costs, charges, and expenses.

The other question is equally important in administration actions, and that is, whether the executor is to be charged with interest on the balances found by the certificate. The order is this: There is an inquiry whether the defendant as administrator of Eleanor Jones has had part of the estate in his hands, and, if so, for what periods and under what circumstances. Plaintiff's counsel says that in resisting the claim for interest the defendant is seeking to vary the chief clerk's certificate. I do not agree with that argument.

That inquiry precisely follows Form No. 6 in Seton's Forms, vol. 2, p. 983. That is the form of order when the court intends to hold an even hand respecting the liability of an executor for interest on balances such as these. That is shown by the insertion of the words "under the circumstances." It is to be decided hereafter whether the circumstances are such that the court has to fix the executor with interest. In Form 7 in Seton interest is charged on the balances in the hands of the defendant under the account of the general personal estate from twelve months after the testator's death, showing that interest after the testator's death should be paid on the money remaining from time to time in the executor's hands. Form No. 8 directs an inquiry whether any and what balances have, since the date of the order, been improperly retained by the plaintiffs, and interest is to be computed on such balances. What are the circumstances here? The money was not in the pocket of the administrator; it was not employed in his business; it had not been advanced to anyone, or lent; he had simply paid it away in the manner which he ought not to have done, no doubt, as against the estate, but was not improper in itself. It would be wrong now to say that interest on these balances, on which the administrator has made nothing, should be now paid by the defendant. It seems to me that as regards that point the plaintiff fails.

The further question was then argued as to whether the defendant could set off the costs due to him in the action by J. Jones and Mrs. Williams against the shares due to them respectively as next-of-kin of Eleanor Jones.

Warrington, Q.C., for the defendant.—Taylor v. Taylor, 23 W. R. 719, L. R. 20 Eq. 155. There is a right to set off.

C. E. E. Jenkins, for the assignees of the shares.—There is no such right, inasmuch as the debts are not due on the same right: Whitaker v. Rush, Amb. 407. One of the assignments was after the decree of the Probate Court: Middleton v. Pollock, 23 W. R. 766; Medlicot v. Bowes, 1 Ves. sen. 207; Bishop v. Church, 3 Atk. 691; In re Willis, Percival, & Co., Ex parte Morier, 28 W. R. 235, 12 Ch. D. 491. The money is due from the administrator in his fiduciary capacity; therefore there can be no set off. In re Knapman, Knapman v. Wreford, 30 W. R. 395, 18 Ch. D. 300, can be distinguished.

KEKEWICH, J.—If the decision of the Master of the Rolls in Taylor v. Taylor is sound, it seems to me that it completely covers this case. It is a decision by a judge of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and more than twenty years old, and counsel on neither side have been able to find any case in which this decision has been criticised. That goes a long way towards saying that I am bound to follow it. The argument to the contrary, under these circumstances, must rest entirely on this—that the Master of the Rolls was deciding a case adversely to a series of previous decisions which bound him, and that he, inadvertently or otherwise, departed from them, and that I am not to follow him. That argument is not tenable.

Without laying any stress upon the experience and judicial power of Sir George Jessel, I observe that there is not the slightest indication in his judgment of an intention to depart from the other cases. He had the case of Whitaker v. Rush cited to him, and also his own decision in Middleton v. Pollock, and I observe that in that case nearly all the cases cited by counsel for the plaintiff were referred to on this subject and recognized. Therefore, I must take him to have come to the conclusion that what he said in Taylor v. Taylor was consistent with those earlier cases. If he so held, it is not right for me to say that he did not rightly so hold. As regards the case of Whitaker v. Rush, it is to be observed as an example of many cases which have been referred to as illustrating the principle that one debt cannot be set off against another if they are debts in different rights. That is the marginal note in Whitaker v. Rush to which the judge referred in giving judgment. Sir George Jessel cannot have intended to go against these decisions. What he did intend to decide was that this particular case was not an instance of two claims arising in different rights. There is this slight distinction between Taylor v. Taylor and this case—namely, that there the defendant had lent sums of money to the plaintiff, and counsel for the plaintiff says that shows that he recognized his position. I do not see that, or that there is the slightest difference between an advance out of funds in pocket and a liability arising from a judgment of the Court of Probate.

Therefore, the question resolves itself into this, Whether the two claims arise in different rights or not? The case of Cooper v. Cooper, 22 W. R. 713, L. R. 7 H. L. 53, is useful as showing what position the next-of-kin are in as regards the estate. They have a substantial interest in the property; they cannot get it until the account is made out and the debts paid, and the estate cleared. Starting from the very first moment of the death of the intestate, they have a substantial interest in the property. The administrator is not a trustee for the next-of-kin in the strict sense of the word. But he has a duty to them, subject to the payment of all the debts and claims upon the estate—namely, to hand over to each of them his aliquot share of the estate. He is in the position of bailiff for them of their share in the estate. When once it is ascertained, their claim against him is a legal claim. Therefore, if they owe him money, he has a right to set off against that the money to which they have a claim. That is what I understand the Master of the Rolls said in Taylor v. Taylor, at p. 160: "I ask to set off a personal legal debt due from you to me." Then, as regards this particular case, counsel for the plaintiff has not argued one point anticipated by counsel for the defendant—namely, that the money has been paid into court. It could not be argued. The money is paid into court for safe custody in order that the representative may be himself discharged from liability when the money is claimed. I think it is quite right to say that that would no more oust the right of set-off than the right of retainer.

The other point is a different one. Mr. Jenkins represents two of the next-of-kin. Both of them claim derivatively and are assignees, and as regards one of them his title arose after his debt became due from the assignor to the defendant by reason of the judgment in the Probate Court. As regards that, he must claim subject to any right of set-off, if it exists. As regards the other, the assignment was made before the judgment of the Probate Court, and it was argued that, therefore, that operated to attach to the share at once, so that the judgment at a later day could not affect the right of the assignee to be paid the share. Everyone who takes an assignment of a share in an estate in the hands of a legal personal representative must take it subject to the settlement of accounts as between the assignor and the legal personal representative, and it matters not whether they are accounts in the administration of the estate or accounts between the assignor and the legal personal representative.

Under these circumstances I shall follow Taylor v. Taylor. The order will be for the distribution of this estate according to the minutes annexed to the summons, except that the two-sixteenths payable to the plaintiff and the two-sixteenths payable to William Parker will be retained by the defendant.

Solicitors, J. M. Umpleby; Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Evan, Morris, & Co., Wrexham.

Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, J.) — May 6, 7.

In re LONDON METALLURGICAL CO. (NO. 2). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Liquidator—Litigation—Authority of the court or of the committee of inspection—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 12, sub-sections 1-4.

An order to the liquidator of a company directing him to call up all uncalled capital, and "for that purpose to take all necessary proceedings for enforcing such call," is not an authority to him under section 12, sub-sections 1-4, of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, either to commence actions against such contributories or to employ a solicitor without further authority of the court or of the committee of inspection.

But where such unauthorized actions have been commenced the committee of inspection may sanction subsequent proceedings in such actions, and such proceedings are then authorized within the meaning of section 12 of the Act.

Summons by the official receiver asking for a review of the taxation of the costs of the liquidator of the company in taking proceedings against contributories.

The company was being wound up and there was also a debenture-holders' action to enforce their security which covered the uncalled capital of the company. The same liquidator had been appointed in both proceedings.

On the 24th of May, 1894, the liquidator took out a summons, entitled: "Between William Francis Courthorpe plaintiff and the London Metallurgical Co. defendants"—which was the debenture-holders' action—and "in the matter of the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890, and in the matter of the London Metallurgical Co. (Limited)," for an order of directions as to who was the proper person to get in and receive the amounts of the calls intended to be made by the liquidator on the contributories of the above-named company, and that the above-named plaintiff, the debenture-holders, or Mr. C. P. King, as the receiver in the action, might be ordered to indemnify the liquidator against all charges and expenses which the liquidator might incur or become liable to for the making and conferring of such calls, and in case the parties differed, that such indemnity might be settled in chambers.

On the 29th of May he obtained an order directing him to call up any uncalled capital on the shares held by the contributories, and "for this purpose" to "take all necessary proceedings for enforcing such calls, and out of the first moneys coming to his hands in respect thereof" should be at liberty to retain £100 to provide for his proper costs, charges, and expenses of and incident to making such calls and enforcing the same. The order was made without prejudice to the liquidator's claim for any further allowance. Without any further authority the liquidator proceeded to employ a solicitor and to bring sundry actions against contributories for the payment of calls, and incurred costs in so doing; some of the subsequent proceedings in some of these actions, however, received authority from the committee of inspection. When these costs came to be taxed the taxing-master allowed the costs of all the actions. The official receiver objected to the allowance of the costs of these actions as follows: "The items objected to are so much of the pages named as relate to the costs of the actions commenced by the liquidator against contributories of the company to recover the amount of call due from them. Under section 12, sub-section 1, of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, it was necessary for the liquidator to obtain the leave of the court or of the committee of inspection to commence any such action, and such leave was not obtained. The liquidator did not obtain the sanction either of the court or of the committee of inspection to employ a solicitor in such actions pursuant to section 12, sub-section 4, of the said Act. If the order of the 29th of May, 1894, is an authority to the liquidator to commence such actions and to employ a solicitor in the same, then the costs authorized to be incurred are limited to £100."

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The taxing-master answered these objections as follows: "The order of Vaughan Williams, J., at chambers, made on the 29th of May, 1894, directed the liquidator to call up the uncalled capital, and for that purpose to take all necessary proceedings for enforcing such call. Having regard to that order it appears to me that it was competent for the liquidator, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion (acting under the advice of his solicitor), to bring actions at law and to take bankruptcy proceedings without any further authority from the court or any authority from the committee of inspection. Proceedings such as those contemplated by the order involved the employment of a solicitor, and therefore the employment of a solicitor was, in my opinion, sanctioned. The solicitors, whose bill I have taxed, were duly retained, and all proceedings taken under the bill appear to have been taken by them under the instructions or with the full knowledge and approval of the liquidator. The order of the 29th of May, 1894, did not define the particular proceedings to be taken, or restrict them in any way, but left the liquidator to take all such proceedings as might be necessary. The order did not limit the costs in amount to £100. It only reserves to the liquidator costs to that amount, leaving him afterwards to apply to the court for any further allowance for costs. I therefore certify the whole bill as taxed without regard to any limit. I disallow the official receiver's objections to my taxation."

The official receiver now applied by summons to have these costs disallowed.

Ingle Joyce, for the official receiver.—The order of the 29th of May, 1894, did not authorize the liquidator to commence the actions to which we object or to employ a solicitor. He should have obtained the authority of the court or of the committee of inspection before doing so: Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, s. 12, sub-sections (1), (4).

Buckley, Q.C., and Montague Lush.—On the facts the liquidator was justified in bringing these actions. They were necessary in order to enforce the company's claims against contributories, and the order of the 29th of May directed him to take all necessary proceedings. He was therefore justified in bringing these actions, and the taxed bill should be allowed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—The question at issue is one of considerable general importance, and I will try to lay down a rule which will be useful both in the present case and in other cases. In the present case the taxing-master has made a certificate in effect allowing the costs of all the actions, and it was only fair to the liquidator's solicitors to say that, as regarded quantum, not much has been taxed off their bills. They may be taken, therefore, to have been reasonable and not exorbitant bills. [His lordship then read the official receiver's objections and the taxing-master's answer thereto.] Now I will deal separately with the two grounds on which the taxing-master disallowed the objections, and first with that referring to the order of the 29th of May, 1894. That order was, as appears upon the face of the order, based upon a summons dated the 17th of April, 1894, which is issued in the debenture-holders' action and in the winding-up proceedings. [His lordship then read the material portions of the summons.] It was common ground between the receiver for the debenture-holders and the liquidator that when the summons was taken out the capital to be called up would to a certain extent be required to satisfy the debentures, and it must be borne in mind that primarily the capital was being called up for the benefit of the debenture-holders, and that they were pro tanto masters of the litigation and ought to indemnify the liquidator as against the costs. The order made on the summons was that the applicant do call up any uncalled capital on the shares held by the contributories. It was a decision on the question who should call up the unpaid calls. It is established that the liquidator is the proper person, and following this practice the order made was that the applicant, the liquidator, should call up any uncalled capital on the shares held by the contributories, and "for this purpose" should "take all necessary proceedings for enforcing such call, and out of the first moneys coming to his hands in respect thereof" should be at liberty to retain £100 to provide for his proper costs, charges, and expenses of, and incidental to, making the call and enforcing the same, the order being made without prejudice to any question as to the applicant's right to apply for a further allowance for costs. Therefore indemnity was given to the extent of £100. The object of the order was as stated above, and it did in general terms order the liquidator to take the necessary proceedings; but I do not think that the words ought to be construed as relieving the liquidator from any further obligations imposed on him by section 12 of the Act of 1890, sub-sections 1 and 4 of which are as follows:

"(1) The liquidator of a company which is being wound up by the court may, with the sanction either of the court or of the committee of inspection, carry on the business of the company, or bring or defend any legal proceeding in the name and on behalf of the company, or exercise any of the powers conferred by section 159 or section 160 of the Companies Act, 1862."

"(4) The liquidator of a company which is being wound up by order of the court may, with the sanction either of the court or of the committee of inspection, employ a solicitor or other agent to take any proceedings or do any business which the liquidator is unable to take or do himself. The sanction aforesaid must be a sanction obtained before the employment, except in cases of urgency, and in such cases it must be shown that no undue delay took place in obtaining the sanction."

I agree that the words of the order are somewhat general, and I will take care in future that clearer words are inserted, so that the order may not be treated as authorizing proceedings in a particular form without further compliance with section 12. I also say that, having regard to the title of the application and to the proceedings in which the order was made, it was not intended to have any application after enough calls had been got in to pay off the debentures so long as the debenture-holders were really masters of the situation by being the persons beneficially entitled. It is quite right that the question of what expenditure it was worth while to make should be one which should primarily be disposed of by them, they giving a proper indemnity; but I do not think the order is intended to have any application after that time. However this may be, it was plain that whatever else the order might do it only authorized general proceedings and left it to the court to say what they were to be. What are necessary proceedings? In practice, both in bankruptcy and winding up, there is a tendency to talk of the "solicitor of the trustee" and "the solicitor of the liquidator"; but there is truth in no such officer. In all these cases there should be an authority naming the solicitor to be employed, and it is right and proper that on such a specific authority being given a limit should be imposed as to the costs to be incurred. No one could say that because the authority of the court or the committee for taking proceedings had been obtained under section 12, sub-section 17, that did away with the necessity for an application under sub-section 4 of the same section for sanction to employ a solicitor. The order of the 29th of May was, in my opinion, only meant as a performance of the function thrown on the court by sub-section 1. Then, was there any sanction by the committee of inspection? In both bankruptcy and winding up it is perfectly clear that the sanction of the court or the committee must be claimed before the proceedings are instituted, except in cases of urgency. In the present case no proceedings had been commenced in which the sanction of the committee had been obtained before the initiatory steps had been taken. Therefore, the solicitor cannot say that he had the sanction of the committee to the earlier steps of the proceedings. I am not saying that the court might not give sanction now, but when asked to give subsequent sanction it would bear in mind the principle established by the very words of the Act and rules, that the sanction must be obtained before the employment except in cases of urgency. But as to the later steps in the proceedings, they seemed to have been in some instances authorised; and on this part of the case the objections of the official receiver are too wide, because he seems to assume that unless the sanction is obtained before the commencement of an action—the issue of the writ—the whole action must be necessarily treated as if no sanction had been obtained. That contention is wrong.

The section says "bring or defend legal proceedings." I think that if the liquidator, without getting the necessary sanction, commenced an action, and then, after he had commenced the action, the attention of the committee of inspection was called to it, and the permission was asked to take a proceeding in the action, as, for instance, to issue execution, that the sanction so obtained for that step would comply with the section. In other words, I do not think that to "bring or defend legal proceedings" necessarily means the issue of the writ or whatever else must be the first step. I think you are bringing legal proceedings if you take such proceedings for examination as was taken in this case. His lordship then dealt with the particular costs of the actions and proceedings in the case before him, some of which were allowed and others disallowed.

I decide, first, that the order of the 29th of May, 1894, did not authorize these particular proceedings; I decide, secondly, that these proceedings were not all of them necessary, that to a certain extent they were necessary, especially in certain of the actions. Therefore the matter will go back to the master in order that he may, after looking at the affidavits, determine on the necessity of the actions. If he thinks they were necessary, upon his reporting to me I will give the sanction.

Solicitors, Solicitor to the Board of Trade; Grant, Bulcraig, & Co.

Q. B. Div.
(Wright and Bruce, JJ.) May 19; June 1.

SIMMONS v. MALLING RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Local government—Rural sanitary authority—Bye-law—Old building—Reasonableness—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 157—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 23.

Under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as amended by section 23 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, rural sanitary authorities are empowered to make bye-laws with regard to (inter alia) cesspools in connection with buildings.

Held, that it was no defence to a summons for contravention of such a bye-law that the building in question had been erected before an order had been made by the Local Government Board under section 276 of the Public Health Act, 1875, extending the powers of section 157 to the rural sanitary authority.

The bye-law provided that a cesspool to be constructed in connection with a building should be at least 50 feet distant from a dwelling-house or building in which persons were employed.

Held, that the bye-law was reasonable.

Case stated by justices of Kent.

The appellant was summoned before justices in petty sessions for that he did unlawfully construct a cesspool in connection with a building at a distance within fifty feet from a dwelling-house, contrary to the bye-laws of the Malling Rural District Council, the respondents.

The bye-law in question was as follows: "Every person who shall construct a cesspool in connection with a building shall construct such cesspool at a distance of fifty feet at least from a dwelling-house or public building, or any building in which any person may be, or may be intended to be, employed in any manufacture, trade, or business."

The appellant was the owner of a public-house within the respondents' district. The house was an old building, having been erected many years ago, and had, down to October, 1896, two cesspools situate at a distance of about three feet from the house. One of the cesspools received the drainage from a urinal and two closets, and the other received the sink water. In October, 1896, the appellant, after notice from the inspector of nuisances, caused the two cesspools to be filled up, and converted the closets into earth closets, and constructed a new cesspool into which the drainage from the sink and urinal was conducted by underground pipes.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The extent of the appellant's property was such that it was not possible to construct the new cesspool at a distance of fifty feet from the appellant's house, but it was constructed at as great a distance as possible from the house—namely, seventeen feet.

The appellant's house was erected in a place which was not, at the time of the passing of the Public Health Act, 1875, included in an urban sanitary district, and was erected many years before any order was made under section 276 of that Act extending section 157 of the Act to the respondents' district, and the urinal, closets, and sink had existed in the condition in which they were before the alteration above referred to for many years prior to the said order.

Section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, was duly extended to the respondents' district. In 1895 the respondents made bye-laws under that section, which were duly allowed by the Local Government Board. Part 3 of the Public Health Amendment Act, 1890, had been adopted by the respondents.

It was contended for the appellant that the bye-law had no application because (1) he had not constructed a cesspool in connection with which the bye-law applied; (2) he had not erected any building within the respondents' district subsequently to the order of the Local Government Board extending section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to the district; (3) the bye-law was ultra vires unreasonable and void.

The justices convicted the appellant, subject to this case, the question for the court being whether their determination was right in point of law.

The case was twice argued before the Divisional Court. On the first occasion the court expressed an opinion that, as the question as to the validity of the bye-law was one of general importance, notice of the proceedings should be given to the Local Government Board in order that the Board might, if it thought proper, appear by counsel.

Hohler (Joseph with him), for the appellant.—The bye-law is ultra vires and unreasonable. Section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, empowered urban authorities to make bye-laws with respect to the various matters mentioned in the section, including cesspools in connection with buildings. Under section 276 the Local Government Board might invest rural authorities with the powers of urban authorities as to making bye-laws. It is clear that the bye-laws to be made under section 157 only applied to future, and not to existing buildings. Then, by section 23, sub-section 1, of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, section 157 of the Act of 1875 is extended so as empower urban authorities to make bye-laws with respect to certain additional matters; and section 23, sub-section 2, provides that bye-laws made under section 157, as extended by section 23, sub-section 1, of the Act of 1890, may be made so as to affect buildings erected before the times mentioned in section 157. Up to this point there is nothing in section 23 affecting rural authorities, but sub-section 3 of section 23 provides that the provisions of section 157, "as amended" by the Act of 1890, so far as they relate to bye-laws with respect to certain matters, including cesspools in connection with buildings, shall be "extended" so as to empower rural authorities to make bye-laws in respect to the said matters. The words "as amended" refer to the additional matters brought in by sub-section 1 of section 23, and not to the provisions of sub-section 2, applying the bye-laws of urban authorities to old buildings. Sub-section 3 expressly mentions all the powers which are to be "extended" to rural authorities. The provisions of sub-section 2 are not mentioned, and are therefore not included, and the powers of rural authorities with respect to bye-laws are confined to making bye-laws which shall affect only such buildings as were erected before the times mentioned in section 157 of the Act of 1875. He also contended that the bye-law was unreasonable on various grounds which are referred to in the judgment of Wright, J.

He cited Waite v. Garston Local Board, 16 W. R. 78, L. R. 3 Q. B. 5; Heap v. Burnley Union, 32 W. R. 661, 12 Q. B. D. 617; Tucker v. Rees, 25 J. P. 789, 9 W. R. C. L. Dig. 51.

Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G., and H. Sutton, for the Local Government Board.—This bye-law was sanctioned by the Local Government Board under the powers contained in section 184 of the Public Health Act, 1875. It is contended that it is unreasonable, because it provides for a fixed distance within which cesspools are not to be constructed. It is obvious that the line must be drawn somewhere, and the question as to what shall be the distance is eminently one for the local authority which is conversant with the requirements of the neighbourhood.

Macmorran, Q.C., and A. Gill, for the respondent, on the question of the reasonableness of the bye-law, referred to Slattery v. Naylor, 36 W. R. 897, 13 App. Cas. 446.

Hohler replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 1.—WRIGHT, J.—In this case the question for our decision arises on a bye-law made for a rural district under the powers conferred by the Public Health Act, 1890. Certain objections have been taken to the bye-law on behalf of the appellant. In the first place it is contended that if the bye-law is properly read in connection with the rest of the bye-laws it does not apply to buildings which were in existence at the time when the bye-law was made. The answer to that contention is that the language of the bye-law is quite general. The group or bundle of bye-laws of which it forms one is headed, "With respect to water-closets, earth-closets, privies, ash-pits, and cesspools in connection with buildings." In other parts of the bye-laws, where it is intended to restrict their operation to new buildings, the expression "new buildings" is used. There is therefore no reason why the operation of this bye-law should be cut down in the manner suggested. Then it is said that the bye-law is ultra vires. This point appears to me to be wholly untenable. The Public Health Act, 1875, s. 157, sub-section 4, gave power to urban authorities to make bye-laws with respect to the drainage of closets and cesspools in connection with buildings. It seems to have been thought that that power might not extend to old buildings, and by section 23 of the Act of 1890, urban authorities are empowered to make bye-laws as to certain matters which were not included in the Act of 1875, and section 23, sub-section 2, goes on to provide that any bye-laws under section 157 of the Act of 1875, "as above extended with regard to . . . cesspools in connection with buildings . . . may be made so as to affect buildings erected before the times mentioned" in section 157. Then sub-section 3 provides that the provisions of section 157, "as amended by this Act," that is to say, extended to old buildings, shall be extended so as to empower rural authorities to make bye-laws with respect to the matters mentioned. In my opinion this section expressly confers upon rural authorities power to make bye-laws relating to old buildings. Then it is said that the bye-law is unreasonable because of the 50ft. limit; and it is pointed out that in some cases that limit will produce hardship. It is clear that public convenience requires that there should be some limit, and the limit must be fixed, and I cannot hold that 50ft. is unreasonable any more than 40ft. or 30ft.

It is also contended that the bye-law is unreasonable because it is destructive of property. It is said that in cases where there is no sewage system and a cesspool is necessary it will be impossible to have one if there is not sufficient land to allow of the cesspool being 50ft. from the building.

The answer to that argument is, that if there were already no cesspool there is no destruction of property, and if there is one, the owner need not move it. Lastly, it was suggested that the bye-law would tend to prevent the improvement of property. I doubt very much whether we can hold a bye-law unreasonable on that ground, for we are not in a position to say what is and what is not for the public interest in sanitary matters. The appeal must be dismissed.

BRUCE, J.—I am of the same opinion. At one time I had some doubt whether the bye-law was not unreasonable, but I am satisfied that it is not so. There must be some limit fixed, and I cannot say that 50ft. is an unreasonable limit. The same objections that have been raised in this case might in another case, where the limit was only 10ft., be urged with equal force.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Routh, Stacey, & Castle, for Knocker, Knocker, & Holcroft, Sevenoaks.

Solicitors for the Local Government Board, Sharpe, Parker, Pritchards, & Barham.

Solicitors for the respondents, Kays & Jones, for H. D. Wildes, West Malling.

Q. B. Div.
(Hawkins and Wright, JJ.) May 10.

REG. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.
Ex parte WEBSTER. (a.)

Metropolis—New building—Wall within 20 feet of centre of highway—Illegal structure—Application for consent after erection—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 13, sub-sections 1, 4.

By the London Building Act, 1894, s. 13, sub-section 1, no new building or structure or any part thereof shall be erected at a less distance than the prescribed distance from the centre of the highway without the consent in writing of the London County Council; and by sub-section 4 it is provided that the council may in any case where they think it expedient consent to the erection of such building at a distance less than the prescribed distance.

Held, that this consent provided for by sub-section 4 must be given in the same way as the consent to the building itself—namely, before the erection takes place—and that it therefore does not apply to a building already erected.

The court has no power to compel the council to hear and entertain an application for their consent to the retention of an illegal structure already erected.

Rule nisi for an order for a mandamus to the London County Council to hear and determine an application for their consent to the retention of a newly-erected wall within twenty feet of the centre of a highway.

The rule had been obtained by Emma Webster, a married woman, the owner of a piece of land in Pearson's-avenue, Deptford, abutting on a highway. This piece of land had not been previously built upon, but it was divided from the highway by a wooden fence. This fence, which was within twenty feet of the centre of the highway, Mrs. Webster pulled down and erected in its place a brick wall.

Subsequently she built stables on this piece of land, the foreyard being bounded by the said wall, which thus became part of the structure. The stables, being thus within twenty feet of the centre of the highway, constituted an illegal structure within the London Building Act, 1894.

A summons was taken out by the London County Council against the builder for erecting the wall without their consent, and he was convicted. The wall, however, not being pulled down, the said council then took proceedings against Mrs. Webster, the owner, for continuing penalties, and she thereupon made an application to the council for their consent to the retention of the wall under the power given them by section 13, sub-section 4.

The council refused to hear the application on the ground that they had no jurisdiction to consent to a wall already erected, whereupon she appealed to the special tribunal of appeal created under the London Building Act, 1894. When before this tribunal objection was taken that, as the council had not decided one way or another as regards the retention of the wall, there was no decision to appeal from, and this view was upheld.

The present application was made in order to compel the council to hear the application, so that, if necessary, the owner could then go before the tribunal of appeal on the merits of her case.

By section 13, sub-section 1, of the London Building Act, 1894, it is provided that "No person shall erect any new building, new structure, or any part thereof, or extend any building or structure or any part thereof in such manner that any external wall of any such building, structure, or (if there be a forecourt or other space between such external wall and the roadway) any part of the external fence or boundary of such forecourt or other space shall, without the consent in writing of the council, be in any direction less than the prescribed distance from the centre of the roadway of any street or way (being a highway)."

By sub-section 4 of the same section it is provided that "The council may in any case where they think it expedient consent to the erection, formation, or extension of any building, structure, forecourt, or space at a distance less than the prescribed distance from the centre of the roadway of any such street or way and at such distance from the centre of such roadway and subject to such conditions and terms (if any) as they may think proper to sanction. . . ."

H. Avory showed cause against the rule.—The question here is whether this court can order the London County Council to hear an application for their consent to the retention of an already existing illegal structure. The council is not bound to entertain such an application, and moreover, they have no jurisdiction to do so. The application must be made before the erection of the structure. By sub-section 1 of section 5 this wall could not be legally built without the consent of the council, as provided by sub-section 4, and it is clear that such consent should have been obtained before the wall was built. Sub-section 5 provides for the alteration or re-erection of a building, and there it is clear that the consent of the district surveyor must first be obtained before the alteration or re-building can be carried out. This rule should be discharged.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Macmorran, Q.C. (R. J. Drake with him), in support of the rule.—This court can command the council to hear Mrs. Webster's application. The council are bound to give an answer one way or the other so as to enable the applicant to appeal. This they have not done. It would be unduly restraining the enabling clause to say that the consent of the council can only be obtained before the building is erected.

HAWKINS, J.—I am of opinion that we ought not to make this rule absolute. It seems to me that we ought not to do so upon a very short and simple ground. Section 13 of the Building Act of 1894 is in these terms. No person shall erect any new building or new structure, or any part thereof, or extend any building or structure, or any part thereof, in such a manner that any external wall of any such building or structure (or if there be a forecourt or other space between such external wall and the roadway), any part of the external fence or boundary of such forecourt or other space shall, without the consent in writing of the council, be in any direction at a distance less than the prescribed distance from the centre of the roadway of any street. The Legislature, however, felt that that hard-and-fast rule might sometimes work with great injustice and hardship upon those who were about to build and make a profitable use of their land, and sub-section 4 of the same sub-section therefore, as far as I read it, was enacted to provide a remedy for any such difficulty and for the alleviation of any grievance which might be felt by reason of the restrictive powers mentioned in section 13. Accordingly it was enacted that the council may in any case where they think it expedient, consent to the formation, erection, or extension of any building at a distance less than the prescribed distance from the centre of the roadway, provided the giving of such consent by the council shall not affect the rights of owners of adjoining lands. It is evident we must read these two sub-sections together, and doing so, I cannot entertain any doubt that section 13, sub-section 1, prohibits the erection of any new building or new structure unless consent in writing has been previously given to such erection. Sub-section 4 was introduced for the purpose of enabling them to modify this positive enactment, and to give their consent to the erection, formation, or extension of any building at a distance less than the prescribed distance from the centre of the roadway. I am, however, of opinion that the modified consent they have the power to give under sub-section 4 must be given in the same way as the consent to the building itself—namely, before the erection takes place. I think, therefore, that the structure, which is admitted in its present condition to be illegal and in contravention of the provisions of the Act, must be looked upon for the purpose of this inquiry as being an illegal structure, and I do not think that sub-section 4 was intended to compel the county council to consider any matter or give any consent when the building had, without their consent, been improperly erected beyond the limited distance from the centre of the highway. I do not think we have any power by mandamus to order them to entertain such an application, and I think therefore that this rule must be discharged.

I think myself there is a good deal to be said for the reason why the matter must rest with the county council. If they were in a case of this description to grant their consent, or rather be forced to grant their consent or to entertain the question whether they would give their consent or not for the retention of a building which was already illegally built and constructed, it would be an application to legalise that which was illegal, and this they would not, to my mind, have the power to do. However, it is not necessary for me to determine that, but if we were to grant this mandamus I can see how they might be flooded with similar applications, and then (without saying in the least degree that Mrs. Webster has done that) they might be flooded with applications by persons who have run up buildings knowing perfectly well that they were doing an illegal thing in the first instance, and trusting to the good nature of the county council, or other considerations, to their giving a consent after the illegality had been committed.

I think that we ought not to make the rule absolute, but that it must be discharged.

WRIGHT, J.—I am of the same opinion. Whether the county council have or have not power to give give the consent ex post facto, it seems to me quite clear that they are under no duty to give any answer one way or the other when they are applied to ex post facto, and in my opinion the application has no legal right such as would be required to support a mandamus to call upon them to do so.

Rule discharged.

Solicitors, Blaxland; Sandom, Kersey, & Knight.

Q. B. Div. (Wills and Grantham, JJ.) April 7, 8.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. THE NEW YORK BREWERIES CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Inland revenue—Probate duty—Foreign will—English company—Registration of transfer of shares to executor of testator—Executor de son tort—"Taking possession of and administering"—55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 37—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12), s. 40.

A testator, the registered owner of shares and debentures in an English company, was domiciled and died in America. By his will, made according to the American law, these shares and debentures passed to his executors, who requested the company to transfer into their names on the register as holders, in place of the testator, one preference share, one ordinary share, and one debenture. The executors did not obtain probate of the will in England, nor did they intend doing so, and the company was aware of this. The transfer was duly registered in the books of the company in London.

Section 37 of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, provides that if any person "shall take possession of and in any manner administer any part of the personal estate and effects of any person deceased without obtaining probate of the will or letters of administration . . . within six calendar months" he shall be liable to penalties.

Held, that the company had not taken possession of and administered the deceased's estate within the meaning of that section, and that it had not so intermeddled with the estate as to constitute itself an executor de son tort and render itself liable to the penalty imposed by that section.

Information by the Attorney-General.

The defendant company was an English company incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1886.

The capital of the company was £930,000, consisting of 30,000 preference shares of £10 each, 30,000 ordinary shares of £10 each, and £330,000 mortgage debentures.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The registered office of the company was situated in the City of London.

The objects for which the company was established as defined by the memorandum of association are:

(a) To carry on business as brewers, malters, licensed victuallers, mineral water manufacturers, hotel keepers, restaurateurs, and wine and tobacco merchants, and to establish and carry on any other trade or business whatsoever which can in the opinion of the board be advantageously carried on by the company in connection with or as auxiliary to the general business of the company.

(b) To acquire upon such terms and subject to such conditions as may be arranged and either directly or through trustees and in consideration of fully paid-up shares of the company or of cash or otherwise all or any part of the property rights, powers, and privileges of the H. Clausen & Son Brewing Co. and James Flanagan, carrying on business as Flanagan, Nay, & Co., both of New York, in the United States of America, and any other brewing business in the said States.

(c) To cause the legal estate in any American business acquired by the company to be registered in the name of any American company or of any person or persons or corporation in trust for the defendant company. And other objects incidental to or connected with those above specified.

By the articles of association of the company it was among others provided that the shares shall be at the disposal of the directors, and that no person shall be recognized by the company as holding any share upon any trust, and the company shall not be bound by or recognise any equitable, contingent, future, or partial interest in any share or (except as thereby expressly provided) any other right in respect of any share except an absolute right to the entirety thereof in the registered holder.

The transmission and transfer of preference and ordinary shares in the company were dealt with by clauses 37 to 47 inclusive of the articles of association. By clause 39 it was provided that a book to be called the register of transfers shall be kept by the secretary under control of the directors. Article 43 is as follows:

"In the case of the death of a shareholder the survivor or survivors where the deceased was a joint holder and the executors or administrators of the deceased where he was a sole holder shall be the only persons recognized by the company as having any title to his shares." By article 44 any person becoming entitled to a share in consequence of the death or bankruptcy of a member may on producing such evidence of title as the directors shall require and subject as thereinafter provided either be registered himself as holder of the share or have some person nominated by him registered as transferee thereof.

And article 47 provided that—

"A person entitled to a share by transmission shall be entitled to receive, and may give a discharge for any dividends, bonuses, or other moneys payable in respect of the share."

By virtue of an agreement dated the 10th of August, 1888, and made between the H. Clausen & Son Brewing Co. and James Flanagan, carrying on business as Flanagan, Nay, & Co., of the one part, and the defendant company of the other part, the company acquired certain lands, buildings, plant, furniture, and the goodwill of H. Clausen & Son and of Flanagan, Nay, & Co., and their stock-in-trade, all which property became vested in trustees for the defendant company, and the defendant company was at the death of Harry Clausen, the younger, hereinafter mentioned, and subsequently carrying on business under the said memorandum and articles of association.

By clauses 69a and 69b of the articles of association the directors of the company had power to borrow sums not exceeding £330,000 and to secure the repayment by the issue of debentures or debenture stock of the company charged on all or any part of its property. This power was exercised, and by an indenture dated the 25th of October, 1888, the company and its trustees granted its property to trustees to hold for the benefit of the debenture-holders subject to the conditions therein expressed. The said deed provides (inter alia) that "the company, its successors, or assigns shall at all times hereafter keep an office or agency in the City of London and a book or books therein which shall serve as a register of the said debentures, in which shall be entered the name and address of the holder of any of the said debentures and the number of every of the said debentures held by him."

The form of the debentures and the conditions endorsed thereon were varied by a subsequent deed dated the 12th of December, 1888, and the company charged with the payment thereof the whole of its real and personal property in the United Kingdom, and such other property as could be lawfully charged.

The conditions endorsed on the debentures provided inter alia as follows:

"The principal moneys and interest hereby secured will be paid at the registered office of the company, or at some bank in London or Westminster, to be from time to time appointed by the company and notified to the registered shareholders."

"Any notice may be given to the registered holder hereof by sending it through the post in a prepaid letter addressed to such holder at his registered address, or if he has no registered address within the United Kingdom, at the registered office of the company."

Henry Clausen the younger, a person domiciled in New York, in the United States of America, died on the 28th of December, 1893, having, by a will made according to the law of his domicil, appointed H. W. Schmidt and P. V. Stocky, both of New York, his executors.

On the 19th of January, 1894, letters testamentary of the estate of said Henry Clausen were granted by the Surrogates Court of the city and county of New York to the said H. W. Schmidt and P. V. Stocky.

At the date of his death the said Henry Clausen was the registered holder in the books of the defendant company in London of certain shares in and debentures of the defendant, the New York Breweries Co. (Limited), of the nominal value of £42,210—namely, 1,747 preference shares of £10 each, 274 ordinary shares of £10 each, and 220 debentures of £100 each. There was not, and never had been, any register of shares or register of debentures of the defendant company elsewhere than in London.

The will of the said Henry Clausen the younger was not proved in England, nor was administration or representation to his estate in any form granted or taken out in England.

At the request of H. Clausen's executors the defendant company transferred, in the books of the company in London, one of such preference shares, one of such ordinary shares, and one of such debentures into the names of the executors. The defendant company also, at the request of the executors, paid to them dividends on shares which had become due after Henry Clausen's death, and interest on debentures which had become due before his death. The defendant company and the directors thereof when they so dealt with and disposed of the said shares and debenture and paid the said interest and dividends knew that no representation to the said Henry Clausen had been taken out in this country.

The information alleged that by acting as aforesaid the defendant company had in fact taken possession of and administered the shares and debenture, interest, and dividends so transferred, paid, and dealt with as aforesaid, being part of the personal estate of the said Henry Clausen situate and capable of being dealt with in England, and became an executor de son tort thereof, and also became liable to the penalties imposed by section 37 of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and by section 40 of 44 Vict. c. 12; and that the defendant company became and was liable, and ought to account to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for the value of the personal estate of the said Henry Clausen in this country, and to pay such duty as would have been payable if probate or administration to the said Henry Clausen in this country had been duly obtained.

The value of the said shares and debentures belonging to the said Henry Clausen at his death was upwards of £10,000.

The information prayed that it might be declared that the defendant company had become and was liable to deliver to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue an account of the shares and debentures in the said company which were registered in the names of the said Henry Clausen the younger at his death, as hereinbefore mentioned, and of the dividends and interest thereon, being respectively personal estate of the said Henry Clausen deceased, and of the value of the said estate, and to pay such duty (including estate duty under section 5 of the Act 52 Vict. c. 7) as would have been payable if probate or administration had been duly obtained in England in respect of the personal estate of the said Henry Clausen, and has become and is liable to the penalties imposed by section 37 of the Act 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and by section 40 of the Act 44 Vict. c. 12 by administering the said personal estate without obtaining probate or letters of administration.

Sir Richard Webster, A.G. (Vaughan Hawkins with him), for the Crown.—The defendant company is an English company in every sense within the meaning of the decision in the case of San Paulo (Brazilian) Railway Co. v. Carter, 44 W. R. 336, [1896] A. C. 31. The head office, where the register is kept, is in England, and the shares and debentures are therefore located there, and are taxable in this country: Attorney-General v. Higgins, 2 H. & N. 339, 5 W. R. C. L. Dig. 227. The company has become an executor de son tort by transferring the shares and debenture into the names of the executors and by paying them dividends and interest. This intermeddling is sufficient to render the company subject to the liability to pay probate and estate duty. The company has taken possession of and administered part of the personal estate of the deceased within the meaning of section 37 of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and is therefore liable to the penalties provided for in that section. The company also failed to obtain probate within section 40 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881. The Crown is therefore entitled to the declaration it asks for.

Moulton, Q.C., (Asquith, Q.C., A. M. Bremner, F. Gore-Browne, and Roskill with him), for the defendant company.—There is no case against the company, and the Crown has no claim against it as an executor de son tort or under any statute. What the company did does not amount to a taking possession of or administering the shares and debenture. It cannot be said that by registering a transfer of the shares possession has been taken of them. That is a mere ministerial act recognizing the transfer of the shares to the executors. These shares passed by the will of the testator to the executors, and therefore belong to them, probate or no probate. By American law the company can be compelled to register the title, and it is no answer to say that no probate has been taken out in England. Section 37 was not aimed at persons in the position of the company. The company could not obtain probate or take out letters of administration or act as an executor. The words in section 37 must be construed in their ordinary meaning. There is nothing in section 11 of 47 & 48 Vict. c. 62 to prevent the company from handing over to an owner property that belongs to him. Executors are not bound to take out probate until six months after the death of the testator, and there is nothing to prevent them before doing so from receiving payment of a debt of the testator: In re Stevens, Cooke v. Stevens, ante, p. 284, [1897] 1 Ch. 422, see judgment of North, J., at pp. 429, 430. The words "take possession of and administer" only refer to such acts as an executor or administrator could perform: Peters v. Leeder, 47 L. J. Q. B. 573, 26 W. R. Dig. 89. As to the question of dividends and interest accruing after the death of the testator, they could never have been part of his estate; they belong to the executors to whom the shares and debenture passed.

Asquith, Q.C., followed.

Sir R. Webster, A.G., in reply, cited the following cases: In re Commercial Bank, Corporation of India and the East, 18 W. R. 411, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 314; Sharland v. Mildon, 5 Hare 469; Paull v. Simpson, 9 Q. B. 365; Bodger v. Arch, 10 Ex. 333, 3 W. R. C. L. Dig. 183.

WILLS, J.—I am of opinion that our judgment must be for the respondents. The claim of the Crown arises under section 37 of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, which provides that "if any person shall take possession of, and in any manner administer any part of the personal estate and effects of any person deceased, without obtaining probate of the will or letters of administration" he shall forfeit £100. The question here is whether the defendants have taken possession of and have administered part of the estate of the testator. There are two Acts which are relied upon by the Crown as constituting such "taking possession of." I need not trouble myself with the further words as to administration, because if they took possession they certainly administered and dealt with the property, and therefore the real question is whether they took possession either of the shares or of the interest on debentures which had accrued at the time when the testator died. It seems to me that the "taking possession" which is referred to in section 37 refers to some act which, if the person had been an executor or an administrator he could have done in order to get hold of property which belonged to the deceased person. What the defendants did in this instance appears to have been a recognition of the title of the executors who had not obtained English probate and a transfer of the property into their names. I do not think that is "taking possession"; I think it is merely a ministerial act acknowledging the title of the executors. It was an act that could not have been done by the executors, and certainly would not be "taking possession" within the meaning of this section. It seems to me to be much more analogous to what they did in respect to the next matter, which is relied upon—namely, the handing over to the American executors of the interest which had accrued upon the debentures at the time the testator died, because, as was pointed out by counsel, any dividends which accrued after that time never belonged to the testator, and could not have been included in the inventory of his property for the purpose of the estate duty or probate duty, or anything else connected with the administration, and therefore any dealing with it could not have been "taking possession" of a part of the estate of the deceased.

But now, what did the respondents do? They simply paid to the executors money which belonged to them as executors. Now, it is very old law that an executor may act in connection with the property of the deceased, and that people may deal with him as an executor before he has proved the will at all, and we cannot have a stronger illustration of that than the fact that an executor who has not taken out probate is entitled to sue, and the only condition is that, if he has to come into court to prove his title, he must produce probate, because there is no other recognized means of proof. This shows that the executor's title, as has been laid down over and over again from the earliest times, does not depend upon the probate, but upon the will. If this case depended only on that old law, it could hardly be seriously argued that the defendants had done anything wrong, or anything that was like a wrongful intermeddling with the property for the purpose of administering it, by paying a debt which they were bound to pay to the executors, although, if they chose to contest the executors' title, and if they drove them to prove it in a court of law, the executors would be obliged to take out probate before they could recover.

Now, has any legislation altered that very old law? Reliance is placed upon section 11 of the Revenue Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 62), which says that the production of a grant of probate or letters of administration "shall be necessary to establish the right to recover or receive any part of the personal estate and effects of any deceased person situate in the United Kingdom." Now, if that was a statute which had been passed before there was any definite recognition, deeply seated in the law, of the right of the executor to deal with the estate of the deceased before taking out probate, it might, perhaps, be said that the Legislature meant that the executor should not have a right to do anything with the property of the deceased before he had taken out probate; but that is an Act of Parliament which was passed after it had been the law for centuries that a man could deal as executor with the property of a testator without taking out probate, unless he wanted the intervention of the courts to help him. I cannot think that, by an expression of that kind in an Act passed to establish and to facilitate the collection of duties, it was ever intended to make such a radical change as that in the law of England, because it would introduce such intolerable inconvenience, and might work such intolerable wrong, that it might make it impossible for the most necessary steps for the protection of the property of the deceased person to be taken within a reasonable time, because oftentimes probate cannot be taken out and duties cannot be paid until complicated questions are settled. I think what was meant was that, where a person has to establish his right to sue as executor, and to receive the property in his capacity as executor, he must produce probate. That comes simply to an affirmation of the old law, or perhaps it goes a little further than that, because it gives a person who disputes the executor's right to recover or receive property the right to require the production of probate before it can be said that the executor's right is established. I do not think section 11 was ever meant to apply where there was no occasion to establish the executor's right, because nobody disputed it.

Unfortunately, in this case the result is that these American executors escape paying English duty. Well, I cannot help that. It seems to me that section 37 of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, does not make it an offence for a person to deal with an executor as executor; it makes it an offence on the part of the executor or other person to take possession of or administer any part of a deceased's personal property without having taken out probate, and it provides within itself a very appropriate penalty which is to follow, and defines what it is to be. It does not make it a crime or an offence against the law to pay an executor; it only makes it an offence on his part to administer without taking out probate, and seeing that he has six months' grace within which he is at liberty to take out probate it is quite clear that it is not meant to prohibit all action of this kind on his part, but only if he does not afterwards take out probate, and possibly, also, if he does not intend to take out probate. I should be very glad if proper means could be found for making these New York gentlemen pay our English duty, but with that I have nothing to do. All I can say is, that it appears to me that the defendants have not really intermeddled with the administration of this estate. They have simply done that which the common law of England gives them the right to do—namely, to pay an executor without asking him to prove his title by the production of probate. It seems to me, therefore, that the case for the Crown fails, and that our judgment must be for the respondents.

GRANTHAM, J.—I am of the same opinion. The learned Attorney-General argued this case exactly as if the company were the executors, and the whole of his argument applied only to the secretary of this company as if he had been appointed executor or had the power of an executor. But when we come to look at the position in which the company was to the testator and the executors, the company was merely in the position of a debtor to the testator, and under an obligation to the testator to do something which the testator or the executors of the testator could compel them to do.

Now, I have looked in vain through the various sections of the Probate Acts to find any power prohibiting a person in the position of a debtor to the estate of a deceased person from paying his debt to the executors. It may be that the Crown will lose the duty. I confess I do not see that the defendants are bound to pay this duty themselves, but I think that as an English company there is another liability upon them, and that is to uphold the law as constituted in this country, because as was very frankly admitted by the learned counsel for the English company they ought not to register a transfer of shares without the production of probate. I suggested that that was the universal practice with regard to English companies, and with regard to shares held by English testators, and they said that the law was exactly the same and that the practice was exactly the same with regard to themselves, and it seems to me, therefore, that their duty is not to register these shares and not to pay over this money, but to say to the American executor, "We are bound by our law and by the constitution of this company, and we cannot register these shares without the production of probate." I cannot for a moment think that they would be under any legal liability whatever to the American executors if they acted in that way. I do not know that I need add anything further to what has fallen from my learned brother, in which I entirely concur, except to say this, that throughout all these sections you find that the language refers to persons administering or who ought to administer the estate as being liable. This company are not administering the estate in any way; they are not the persons who ought to administer the estate; they are not the persons who ought to take out probate, and therefore under those circumstances I cannot see how they can be liable to the penalties which the Crown seeks to enforce against them.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the defendants, Burn & Berridge.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — May 21.

In re HUNTER.
HOOD v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL. (a.)

Will—Construction—Charity—Gift to purchase advowsons—Valid charitable gift—General charitable intention.

A testator gave the proceeds of conversion of his residuary, real, and personal estate to special trustees upon certain trusts for the promotion of "true Protestant and Church of England principles," which he explained as being the principles known as Evangelical.

Held, upon the construction of the whole will, that there was such a general charitable intention as made the gift a good charitable gift, notwithstanding difficulties raised by the language in which the trusts were declared.

Semble, the trustees under such a will could be restrained by injunction from applying any of the trust property in the promotion of views inconsistent with those prescribed by the testator.

Decision of Romer, J., reversed.

This was an appeal by the Attorney-General from a decision of Romer, J. (ante, p. 344).

Sir R. Webster, A.G., and Ingle Joyce (Dibdin with them), for the appeal.

Levett, Q.C., and G. P. C. Lawrence, for the respondents.

William C. Druce, for the trustees.

Ingle Joyce replied.

LINDLEY, L.J., examined the provisions of the will and continued: It appears to me almost impossible to read that will and see what the testator has said, and not come to the conclusion that he has expressed an intention to devote his residuary estate to purposes which by the law of this court are termed charitable. He has not said in so many words that the property, the capital and income of which may be applied for or towards the purchase of advowsons or presentations, is to be held upon any particular trusts; but the question is whether you cannot get that out of his will. Suppose the trustees were about to apply part of the residuary estate in the purchase of advowsons for the avowed purpose of appointing a clergyman of the Church of England of a Ritualistic tendency, would not that be a flagrant breach of trust? In my judgment it would, and I think the Attorney-General could get an injunction to stop it. I cannot come to the conclusion that merely because the words do not exactly fit there is an intestacy here. The testator has dedicated this residuary estate to the purposes of charity. That gets rid of the point which might and would arise if we came to the conclusion that the first of these clauses was not a good charitable disposition—viz., whether the gift here would be void if it were not charitable. I think there is a good deal in Mr. Ingle Joyce's suggestion that the gift is so definite that even if not charitable it would be good. I say no more about that point now. It will be very deserving of consideration when it arises in any case so as to require decision. It does not really arise here.

I think the appeal must be allowed.

LOPES and RIGBY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Hare & Co.; West, King, Adams, & Co.; Hollams & Co.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, A. L. Smith, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Feb. 15, 16.

SEAWARD v. PATERSON. (a.)

Contempt of court—Injunction—Breach by person not enjoined—Jurisdiction to commit.

A person not himself included in an injunction, or a party to the action, who knowingly aids and abets a defendant in a breach of it, may be committed for contempt.

The plaintiff demised to the defendant by lease a portion of the house No. 53, Fetter-lane, in the City of London, for twenty-one years from Christmas, 1895. The lease contained a covenant by the lessee that he would not during the term do or suffer any thing which might interfere with the full and quiet enjoyment by the lessor or his under-tenants of adjoining or neighbouring premises, or which should be or grow to be an annoyance, nuisance, damage, inconvenience, disturbance, or injury to the lessor or his superior landlord, or his or their tenants, or any of them, and that he would not during the term use the premises or suffer them to be used otherwise than for the purpose of a private club.

Subsequently the defendant permitted exhibitions of boxing to take place upon the demised premises, which the plaintiff alleged constituted a breach of the covenant.

The plaintiff brought this action in February, 1896, claiming an injunction to restrain the defendant from violating the covenant, and on the 15th of July, 1896, North, J., granted an injunction which followed the terms of the covenant.

On the 9th and 21st of October, 1896, the defendant, assisted by George Sheppard and Edwin Murray, who were his servants or agents, permitted further boxing entertainments to take place on the premises. The plaintiff thereupon moved that the defendant, Sheppard, and Murray should be committed for contempt in disobeying and aiding and assisting in disobeying the order of the court.

North, J., held that there was evidence that Sheppard and Murray knew of the injunction before the exhibitions last mentioned took place, and committed them as well as the defendant.

Against this decision Murray appealed.

Seward Brice, Q.C., Stephen Lynch, and Ker Kays, for the appellant.—The injunction did not apply to the appellant, and he cannot therefore be committed for a breach of it. The respondent would require, first, to obtain a separate injunction against him: Iveson v. Harris, 7 Ves. 251; In re Bahama Islands, [1893] A. C. 138, 41 W. R. Dig. 51. This is not a contempt of a criminal nature, as in In re Freston, 31 W. R. 804, 11 Q. B. D. 545. The right to take advantage of a contempt of this kind is personal to the party who has obtained the injunction, as is shown by the fact that it may be raised by him: Roberts v. Albert Bridge Co., L. R. 8 Ch. App. 753; Harvey v. Hall, 21 W. R. 783, L. R. 16 Eq. 324; In re Davies, 37 W. R. 57, 21 Q. B. D. 236. This process should not be resorted to if there is another pertinent remedy. There is another remedy—viz., ejectment. A person does not aid and abet in a boxing competition merely by being present at it: Reg. v. Coney, 30 W. R. 678, 8 Q. B. D. 534.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Methold, for the respondent, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This case, like all cases of the kind, is one of importance. The court should always be chary about committing people for contempt. It should exercise a degree of caution proportionate to the power which it possesses. Unless it is to become useless it must deal with every such case in the interest of the public. I do not regard this case, however, as being near the line. It seems to me to be a plain, straightforward case. On the 15th of February, 1896, North, J., granted an injunction restraining Paterson from infringing the covenant in his lease. The injunction follows the general language of the covenant, but the real nuisance complained of and enjoined was the disturbance caused by boxing performances which Paterson allowed to take place on the premises demised. Murray was present in court during the proceedings. He says that he left before the injunction was actually granted; but there can be no doubt that he knew the result. Yet arrangements were made for having these performances repeated in September and October, and on the 9th and 21st of October some more of these performances took place. An application was then made to North, J., to commit Paterson for breach of the injunction. Paterson said that Murray was the person who had got up the performances and was really responsible for them. Proceedings were then taken to commit Murray, who was not a party to the action.

Now, consider the principles on which the jurisdiction of the court to commit Murray depends. He, like everyone else, is bound not to interfere with the course of justice. The case against him is not that he infringed the injunction, but that he aided and abetted in treating the order of the court with contempt. If he has done that, it is idle to say that he cannot be attached for contempt. Mr. Seward Brice contends that there is no such jurisdiction, and that it would be necessary to bring a separate action against Murray. As an old equity practitioner this contention caused me no little surprise. It is a familiar principle to my brother Rigby and myself that no one can be allowed to violate an order of the court; and if authority is required in support of it it is to be found in Lewes v. Morgan, 5 Price 518; Lord Wellesley v. Earl Mornington, 11 Beav. 181; Avory v. Andrews, 30 W. R. 564; and Day v. Longhurst, 41 W. R. 283. Mr. Seward Brice bases an argument against the jurisdiction on Iveson v. Harris, 7 Ves., where Lord Eldon, at p. 256, says: "I have no conception that it is competent to this court to hold a man bound by an injunction who is not a party in the cause for the purpose of the cause. The old practice was that he must be brought into court, so as, according to the ancient laws and usages of the country, to be made a subject of the writ." What Lord Eldon is there addressing himself to is the persons who are bound by the injunction, not the persons who assist others in infringing an injunction. There is a wide distinction between a motion to commit for breach of an injunction and a motion to commit for contempt in obstructing the course of justice. The difference is very marked. In the one case the proceeding is taken against the party enjoined with a view to enforce the injunction for the benefit of the person who has got the order; in the other case it is taken against a person, whether a party to the proceedings or not, who has been guilty of a criminal contempt in violating an order of the court, and who, on the ground of public interest, cannot be suffered to do so with impunity. The difference between the two cases is well known. As regards the jurisdiction of the court to commit for the latter kind of contempt I entertain no doubt whatever.

I agree that if I could accept Murray's suggestion that he was present at these performances as a mere spectator, I could not come to the conclusion that his conduct had amounted to a contempt of court. But I cannot, on the evidence, believe that he was there simply as a spectator. I have not the least doubt that he was there, not as a mere spectator, but as a party interested. My belief is that he was at the bottom of the whole thing. It may be that he thought that these boxing matches would not amount to a breach of the injunction. Whether that be so or not, there can be no doubt that they do constitute a flagrant violation of it. It is a gross case of contempt.

My conclusion is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I also come to the same conclusion. The real question was whether Murray, on the 9th or 21st of October, 1896, or on either of those days, was party or privy with Paterson, or aided and abetted Paterson, in committing a breach of the injunction of the 15th of July, 1896. As regards the law, I have no doubt that this court has jurisdiction to commit for contempt a person, whether bound by it or not, who aids and abets in committing a breach of an injunction. The authorities already cited—viz., Lewes v. Morgan, Lord Wellesley v. Earl Mornington, and Avory v. Andrews—are amply sufficient to establish this proposition.

I now come to the question whether it is clear on the evidence that Murray has been guilty of a violation of the injunction. Unless I am satisfied of this I should certainly decline to be a party to sending him to prison. I feel no doubt, however, that the evidence is quite sufficient to establish his complicity in the offence. [His lordship here reviewed the evidence.] Can it be said in the face of this evidence that Murray was at these meetings in the capacity of a spectator only? In Reg. v. Coney it is laid down that the mere fact of a man being a spectator at a prize fight did not make him an aider and abettor in the proceedings, and in that decision I entirely concur. But here the evidence shows that Murray was not present as a spectator only, but that he was aiding and abetting in a breach of the injunction.

I am of opinion that the decision of the court below should be affirmed.

RIGBY, L.J.—After the able analysis of the evidence which has been given by Smith, L.J., I need not again state the facts of the case. I will content myself with making a few remarks on Mr. Seward Brice's argument as to the jurisdiction of the court in matters of this kind. His contention appeared to me to amount to this, that the court has no jurisdiction to commit for contempt by way of punishment, but only to secure a plaintiff in his rights. So far as I am aware there is no case in which that has ever been suggested. The dictum of Lord Eldon in Iveson v. Harris, already referred to, seems to me to have nothing whatever to do with this question. Undoubtedly he was right in saying that the court must be careful to consider to whom an injunction applies, and must not bring in people whom it was never meant to enjoin. That, however, is not at all relevant to the present case. That there is a jurisdiction to punish for contempt of court is undoubted. It is founded on the good, not of any party to the proceedings, but of the public at large, whose interest it is that the orders of the court should not be disregarded, and that people should not be allowed to assist in the breach of them—that is, in committing a contempt of court. In In re Bahama Islands, [1893] A. C. 138, 41 W. R. Dig. 51, the question of contempt of court was discussed at great length. In that case the Privy Council supported the view that the court has a punitive jurisdiction in cases of contempt, for they held that the prerogative of the Crown in such cases extends to the remission of punitive sentences. It is not the practice for the representatives of the Crown to interfere in cases of committal for contempt where the contempt consists in refusing to do what is right towards a party litigant, and that class of case is not dealt with by the Privy Council in the authority just cited. The two cases are easily distinguishable, but the court has jurisdiction in the former case no less than in the latter.

Mr. Seward Brice further contends that this jurisdiction can be exercised only for the benefit of the plaintiff. It is no doubt true that, in cases of this sort, the court does not act of itself, but upon information given by a party to an action. But when once the matter is brought before the court, it acts upon its own jurisdiction, and without regard to the person who has brought the matter before it. The right is not the private right of that person, and cannot be waived by him. I have no doubt as to the existence of the jurisdiction; and I am equally satisfied that this is a case in which it ought to be exercised. The aiding and abetting by Murray in the breach of the injunction appears to me to have been both wilful and reprehensible.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Norris & Son; Proudfoot & Chaplin.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. — May 21.

HESTON AND ISLEWORTH URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. GROUT. (a.)

Local government—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 151, 257—Private Streets Improvement Expenses Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 25-34—Effect of adoption of Act—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 38.

A notice given under the 151*st section of the Public Health Act*, 1875, is not invalidated by the adoption of the Private Streets Improvements Expenses Act, 1892, before the work is actually carried out.

Adjourned summons.

The summons asked (1) a declaration that under and by virtue of section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the sum of £157 14s. 10d., being the amount of the proportion of the expenses of sewering, levelling, kerbing, channelling, paving, metalling, and making good a certain street called Prince Regent-road, Hounslow, with interest at four per cent. and costs, is charged on Gloucester House, High-street, Hounslow, and that such charge is entitled to priority over any other mortgage or charge upon the said hereditaments; (2) an inquiry as to the existence of such incumbrances; (3) a sale to enforce such charge; and (4) a receiver.

The plaintiffs, the sanitary authority for the district, took steps to sewer a street, and after obtaining an estimate on the 30th of October, 1891, gave the defendant notice requiring him to carry out the work. Owing to delay caused by the requirements of the Local Government Board before sanctioning a loan, the works were not carried out until October, 1895.

On the 27th of June, 1896, the Private Streets Improvements Act, 1892, was adopted.

Section 24 of the Private Streets Works Act, 1892, is: "All powers given to a local authority under this Act shall be deemed to be in addition to and not in derogation of any other powers conferred upon such local authority by any Act of Parliament, law, or custom, and such other power may be exercised in the same manner as if this Act had not been passed."

Section 25: "Neither sections 150, 151, and 152 of the Public Health Act, 1875, nor section 41 of the Public Health Amendment Act, 1890, shall apply to any district a part of a district in which this Act is in force."

Section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, so far as material is:

"(2) Where this Act or any Act passed after the commencement of this Act repeals any other enactment, then, unless the contrary intention appears, the repeal shall not

"(a) Revive anything not in force or existing at the time at which the repeal takes effect; or

"(b) Affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed, or anything duly done or suffered under any enactment so repealed; or

"(c) Affect any right, privilege, obligation, or liability acquired, accrued, or incurred under any enactment so repealed; or

"(d) Affect any penalty, forfeiture, or punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed against any enactment so repealed; or

"(e) Affect any investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment as aforesaid;

"And any such investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy may be instituted, continued, or enforced, and any such penalty, forfeiture, or punishment may be imposed as if the repealing Act had not been passed."

Warmington, Q.C., Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Martin W. Smith, for plaintiffs.—The defendant on service of notice became liable to do the works, or to pay a due proportion. The suggestion is that section 25 of the Private Streets Works Act, 1892, on the adoption of that Act, caused the notice under the Public Health Act, 1875, to cease to have effect. But this is prevented by section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889. [They cited Felken v. Berridge, 15 C. B. N. S. 257, 12 W. R. C. L. Dig. 80; Barnes v. Eddleston, 1 Ex. D. 67, 24 W. R. Dig. 164.] The other point taken is abandonment, but that must be established by notice.

Macmorran, Q.C., and Ribton, for the defendant.—Notice to do certain Acts was given in 1891. In 1894, being aware of the adoption of the new Act, the defendant concluded that the old notice so long unacted upon was abandoned. The Act of 1892 alters rights, and not procedure only.

(a.) Reported by G. B. HAMILTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They cited Abbott v. Minister for Lands, [1895] A. C. 425, 43 W. R. Dig. 123.

NORTH, J.—This case is quite clear. The plaintiffs are the sanitary authority. Under section 151 of the Public Health Act, 1875, they took steps for sewering a street. An estimate was made, and on the 30th of October, 1891, notice was sent to the defendant requiring him, as owner of the premises described, to carry out the works. The three months expired on the 30th of January, 1892, and the defendant did not do the works. The plaintiffs, under section 151, had authority to do the works, but they did not commence them until 1895. It is said that the notice had been abandoned, but the evidence shows that the plaintiffs had no idea of abandoning the works. They had no money in hand, and, being unwilling to execute the works out of the rates, proposed to raise the money by loan. They applied accordingly to the Local Government Board, who directed one or two inquiries, and some time was taken up before the Board was satisfied. It was not until 1894 that all these difficulties were got over, and the work was done in October, 1895. The defendant let the time for disputing his liability pass, and the sanction of the Board was given in November, 1894. On the 27th of June, 1894, the Act of 1892 was adopted, coming into force upon the 1st of August. What was the position of the parties at that date? The rights created by the notice were kept alive by the provisions of the Interpretation Act, 1889. Section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, was repealed by the Act of 1892. Even assuming this to be the case, by section 24 of the later Act all powers are additional. Here proceedings had been taken under the Public Health Act, 1875, and proper notice was given. The defendant had a valid notice to do the work, and the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief they ask.

Solicitors, H. R. Peake; Woodbridge & Sons.

Chan. Div. North, J. April 13.

In re HANNAM.
HADDESLEY v. HANNAM. (a.)

Will—Class—Postponement of distribution—Substitutional gift—Death before class ascertained.

A testator, after giving a life estate to his widow, gave his residue "to my brothers and sisters in equal shares and proportions, the lawful child or children of any deceased brother or sister taking his, her, or their deceased parent's share."

Held, that the children of a brother who died after the date of the will, but before the testator, could not take.

Thornhill v. Thornhill, 4 Madd. 377, followed.

Motion.

A testator, by his will dated the 8th of June, 1863, gave, devised, and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion and directed the proceeds to be held upon trust to pay the income to his wife for her life provided she should so long continue his widow, and after her death or marriage in trust for the testator's children who, being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or, being daughters, should attain that age or marry.

The will then proceeded: "And I hereby declare that in case there shall be no child of mine who, being a son, shall attain twenty-one years or, being a daughter, shall attain that age or marry, the said trustees or trustee shall, from the death of my wife or her marrying again, and such default or failure of issue which shall last happen, hold the said stocks funds, shares, debentures, securities, and rents, including any accumulations, in trust to pay the rents, dividends, and annual proceeds thereof to my dear mother for her life; and after her decease to sell and dispose of any real estate or any personal estate that may remain unsold, and to transfer and pay the said trust premises and the dividends and annual proceeds thereof unto my brothers and sisters in equal shares and proportions, the lawful child or children of any deceased brother or sister taking his, her, or their deceased parent's share."

The testator died on the 3rd of March, 1896, having outlived his mother and all his children.

He had nine brothers and sisters, three of whom died in his lifetime without issue, and another of whom died before the date of the will leaving issue. One brother, Richard Fitzwilliam Hannam, died after the date of the will, but in the testator's lifetime, leaving three children.

He attested the will, as did Thomas Hannan, who died without issue during the widow's lifetime, but after the testator's death.

The summons was heard in chambers on the 8th of March, 1897, when North, J., declared that, subject to the widow's interest, the residuary estate was divisible in equal shares among the brothers and sisters living at the testator's death other than Thomas Hannam, to the exclusion of such of the brothers and sisters as died in the testator's lifetime and of the children of any such brothers or sisters, and that the shares of the brothers and sisters taking under that declaration were liable to be divested in the event of their dying during the lifetime of the widow.

The children of Richard Fitzwilliam Hannam moved to vary so much of the order as excluded them.

Vernon Smith, Q.C., and Boome.—This is a gift to a class of parents with a substitutional gift to the children of parents dying before the period of distribution. Children of parents who die after the will, but before the testator are entitled to take: Theobald Wills, 4th ed., p. 541; Jarman on Wills, 5th ed., 1577; Smith v. Smith, 8 Sim. 353; Jones v. Frewin, 12 W. R. 369; Habergham v. Ridehalgh, 18 W. R. 427, L. R. 9 Eq. 395.

Macnaghten.—The cases cited can be distinguished, and do not bear out the text writers.

Fellows.—The cases is covered by Thornhill v. Thornhill, 4 Madd. 377. This case is said to have been overruled in Collins v. Johnson, 8 Sim. 356*n*, but there the gift was to individuals by name. See, too, Ive v. King, 16 Beav. 46, p. 53; King v. Cleaveland (No. 1), 26 Beav. 26, pp. 31, 32, where Lord Romilly says that where the original gift is to a class the gift over does not operate if the deceased object predeceases the testator.

Vernon Smith replied.

NORTH, J., read the will and stated his reasons for the conclusion arrived at in chambers, and said: It is said that there are certain cases which ought to induce me to take a different view. First of all, however, there is Thornhill v. Thornhill, which is clearly in point and undistinguishable. It is said that it has been overruled directly and impliedly. Smith v. Smith was not a case at all like the present. It is true that Shadwell, V.C., said: "I think that the decision in Thornhill v. Thornhill is wrong." No reason is given for that opinion, but it was stated by counsel in argument that Thornhill v. Thornhill had been overruled by Sir C. C. Pepys in the case of Collins v. Johnson. But that case was decided upon the construction of an involved clause about residue, and was not in the slightest degree in variance with Thornhill v. Thornhill. Jones v. Frewin was a case something like the present. The judgment is very shortly reported, but as I understand it Lord Hatherley held the gift was not a class gift at all. In the present case I find it quite impossible to say that a gift to my brothers and sisters in equal shares and proportions is a gift to individuals and not a gift to a class. In Habergham v. Ridehalgh there was a gift to certain persons, tenants for life with remainder, in a particular case, to their children, and in that case the death of the tenant for life in the lifetime of the testator did not prevent the remainder in favour of the children of that tenant for life from taking effect.

(a.) Reported by G. B. HAMILTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The result is that I do not find Thornhill v. Thornhill impeached in any way, although Mr. Jarman in his valuable work says that it has not been favourably received. Sir John Romilly expressed a clear opinion on the point in Ive v. King and King v. Cleaveland (No. 1), and expressed an opinion in favour of the view taken in Thornhill v. Thornhill.

I must adhere to the view I took in chambers, and dismiss the motion with costs.

Solicitors, Swann & Co., for Wm. Newton, Newark, Collyer-Bristow, Russell, Hill, & Co., for Haddelsey & Sons, Caistor.

Chan. Div. }
Kekewich, J. } May 15.

In re BATT'S SETTLED ESTATES AND THE SETTLED ESTATES ACT, 1877. (a.)

Married woman—Settlement—Petition—Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 18), s. 50—Examination of married woman — Affidavit of no settlement — Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 71), ss. 1, 5.

The separate examination under section 50 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, is no longer necessary in the case of a married woman (party to a petition under that Act for confirming a contract of sale) who was married before 1883, but acquired her interest in the settled hereditaments after that date, and an affidavit of no settlement will not be required.

In re Standish, 25 W. R. 8, followed.

Petition.

This was a petition for an order confirming a conditional contract of sale.

Upon the hearing of the petition it appeared that one of the petitioners was a married woman who was married before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, but who acquired her beneficial interest in the property after the Act.

Owing to the peculiar nature of the limitations affecting the property, a sale could not be effected under the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, and the present application under the Settled Estates Act, 1877, was rendered necessary.

W. S. Eastwood, for the petition.—I submit that in the circumstances the separate examination of the married woman under section 50 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, is not necessary: Riddell v. Errington, 32 W. R. 680, 26 Ch. D. 220; In re Harris, 33 W. R. 393, 28 Ch. D. 171; and the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 1 and 5. I also submit that an affidavit of no settlement by the married woman is not necessary: In re Standish, 25 W. R. 8.

Ingpen, for the purchaser.

Methold, amicus curiæ, informed the court that he had been counsel on petitions when a similar question arose and the separate examination was not required.

KEKEWICH, J.—It is most desirable that a uniform practice should prevail where a question of title is involved. Having regard to the cases cited and the instances referred to, I come to the conclusion that the examination of the married woman is not necessary, and that an affidavit of no settlement is not required.

Solicitors, Chas. Rogers, Sons, & Russell; Smith & Hudson.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. }
Kekewich, J. } April 27.

LAZARUS v. THE ARTISTIC PHOTOGRAPHIC CO. (LIMITED). (a)

Light—Access—Photographic studio—Injunction—Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 3.

A photographer is entitled to the uninterrupted access of such a light as will enable him to enjoy his studio for photographic purposes, and his right will not be affected by the fact that he has not enjoyed the light required for that particular purpose for the period of twenty years.

Motion.

The plaintiff had carried on the business of a photographer at No. 536, Oxford-street for the ten years previous to this action in a studio at the rear of the premises. About twelve feet from the east side of this studio was another studio attached to No. 534, Oxford-street, where the defendant company also carried on a photographic business.

In the month of February, 1897, the defendants began to raise the roof of their studio, and thereby occasioned interference with the light in the plaintiff's studio. Notwithstanding the plaintiff's complaints, the defendants continued their building and put on a sloping glass roof, which they subsequently coloured red in order to remedy the glare and reflect a better light.

The plaintiff brought the present action and moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from erecting, or permitting to remain erected, any buildings on their premises so as to darken, injure, or obstruct any of the ancient lights of the plaintiff as then enjoyed by him until the trial of the action.

The evidence adduced showed that the light of the plaintiff's studio had been so interfered with, as well in respect of the direct access of light as by the reflected glare from the glazed roof, as to render it useless for the purposes of the plaintiff's photographic business, and that the attempted remedy did not in fact improve the light required for photography.

By consent the motion was treated as the trial of the action.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and Stewart Smith, for the motion.

J. G. Butcher, for the defendants.—The plaintiff has not enjoyed this special photographic light for twenty years, and he is not therefore entitled to an injunction to restrain interference with it: Lanfranchi v. Mackenzie, 15 W. R. 614, L. R. 4 Eq. 421; Moore v. Hall, 26 W. R. 401, 3 Q. B. D. 178. The plaintiff is only entitled to an ordinary light for ordinary purposes. [KEKEWICH, J., referred to The Attorney-General v. Queen Anne's and Garden Mansions Co. (Limited), 37 W. R. 572, 5 T. L. R. 430, where his lordship, after examining the authorities, had decided that enjoyment of light for a special purpose for the prescriptive period was not necessary to support a claim to such light.]

KEKEWICH, J.—Except for one purpose I put aside entirely all questions as to reflected light—I mean the extra supply of light which comes as reflected back from the glazed roof of the defendants' new studio. It may be an advantage for reading and writing, but it is a great disadvantage for photographic purposes. I do not think it is material whether the reflected light is an advantage or a disadvantage. I put it aside as not touching the merits of this action. The real question is, whether this new studio interferes with the access of light to the plaintiff's studio, and so interferes with it as to diminish the reasonable enjoyment and comfort of his studio. Mr. Butcher says that such enjoyment only implies an ordinary light for ordinary purposes, but not for taking portraits by photography, and he goes on to say that as the plaintiff has not carried on the business of a photographer for twenty years, he cannot claim the right to what has been called in argument "extraordinary special light," but which really means light for this extraordinary purpose. It seems to me to be beside the question to say that he has not carried on business for twenty years. He has been carrying on the business for some time, about ten years, and I hold, without going into the cases on the point, that he is entitled to protection to the access of light for photography. The question is, has that been interfered with? The evidence shows that there has been a serious interference with the access of light by means of the new studio, quite irrespective of the reflected light. It appears that the new studio is only twelve feet distant, and even less at some points. It stands to reason that there is some interference with the light. From the evidence it appears that, in respect of light, the plaintiff's studio is badly situated as it stands, and it would be much worse off if the defendants' studio were allowed to remain as it is. The plaintiff cannot afford to part with any light, and if a little is taken from him, that little is of more importance to him than more would be in the case of a studio which was better situated. It seems to me on the evidence that there is such an interference here with the access of light as hinders the enjoyment by the plaintiff of his studio for photographic purposes. He is entitled to complain of that. I will therefore grant an injunction restraining the defendant company from erecting or keeping erected their studio so as to obstruct the plaintiff's light.

Solicitors, Edward M. Lazarus; Mann & Taylor.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } April 7, 8.

In re CROSSLEY.
BIRRELL v. GREENHOUGH. (a.)

Mortmain—Charity—Metropolitan Consolidated Stock—Charge on lands, rents, and property—Pure or impure personalty.

Metropolitan Consolidated 3½ per Cent. Stock issued under the Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 102), is impure personalty, as it confers on the holders an interest in land within the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), s. 10 (iii.)

Originating summons by the executors and trustees of the will of J. T. Crossley, Q.C., to determine, inter alia, the following question—namely, Whether the sum of £4,000 Metropolitan 3½ per Cent. Consolidated Stock, forming part of the testator's residuary estate, was personal estate not capable of being bequeathed by will for charitable purposes, either under the Act 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, or under the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888.

The testator died on the 3rd of January, 1892, and his will was proved on the 2nd of April, 1892.

By his will made the 6th of September, 1890, after various specific gifts, gave "so much and such part" of his "residuary estate" as should "consist of or have arisen from or been produced by the investment or re-investment of property" which at the time of his decease was "pure personal estate capable of being lawfully bequeathed by will for charitable purposes" to a charity as therein mentioned, and he gave such parts of his residuary estate as could "not lawfully be given by will for charitable purposes" to George David Greenhough absolutely.

By the Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 102), s. 5, all consolidated stock created for the purposes of the Act "shall be charged indifferently on the whole of the lands, rents, and property belonging to the Board.

The defendants were the residuary legatees of G. D. Greenhough, two persons appointed by the court to represent the charity, and her Majesty's Attorney-General.

Crawley, for the plaintiffs, stated the facts.

Warrington, Q.C., and Mark Romer, for the charity.—The Metropolitan Consolidated Stock comes within Attree v. Howe, 26 W. R. 871, 9 Ch. D. 337, and is pure personalty. In re Pickard, Elmsley v. Mitchell, 42 W. R. 375, [1894] 2 Ch. 88; 3 Ch. 704, 43 W. R. Dig. 30, is also in our favour. Cluff v. Cluff, 24 W. R. 632, 2 Ch. D. 222, which is an authority against us, was not argued, and In re Holmes, 62 L. T. Rep. 383, 38 W. R. Dig. 216, is distinguishable, inasmuch as in that case the holder could get the land itself, in this case he cannot do so. [KEKEWICH, J., referred to In re Hallett, Howarth v. Massey, 5 T. L. Rep. 285.]

Renshaw, Q.C., and Yardley, for the residuary legatee.—Cluff v. Cluff and In re Holmes apply. The latter case was approved in In re Pickard, where the charge was on the "revenues" only, and not on the land itself: In re David, 38 W. R. 162, 43 Ch. D. 27.

Ingle Joyce, for the Attorney-General.

KEKEWICH, J.—If I was at liberty to decide the case entirely according to my own view of what is common-sense and right, I should not have the slightest hesitation in at once saying that this is not an interest in land within the meaning of the Mortmain Acts. It seems to me that there is some absurdity in saying that a man who invests his money in corporation stock, the security for the interest of which consists to some extent of land, has an interest in land.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A man who invests in that way does not look to the land, he does not take in express words by virtue of any instrument a charge on the land; he cannot enforce his rights by foreclosure or sale, and in common parlance he does not dream of having an interest in land. But that, unfortunately, is not what I have to consider. The bead roll of cases is too long for me to refer to, and counsel have referred to several of the cases. Certainly the tendency of modern times, quite irrespectively of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Acts of 1888 and 1894, is to take out of the mischief of the Mortmain Act (9 Geo. 2, c. 36) much that was held to be within it before; but there are a certain number of decided cases which remain unaffected by recent authorities. Attree v. Hawe is an extremely valuable authority on all questions of this kind because the whole law was thoroughly considered in the Court of Appeal strongly constituted, consisting of the late Jessel, M.R., and the late James, Baggallay, and Bramwell, L.JJ., but it must not be forgotten that the decision in that case was with reference to debenture stock under the provisions of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863, which is substantially in the same position as debentures issued under the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. Reference was there made as in other cases to Gardner v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co., 15 W. R. 325, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 201. I venture to think that that case, which is an extremely important one, has been very much misunderstood with reference to this branch of the law. The real meaning of that case in reference to this branch of the law is to be found in two or three words of Davey, L.J., in In re Pickard, Elmsley v. Mitchell, at p. 715 of [1894] 3 Ch., where he says: "They (that is, Turner, L.J., and Lord Cairns, in Gardner v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co.) in substance said this, 'Whatever may be the words used, it is a charge only on the fruits of the undertaking.'" And that is in effect precisely what Lord Cairns said in his celebrated judgment in Gardner v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. as to the fruit-bearing tree. When once you get hold of that, all the comments on the meaning of the word "undertaking," supported by reference to Gardner v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. fall to the ground, because what was held to be charged was not the undertaking, including the land as part of the undertaking, but the fruits of the undertaking. There was no charge on the land, and in fact Gardner v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. is a distinct decision that the debentures were not a charge on the surplus land; Attree v. Hawe therefore, dealing with debenture-stock, is not of so much value as otherwise it might be. Here I am not dealing with the debenture-stock of a trading corporation, but with the stock of a municipal corporation created under the Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869. Here we have a distinct charge on the land, and Mr. Warrington's argument comes to this, that the question is one of words. The Act says that there is a charge on the land, but it is a charge on the land which is not to be enforceable in the way in which charges on land are generally enforced. That, he says, is only a way of expressing the rights of the stock-holder, which he cannot enforce by obtaining any interest in the land. I do not hesitate to say that I could wish to hold that to be sound, because I do not believe it was ever intended by the Legislature, if it is an interest in land, that it was technically to be an interest of the kind which falls within the Mortmain Act, but I feel myself constrained by the authorities. In the first place, Hall, V.C., in the case of Cluff v. Cluff distinctly held two bequests of £3,500 of this very stock to the Freemasons' Charities were of impure personalty and therefore void.

The case ought not to have been reported, because there was no argument, nor, so far as I can make out, was there anyone there to argue on behalf of the Freemasons' Charities. I suppose that the learned judge and the learned counsel thought that the point was not worth serious argument, and therefore the charities were not served, or it may be that the charities had an opportunity of appearing, and did not think fit to appear. It is an unsatisfactory decision, but it is an expression of judicial opinion, and I find it thus cited in Tudor's Charitable Trusts, 3rd ed., p. 409.

It has also been held that Metropolitan Board of Works Consolidated Stock cannot be bequeathed to a charity: Cluff v. Cluff. So that it has got into the text-books, and is to be regarded of some authority. I do not think I could decline to follow that unless I were satisfied that it was wrong, and that there were other decisions inconsistent with it. But I turn to the decision of Kay, J., in In re Holmes, Holmes v. Holmes. I do not think that is precisely the same case, or that is has a direct bearing, but still I think the substance of his judgment is in accordance with that of Hall, V.C., in the other case: Attree v. Hawe, and Gardner v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. were cited to Kay, J., but he did not proceed upon either of those cases, but on the principle that it was a charge on land. That case seems to me to be against the view that I am asked to take, that this sum of stock is pure personalty. Then besides that I have the case of In re Hallett, Howarth v. Massey, 5 T. L. Rep. 285, before North, J. I confess that as that case is stated in the Times Law Reports, it seems to me to be inconsistent with the decision of North, J., himself, affirmed by the Court of Appeal in In re Pickard, Elmsley v. Mitchell, but there the stock in question was Leicester Corportion 3½ per Cent. Redeemable Stock, apparently not being a direct charge on land, except as being the property of a corporation, and North, J., held that he was bound by numerous decided cases to hold that it was a charge on the land. The matter, therefore, comes to this. Here there is a charge on the land, and the authorities, without going further into them, seem to me to say that a charge on the land brings a case within the mischief of the Mortmain Acts. Therefore, I think I must hold that this sum of Metropolitan Consolidated Stock has not been properly given to the charity.

Solicitors, H. & G. Keith; S. R. Lewin & Co. Solicitor to the Treasury.

Chan. Div. } Byrne, J. } May 5.

COLEMAN v. THE BUCKS AND OXON UNION BANK. (a.)

Banker and customer—Trust money—Notice of trust—Payment of trust money to private account of trustee.

A bank credited a trustee's (J. G.) private account with moneys received by him as a trustee, he having no other account at the bank. The trust money had been received by the bank from their London agents with an advice note stating that it had been paid to the account

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"J. G. Trust," but the bank had no other knowledge of the trust. The trustee, J. G., was advised of the payment by the bank manager, but gave no direction as to opening a trust account. The trustee's private account having been overdrawn, and the trust money being lost,

Held, that the bank was not liable to replace it.

Trial of action.

This was an action in which the plaintiffs, the trustees of the will of Thomas Bovingdon, of Amsterdam, Buckingham, who died on the 22nd of May, 1878, claimed a declaration that the defendants were liable to make good to his estate the sum of £1,411 2s. 2d., with interest from the date of the receipt.

The facts of the case were as follow:

The testator by his will dated the 23rd of February, 1873, appointed his wife, his son William Bovingdon, and James Gurney executors thereof, and devised and bequeathed his real estate and the residue of his personal estate to his said trustees on the trusts therein contained.

The will was proved by the said three executors.

William Bovingdon died in 1881, and Mrs. Bovingdon in 1883.

The sum of £1,400, part of the moneys subject to the trusts of the said will, was in 1883 invested by Gurney on the mortgage of certain freehold property.

In 1892 the mortgage was paid off, and the sum of £1,400, with some interest thereon, making together the sum of £1,411 2s. 2d., was on the 16th of August, 1892, received by Messrs. Parker & Wilkins, of High Wycombe, solicitors on behalf of Gurney, and in accordance with a direction given by him was paid by them into the High Wycombe branch of the London and County Bank, with instructions to that bank to credit James Gurney's trust account at the Chesham branch of the defendant's bank with the amount.

The defendants were advised at their branch bank at Chesham by their London agents, the London and Westminster Bank, of the receipt of a sum of £1,411 2s. 2d. by an advice note, which was as follows: On whose account, James Gurney's Trust; by whom paid, Parker & Wilkins, High Wycombe; £1,411 2s. 2d. Gurney had not at that time or subsequently a trust account at the defendants' bank, but he had a private account there from November, 1889, to June, 1895. On the same day the bank advised Gurney as follows: "We beg to advise you as understated to your credit—viz., Parker & Wilkins, £1,411 2s. 2d, which we have duly placed to your account."

At that date the private account of James Gurney was overdrawn to the extent of £1,694 11s. 1d. in pursuance of an agreement then existing between him and the defendants that he should be allowed to overdraw to the extent of £2,000 against certain securities deposited with the bank of the value of £5,000.

Gurney, who was in the habit of receiving his passbook about once a fortnight, did not give any instructions to the bank as to the trust funds; but continued to draw cheques in the usual way. The money was, as a matter of fact, applied by the bank to the reduction of the overdraft. Gurney subsequently again overdrew his account, and gave further security.

In 1895 he was adjudged bankrupt, and the plaintiffs were appointed trustees of the will of Thomas Bovingdon in his place.

At the date of his bankruptcy there was due from him to the bank a considerable overdraft. The bank manager in his evidence admitted that he knew that the money belonged to some trust, but stated that he did not feel justified in the absence of instructions from his customer in opening a separate account.

Eve, Q.C., and Tanner, for the plaintiffs.—To make the bank liable to make good the loss, it is only necessary that they should have had notice of a trust. It cannot be denied that they knew that these moneys were trust moneys, and it was therefore their duty to carry them to a separate account. They received the moneys with a notice that should have set them on their guard. But in face of this notice they took it upon themselves to deal with the moneys as against the rights of people who had a better claim than themselves. Having admitted what they have done, it is too late for them to turn round and claim the moneys against Gurney's cestuis que trust: Foxton v. Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Co., 44 L. T. Rep. 406, 29 W. R. Dig. 14; Bridgman v. Gill, 24 Beav. 302, 6 W. R. Ch. Dig. 90; Pannell v. Hurley, 2 Coll. 241; Ex parte Kingston, In re Gross, 19 W. R. 910, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 632; Bodenham v. Hoskyns, 2 De G. M. & G. 903. It is not necessary to show that the bank made any profit.

Birrell, Q.C., and Procter, for the defendants.—No knowledge that the fund was a trust fund can be imputed to the defendants in such a manner as to make them liable for a breach of trust. The bank knew nothing about the trust. There was nothing to show the bank that Gurney was not a residuary legatee of the trust fund in question. When it is said that those who know a fund is a trust are liable for a breach of trust the word "know" must be taken in a wide sense. The case of an executor is not parallel. An executor as such takes no beneficial interest. In the cases where banks have been made liable they knew not merely that the money was trust money, but who were the actual persons to whom it belonged. There must be actual knowledge. Mere suspicion is not enough. [They referred to Martin v. Rocke, Eyton, & Co., 34 W. R. 253, 53 L. T. Rep. 946; Bridgman v. Gill; Gray v. Johnston, 16 W. R. 842, L. R. 3 E. & I. App. 1; Thompson v. Clydesdale Bank, Limited, [1893] A. C. 282; Lockwood v. Abdy, 14 Sim. 437.] The bank drew Gurney's attention to the payment in of the money. The fact that he made no reply authorized them placing it to his private account. There was no benefit to the bank in the transaction; if the money had not been paid to Gurney's account they would have stopped giving him credit.

Tanner, in reply.—The defendants cannot get over the fact that they took trust money and applied it to the payment of a debt. The case is exactly covered by the judgment of Fry, J., in Foxton v. Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Co.

BYRNE, J.—This case is one of some importance, and I cannot say that it is altogether free from difficulty. One James Gurney was a customer of the Bucks and Oxon Union Bank (Limited), the defendants in this case, and he had a private banking account at the Chesham branch. He had, however, no other account there. A sum of £1,411 2s. 2d., being trust money to which James Gurney was entitled, but only as trustee, was paid by means of a cheque drawn by the solicitors, who had received the money in respect of the realization of part of the trust property drawn upon the London and County Bank, London. [His lordship proceeded to recapitulate the facts as given above, and continued:] Now, James Gurney had been given a direction that the money was to be paid to a trust account; but the direction was not communicated to the defendants' branch in any way. All that they got was that a

On whose account.	By whom paid.	£ s. d.
James Gurney's Trust.	Parker & Wilkins.	1,411 2 2

James Gurney had, in respect of his private account, his only account at the bank, an allowed overdraft to the extent of £2,000. At the date when this money was paid in—viz., the 15th of August, 1892, he was overdrawn to a considerable extent at the bank. The manager of the bank had not the slightest reason to suppose that James Gurney was not in a perfectly good and solvent condition. They allowed him this overdraft, and they continued afterwards to allow him a further overdraft on further security. They held some security for their £2,000 overdraft. Now, the manager, when he received this notice, knew that the £1,411 2s. 2d. was money forming part of some trust or other; he did not consider, having regard to what he knew of James Gurney and his position and so on, that there was any necessity for making any special inquiry about it, and he did not consider himself justified, on those instructions, in opening a new account in James Gurney's name; so he, of his own motion, paid it into the private account—the only then existing account—of James Gurney; he credited it, rather, to that account.

Now, I am satisfied on the evidence that the bank had not the slightest notion at that time of benefiting themselves by what was done. I am satisfied that they had no notion that James Gurney intended to commit a breach of trust by making away with that money in any way. As a matter of fact the account was not closed in any way—no line was drawn; but the account went on for some time, until, notwithstanding this payment of £1,411 2s. 2d., James Gurney's account became overdrawn by the amount of some £500 or so, when a new arrangement was come to, and the bank required more security; they allowed the further overdraft to the sum of £5,000; and, apparently, though to what precise amount I do not know, they continued to allow several large overdrafts to be made till the bankruptcy of James Gurney, which happened some time afterwards.

The next thing that happened, after carrying this £1,411 2s. 2d. to the private account of James Gurney, was that the manager advised him to that effect. [His lordship read the manager's letter, and continued:] Now, it is quite true that James Gurney, knowing himself that he had given no direction that it was to be paid to trust account, on receipt of that document might have understood it to mean that it was paid to a trust account in his name; but that ignorance could not have continued very long. He was in the habit of receiving his pass-book about once a fortnight; and must have seen within a very short period afterwards that the money had been so carried to his general account. Undoubtedly that was an irregularity; and undoubtedly, if he had been well advised, he would have written at once and said it ought to be carried to a trust account, so as to be ear-marked separate from his own. He did nothing of the sort; he accepted the position, and left matters as they were. The legal effect of what happened on that occasion, as has been pointed out, was to reduce James Gurney's overdraft by the sum of £1,411 2s. 2d., and, practically upon these facts and upon no other material facts, I am asked to say that the bank are liable to make good to the cestuis que trust this sum of £1,411 2s. 2d.

The case differs, I think, from any of the cases that have been cited before me. A case that has been referred to, and always is referred to in cases of this description, of course, is the case of Gray v. Johnston. The result of that case is that where there is an account ear-marked as an executorship account, and also a private account, if a cheque is drawn upon the executorship account in favour of the private account, and the effect of that is to reduce the indebtedness to the bank in respect of the private account, that alone is not sufficient, no benefit being intended or bargained for, to fix the bankers with liability to the cestuis que trust.

Now, that was a case of honouring a cheque, upon which the executrix only could draw. There are other cases in which moneys have been drawn from an account ear-marked in trustees, or ear-marked in some other way, and carried to a private account under circumstances that the court has come to a conclusion that a benefit was intended and designed for the bankers; but I do not think that there is any case upon the books which goes so far as to say that if this had been a case where the bankers had obeyed precisely and strictly the advice they had received, and carried this to a new separate ear-marked account, "James Gurney's account," and without knowing any more about it the trustee had drawn a cheque for the amount and paid it in to his private account, I do not think that is a case in which the bankers have been held to be liable upon that alone.

Then it is said there is a distinction between this case and the one I have just put, because the bankers did something which may be regarded as a blunder or an error of judgment. I think myself they should have carried it to an ear-marked and separate account, but I believe it was perfectly innocently, without the slightest notion that a breach of trust was intended, or without any idea of any benefit to themselves, that they carried it to the only account then open—the account of James Gurney, and as I say, James Gurney knew of this very shortly afterwards, and adopted what had been done.

Can I hold the bank liable under these circumstances to the cestuis que trust? I think not. I think I should be carrying the doctrine further than it has been carried in any of the cases which have been cited to me.

The first case to which I need refer is the case of Bridgman v. Gill. In that case the plaintiffs had opened an account in their names as trustees, and it was headed in some way to identify it with the trust account. There was evidence in the case that the bankers had known that it was trust money. The tenant for life was indebted to the bankers in the sum of £760. At the suggestion of the bank he who had no right to draw on the trust account at all drew a cheque upon the trust account, which the bankers acted upon, debited the plaintiff's account with the sum of £750, and thereby the indebtedness of the tenant for life to the bankers became discharged. The Master of the Rolls said, in giving judgment: "The case as it stands upon the undisputed facts is this. In 1843 a sum of money was standing in the defendants' books to the credit of the plaintiffs, and which the defendants transferred to themselves in discharge of a debt due to them from another person, and this was done without the slightest sanction or authority of the plaintiffs to support it." I think that case is very far away from this, and I agree with the Master of the Rolls, if I may respectfully say so. On the facts as they there stand it is rather surprising that the case should have been resisted on the ground that it was.

Then there is the case of Pannell v. Hurley, which is often referred to. In that case the trustees had a banking account headed, "Henry Pannell's Estate—Clarke, Russell, & Davy." Subsequently the account stood, "Henry Pannell's Estate, per Joseph Davy, Trustee," he then having become the sole surviving trustee. Davy being indebted to the banking-house on his private account and in a sum on joint account of himself and another, and having £308 standing to his credit on the trust account, drew two cheques on the trust account and directed them to be placed to the credit of the other account; this was done, thereby discharging the debt due to the bank in respect of the private account, and the account on which he was jointly indebted with another. "The defendants Hurley & Whitter, those were the persons who stood in the positions of the bankers, by their answer denied that, except as might appear from the heading of the accounts that they had any notice or knowledge that the sum of £308 12s. was held upon the trusts mentioned in the bill, or that the dealing therewith, as before stated, was a breach of trust; and they stated that the whole of the transaction as to the drawing of the cheques took place without privity or knowledge in any manner of either of them, or as they believed of the defendant Brown"; but evidence was given to show, and apparently did show, that those two gentlemen were perfectly well aware that they were trust accounts, and that they knew the nature of the trust, and the Vice-Chancellor in the course of the argument says: "If the only notice to the bankers had been the title of the account, this might have been a case of more difficulty"; and at p. 245 (2 Coll. Ch. C.) this is the way he sums up this case: "Money is due from A. to B. in trust for C.; B. is indebted to A. on his own account; A. with knowledge of the trust concurs with B. in setting one debt against the other, which is done without C.'s consent." And he holds that the transaction cannot stand. That again is a case differing essentially from the present one.

Then there is the case of Bodenham v. Hoskyns, the circumstances there being, as found by the Vice-Chancellor, that from the commencement of the account which was headed "The Rotherwas Estate Account," the bankers knew that the moneys paid in to that account were the moneys of Mr. Bodenham (that is, not the person having the account with them, but another person) arising from the rents and proceeds of the Rotherwas Estate, and that the account was kept by Parkes, their customer, in his character of receiver, and under these circumstances his honour held that the bankers had not the right to say that the receiver could so deal with the Rotherwas Estate account as to appropriate his principal's money at any time to the discharge of his private debts to the bankers. He says it is contrary to the principle according to which a person who knows another to have in his hands or under his control moneys belonging to a third person cannot deal with those moneys for his own private benefit, when the effect of that transaction is the commission of a fraud on the owner. But, of course, there it was clear, according to the finding of the Vice-Chancellor, that the bankers knew that the moneys were the moneys of a third person. The case went upon appeal; and Knight Bruce, L.J., stated that their lordships were of opinion that upon the present evidence the decision was right, but said if the defendants liked to add to the evidence they might. As a matter of fact, they subsequently submitted to the dismissal of the appeal with costs. That also appears to be a reasonably clear case and also removed from the present one. Then the case of Ex parte Kingston, In re Gross was referred to, but I do not think I need deal with that any further.

Then there was a case of Foxton v. Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Co., and it is important to refer to that because one of the observations of Fry, L.J., then Fry, J., has been much relied on by the plaintiffs in this case. That was a case where "a sum of money was standing in the books of the banking company to the credit of the trustees of the late W. H., and the bank, knowing that the trustees (each of whom had an overdrawn account at the bank) were not beneficially entitled, allowed them to transfer sums of money at various times from the trust account to their respective private accounts, and it was held that the cestuis que trust were entitled to recover from the bank. That was a case upon the evidence—I need not go into all the circumstances—where there was a benefit designed for the bank. They had been calling on the parties having private accounts to reduce their indebtedness, and they did it with the intention of reducing their indebtedness. In the course of giving the judgment Fry, J., states the facts and then says: "Now, it appears to be plain that the bank could not derive the benefit which they did from that payment, knowing it to be drawn from a trust fund, unless they were prepared to show that the payment was a legitimate and proper one, having reference to the terms of the trust. It is said that they did not know what the trust was at that time. That appears to me, I confess, to be immaterial, because those who know that a fund is a trust fund cannot take possession of that fund for their own private benefit, except at the risk of being liable to refund it in the event of the trust being broken by the payment of the money."

Then he goes on to deal with the case upon the facts, and he finds that the bank did know in substance who the cestuis que trust of the funds were. I am asked to say that that amounts to a decision to this effect: that wherever there is an account which, upon the face of it is a trust account, and the customer draws a cheque upon that trust account, and pays in the cheque to the credit of his own private account, that the bankers are bound to see and inquire (that is how I understand the proposition is put) that the customer is in point of fact entitled to the money which he so transfers from one account to another. I do not think that that was the meaning of the learned judge in this case. If the bankers have the slightest knowledge, or reasonable suspicion, that the money is being applied in breach of a trust, and if they are going to derive a benefit from the transfer and intend and design that they should derive a benefit from it, then I think the bankers would not be entitled to honour the cheque drawn upon the trust account without some further inquiry into the matter.

But the present case is not that case at all, and, notwithstanding the powerful and able arguments that have been addressed to me on the other side, and notwithstanding certain considerations which suggested themselves to me, as, for instance, if this money had first been carried to a trust account it may be that the trustee would not so readily have committed the breach of trust which he did actually commit in applying the trust money for his own benefit—I say, notwithstanding considerations like that, and notwithstanding the fact that in point of law the money must be regarded as having been applied at the moment in reduction of the overdraft, I do not think that in the present case I can hold the defendants liable to make good this amount.

I think I have dealt with all the points raised before me, certainly so far as they now occur to my mind, and as I say, the case is one of considerable importance and not without difficulty; but having come to the conclusion I have, the only thing I can do is to dismiss the action and with costs.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors, Letts Brothers, for Parker & Son, High Wycombe; H. P. & J. H. Cobb.

Q. B. Div.
(Day and Lawrance, JJ.) May 24.

FULHAM VESTRY (Appellants) v. THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (Respondents). (a.)

Metropolis—Nuisance—Sewer—Jurisdiction of justices—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 2, sub-section 1 (b).

By the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 2, sub-section 1 (b), "Any pool, ditch, gutter, watercourse, cistern, water-closet, earth-closet, privy, urinal, cesspool, drain, dung-pit, or ash-pit so foul or in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious or dangerous to health . . . shall be nuisances liable to be dealt with summarily under this Act."

The appellants, as the sanitary authority, summoned the respondents to abate a nuisance from "foul smells" arising from a surface sewer ventilator constructed by them in a roadway within the appellants' district.

Held, that the provisions of section 2, sub-section 1 (b) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, did not apply to public sewers, and that the justices were right in refusing to make the order on the ground that they had no jurisdiction to deal with the complaint.

Case stated by justices of Kensington.

The appellants, as the sanitary authority of Fulham, had obtained a summons against the London County Council upon a complaint made under the Public Health (London) Act, 1895, s. 5, on the refusal of the respondents to comply with a notice served upon them by the appellants to abate a nuisance from foul smells, dangerous to health, arising from a surface sewer ventilator constructed by the respondents in the surface of a roadway within the appellants' district. The sewer formed part of the main drainage system of London.

On the hearing of the summons the London County Council took the objection that the Act of 1891 dealt only with nuisances arising from private property, and that if a nuisance as alleged existed, the justices had no jurisdiction since it arose from public sewers.

The justices on that ground dismissed the summons.

W. O. Danckwerts, for the appellants.—The foul smells arising from this surface sewer ventilator amount to a nuisance dangerous to health. It can be put right very easily by having a proper ventilator erected. The justices have jurisdiction to make the order, for the nuisance arises from a "watercourse" or "drain" within the meaning of the section, which is not confined to nuisances arising on private property only: St. Helen's Chemical Co. v. St. Helen's Corporation, 1 Ex. D. 196, 24 W. R. Dig. 165. The object of the Act was to provide a speedy and inexpensive mode of dealing with nuisances arising from any cause whatever dangerous to health.

Bosanquet, Q.C., and Horace Avory, for the respondents.—The words of the section cannot be construed as including a public sewer. If a defect exists the London County Council can only be made liable by indictment or mandamus. The sewer forms part of the main drainage system of London. The summary jurisdiction given by the Act against owners of private property to compel them to abate a nuisance is not applicable in the case of public works, and the justices were right in declining jurisdiction: Queen v. Parlby, 37 W. R. 335, 22 Q. B. D. 520.

Danckwerts replied.

DAY, J.—I am clearly of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed on the ground that the justices were right in declining jurisdiction. Section 2, sub-section 1 (b), under which the proceedings were taken, does not refer to nuisances arising from defects in the main sewers of London, which are public works vested in the county council. The words of the section are peculiarly applicable to nuisances arising from the acts of owners of property, as distinguished from acts which might be caused by the misconstruction of great public works entrusted to any public body. It may be that the county council have made these sewers badly, and may, as was contended, have made an egregious mistake in the construction of these ventilators, but assuming that were so, the remedy of the public would be by indictment or mandamus, and not by the summary procedure made applicable by this act to owners of private property. The county council are entitled to have this question tried at law by a judge and jury; that is the only tribunal which is competent to decide a question such as this, which is clearly not one that ought to be decided by a couple of magistrates sitting in petty sessions.

LAWRANCE, J.—I agree. If the appellants' contention is right it would be necessary to read into section 2, sub-section 1 (b) of the Act of 1891 the word "sewer." Now, that word is omitted from the section, and I suspect purposely so, in order to show that it refers to nuisances caused by the fault of owners of private property. It was contended that this could not be so because by section 141—the interpretation section—the expression "premises" was to include "messuages, buildings, hereditament of any tenure, whether open or closed, built on or not, and whether public or private, and whether maintained or not under statutory authority." And it was argued that the definition of "premises" covered the ventilator, which it was sought to have reconstructed. I do not think that the contention of the appellants has been made out, and I agree that the appeal has failed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the vestry, Blanco White.

Solicitor for the London County Council, W. A. Blaxland.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. Div.
(Hawkins and Wright, JJ.) May 10.

SUFFOLK LUNATIC ASYLUM COMMITTEE v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE STOW UNION. (a.)

Lunacy—Pauper lunatic—Maintenance—Adjudication of settlement—Subsequent maintenance order by justices—Action to enforce order—Jurisdiction of judge to go behind order—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 287.

In the case of an action brought under section 314 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, for the recovery of money ordered to be paid under section 287 for the maintenance of a pauper lunatic, the court is bound to take judicial notice of a previous order of adjudication of settlement, and for future maintenance of the same lunatic, which was still in force at the time when the order upon which the action is brought was made.

This was an appeal by the defendants from the judgment of his Honour Judge Eardley Wilmot, sitting at Stowmarket, in the county of Suffolk. The action was brought to recover the sum of £18 10s. 6d. against the defendants under section 314, sub-section 2, of the Lunacy Act, 1890, in respect of the expenses incurred in the maintenance of a pauper lunatic under an order made by two justices, being visitors of the county asylum, and purporting to be made under section 287 of the said Act.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendants contended that the justices could only make an order upon the union to which the lunatic was chargeable, and this union they contended was Nottingham and not Stow, as the pauper's settlement had previously been adjudicated to be in Nottingham.

The facts of the case are as follows: On the 10th of December, 1890, the pauper was, under a magistrate's order, received in the Ipswich Asylum, as there was no room in the Suffolk County Asylum. On the 16th of March, 1891, the pauper was removed to the Suffolk County Lunatic Asylum, under an order made by two visitors of that asylum.

On the 15th of June, 1891, the justices in petty sessions at Stow made an order under section 287 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, adjudicating the settlement of the pauper to be in the parish of St. Mary, Nottingham. From this order the guardians of the Nottingham Union appealed to the Suffolk Quarter Sessions, but the appeal was dismissed and the order confirmed. It subsequently transpired that the hearing of the appeal was informal, as one of the justices taking part in the hearing of the appeal was an interested party, being an ex officio guardian of the Stow Union and also a ratepayer in that union, and the order of quarter sessions was accordingly quashed. The order of the petty sessions adjudicating the settlement therefore stood.

On the 5th of December, 1896, a subsequent order was made by two justices of the county of Suffolk, under section 287 of the Lunacy Act, on the Stow Union for the maintenance of the pauper. It was in respect of this order that the action was brought. The learned county court judge was of opinion that the case was governed by Kettering Union v. Northampton Lunatic Asylum, 34 W. R. 894, 34 L. J. M. C. 198, and that he was bound by the order of the 5th of December, 1896, as the order was good on the face of it, and he therefore gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed, leaving it to the defendants to reimburse themselves such sum in the way pointed out in section 291.

From this decision the defendants now appealed.

R. Cunningham Glen (Rawlinson with him), for the appellants.—Under section 286 a pauper lunatic in an institution for lunatics is only deemed to be chargeable to the union from which he has been sent until it has been established that the lunatic is settled in some other union, from which time he is deemed to be chargeable to the union in which it has been established he has been settled; that consequently, after it has been established that he is settled in such other union, justices can only make an order under section 287 upon the union in which the pauper lunatic has been adjudicated to be settled. In this case such union is the union of Nottingham. The order of 1891 by which the lunatic's settlement was adjudicated to be in such union never having been quashed, the two justices who were visitors of the county asylum had no jurisdiction to make the order of the 5th of December, 1896, upon which this action was brought, and the plaintiffs, therefore, have no cause of action.

Macmorran, Q.C. (Poyser with him), for the respondents.—The county court judge could not go behind the order of 1896. This was only a provisional order, and the justices had jurisdiction to make it. The defendants could have got rid of that order by a fresh application for adjudication of settlement. There may be a change of settlement, and therefore a previous adjudication cannot be conclusive.

R. Cunningham Glen replied.

WRIGHT, J., delivered the judgment of the court: It is admitted now that the judicial determination of the petty sessions of the 15th of June, 1891, that this pauper was chargeable on the union of Nottingham, stands as a binding order at present governing her status in that respect, notwithstanding the quashing of the confirming order on certiorari. The question, then, is what is the effect of that order. Either in ignorance of that order, or being advised that that order had dropped since the quashing of the order of quarter sessions, the magistrates, acting as they supposed under section 287 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, have made an order upon the Stow Union. That section provides that any two justices may make an order on the guardians of the union to which the lunatic is chargeable for payment of the reasonable charges of the maintenance of the lunatic. On orders of that kind actions may be brought, and an action has in this case been brought in the county court against the Stow Union for the recovery of the charges for the maintenance of the pauper. The Stow Union set up the defence that this order was made without any authority, on the ground that there existed a binding judicial interpretation that it was not Stow but Nottingham which was the chargeable union. The county court judge has held himself bound by the order made on the Stow Union.

The question therefore arises whether the county court judge could go behind that order. The point was raised in the case of Finch v. The York Union Guardians, 35 L. T. Rep. 360, and there Blackburn and Lush, JJ., did not express any opinion one way or the other, but left it as a question that ought to be decided upon demurrer. We have to decide it now, and that is really the only question in the case.

Now, if the result of our holding that the county court judge could inquire into the matter and go behind that order were to be that he would have to inquire into the settlement for himself, or reopen decisions as to what the settlement was, I for one should say we ought certainly not to so decide because he has no power to hold such inquiry, and it cannot be intended that he should. But that is not the case here. All that is desired is that we should say that he has jurisdiction to take notice of and ought to have taken notice of the previous order of adjudication of settlement; and in considering whether we ought to hold that he has jurisdiction, I think we must bear in mind that the order under section 287 is an ex parte order and is not subject to appeal. It is not really a judicial determination at all. It is an administrative order made as a matter of course on the application of the proper authority and on giving some information, I suppose, that a particular union is thought to be the one to which the pauper is chargeable. An order of that kind there must be some means of getting rid of, although it is not subject to appeal, directly it is shown that it did not follow the authority under which it is purported to be made. In the present case the justices in making the order under the section made an order on the wrong party. The Nottingham Union was in truth the union to which the lunatic was chargeable, and the magistrates, disregarding that, have made an order against another union which is not and cannot be liable. The matter seems to be one of some doubt and difficulty, but on the whole I think we must hold that the county court judge ought to have received evidence that the Nottingham Union was liable and not the Stow Union, and to have acted on such evidence. We think that the appeal ought to be allowed, and that there should be a new trial.

Order for a new trial.

Solicitors for the appellants, Rexworthy, Barnard, & Co., for Wilkes, Stowmarket.

Solicitors for the respondents, White, Borrett, & Co., for Cobbold, Ipswich.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } March 13.
Admiralty. }

"THE ALTAIR." (a.)

Salvage—Tug and tow—Claim for salvage by tug by whose acts the necessity for salvage assistance has been in part occasioned—Instance of inequitable salvage agreement—Amount agreed on not awarded.

The owners, master, and crew of a steam-tug engaged to tow a vessel are not entitled to salvage remuneration for services in the nature of salvage services rendered to the tow beyond the scope of the towage contract where it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the tug has by her own wrongful acts contributed to place the tow in jeopardy.

The court will refuse to award an agreed amount for salvage where the bargain to pay such sum is shown to it to have been manifestly unfair and unjust.

There were two actions of salvage, afterwards consolidated, instituted—one on behalf of the owners, master, and crew of the steam-tug Blazer against the barque Altair, her cargo and freight; and the other on behalf of the owners, masters, and crews of the steam-tugs Humber, Gipsey King, and Southern Cross, against the same vessel, her cargo and freight.

The plaintiffs in both actions sought to recover salvage remuneration in the circumstances stated in the judgment, and the consolidated actions were heard before by the judge in court (Barnes, J.) on the 5th and 6th of March last, assisted by two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House.

Aspinall, Q.C., and Crawford, for the owners, master, and crew of The Blazer.

Sir Walter Phillimore and Butler Aspinall, for the other plaintiffs.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Stubbs, for the defendants, the owners of The Altair, her cargo and freight.

The following authorities were cited: The Niobe, 36 W. R. 812, 13 P. D. 55; The Isca, 35 W. R. 382, 12 P. D. 34; The Prinz Heinrich, 36 W. R. 511, 13 P. D. 31.

Cur. adv. vult.

BARNES, J.—In this case the owners, masters, and crews of the steam-tug Blazer, of Liverpool, and of the tugs Humber, Gipsey King, and Southern Cross, of Grimsby, claim salvage remuneration for services rendered by these tugs to The Altair, a four-masted German barque of 2,346 tons register, which stranded about one and a-half miles E.S.E. of Douna Nook, to the south of the entrance of the Humber, shortly before 5.30 a.m. on the 19th of January, last, whilst on a voyage from San Francisco to Holland, drawing 22ft. 9in. The defendants admit that the Grimsby tugs are entitled to salvage reward, and the only question so far as they are concerned is one of amount. The defendants, however, dispute the right of the plaintiffs interested in The Blazer to receive salvage remuneration, on the ground that the stranding of The Altair was (as the defendants allege) caused by the negligence of those in charge of The Blazer, and they claim by way of counter-claim against the owners of The Blazer for the damages sustained by the defendants in consequence of the said alleged negligence. It will be convenient to dispose of the claims of the Grimsby tugs first.

The Altair grounded at the place before-mentioned, about a quarter-of-an-hour before high water, whilst in tow of The Blazer, having been towed by that tug from Falmouth. The wind was light from about N.N.W., and the sea smooth. The weather was foggy at the time of the grounding, but it cleared in a few minutes afterwards. The Altair swung near parallel with the shore and rested on a hard level bottom. The Humber, a tug engaged in salvage operations on work and labour terms at a vessel called The Arcadia, a steam trawler aground not far from The Altair, left this work and came to assist The Altair. The master of The Humber required the sum of £500 to tow for the one tide, whether the vessel came off or not, and as he refused to take less than this sum, and as The Humber was the only tug there besides The Blazer, the master of The Altair was compelled to accept these terms, and engaged The Humber to assist The Blazer. The Blazer and The Humber towed for an hour or an hour and a-half, and at first moved The Altair a little, but the tide fell and she remained fast. The Humber was then sent to Grimsby for more tugs and returned with The Gipsey King and The Southern Cross. In the meantime men from the shore assisted the crew in jettisoning cargo, and about 224 tons were thrown overboard, of the value, including freight, of about £1,500, and the vessel was thereby lightened to the extent of nine inches. It was high water about 6.12 p.m., and about 4 p.m. the two tugs began to tow at The Altair, and in about half-an-hour, in fact, almost as soon as the full strain of the tugs was felt The Altair came off. The master of The Humber was on The Altair directing the tugs. The Altair was then taken by the tugs to an anchorage off Grimsby, one of them, The Gipsey King, fetching a pilot, and later on they all assisted her into dock at Hull, although the master of The Altair objected to more than one tug assisting after the vessel was successfully taken off the ground. At the time the vessel came off there was a moderate breeze from the eastward, and there was little sea. There was a fresh breeze on the 20th from the eastward. The weather on the 21st was moderate, and on the 23rd there was bad weather from the north-east. The Altair sustained no damage from the grounding. The total value of the property salved was £36,276. As the vessel came off when the tide had still a considerable time to rise, and as she had been lightened by the jettison, and having regard to the fact that The Blazer is larger and more powerful than the other three tugs put together, the Elder Brethren are of opinion that The Altair would in all probability have come off at or before high-water on the afternoon tide by the exertions of The Blazer alone.

The first question to determine is whether or not the agreement to pay The Humber £500 is to stand. The principles which are to guide the court in determining this question have been indicated in many cases. In one of the last—The Strathgarry, [1895] P., at p. 264—they were fully considered by Bruce, J., and I need not repeat what is stated in his judgment. The question to be determined is whether this agreement, which was undoubtedly made under compulsion, was manifestly unfair or unjust. The position of The Altair was serious if any bad weather had come on, and the value of the property was large; but the wind at the time of the first towage was light and the sea smooth. I am advised that there was no risk whatever to The Humber in the towage, and although she left The Arcadia to assist The Altair, and although the importance to the latter vessel of prompt assistance before the tide fell was great—for if she had been towed off at once her difficulties would have been ended and the jettison of the wheat avoided—yet, in my opinion, as The Humber was only assisting the more powerful tug Blazer, and was incurring no risk in doing so, it could hardly be expected, having regard to numerous former decisions of this court, that there was any reasonable certainty of her obtaining an award exceeding the sum of £500 for a successful hour's towage; whereas, if the tug was paid for towing for that time successfully at ordinary towage rates, a very trifling sum would be sufficient. I am of opinion that, under the circumstances, the bargain was manifestly unfair and unjust. The case of The Strathgarry was relied on, but the circumstances of that case were totally different from those of the present case. Bruce, J., found that the master of The Strathgarry prepared the form in which the agreement was made, and wished to prevent the possibility of a larger claim being made upon him in the event of the towage leading to a successful result, and that the performance of the towage involved considerable risk to the towing vessel. If there had been any material risk to The Humber in performing the towage, my opinion would have been different. To sanction the agreement in this case would practically tend to encourage the masters of tugs round the coasts of this country to refuse to render services for less than what they might rely on receiving if their services should prove successful, and to stipulate that they should be paid to this extent whether their services shall be successful or not, even though the services involved no risk to the tugs. Estimating the services of The Humber on ordinary salvage terms, I am of opinion that for these services, which, shortly stated, were towing on the morning tide, proceeding to Grimsby for tugs, taking part in the successful services on the afternoon tide, and assisting the vessel to an anchorage, £400 is an adequate salvage remuneration. The services of The Gipsey King and Southern Cross, treating them as continuing till the vessel was anchored, though they ceased to be necessary as soon as she came over the ground, were rendered in fine weather and without any risk to the tugs. As matters turned out, I believe that the vessel would have come off without the assistance of these tugs, and that their services were not really necessary. At the same time, these tugs came at request, and did what they were required to do efficiently, and it was no doubt desirable that there should not be the least uncertainty about the vessel coming off on the afternoon tide. I award to The Gipsey King £200, and The Southern Cross—the more powerful and valuable of the two—£300. The three tugs insisted on attending The Altair into dock, although her master protested, and although only one tug besides The Blazer was necessary; and as a claim for these services, which are only towage services, is made, it is desirable to dispose of it in this suit. It was stated that two-fifths of £60 would be paid to a second tug for assisting such a vessel in from sea, and therefore for assisting from the anchorage I think £20 is quite enough. This sum is to be paid by the owners of The Altair, as they would have had to pay about this sum in ordinary course, and it must be divided between the three Grimsby tugs. The said sums of £400, £200, and £300 make £900 in all, and if The Blazer is entitled to salvage reward, then, having regard to her value, size, and power compared with those of the other tugs, the total amount to be awarded for salvage remuneration in this case would possibly be double that sum.

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

An important question, however, arises with regard to the claim of The Blazer and the counterclaim. It was not disputed that if there were no fault on the part of The Blazer in relation to the grounding of The Altair, the services of The Blazer in assisting to get The Altair off the ground and to a place of safety were outside of the towage contract; but, in answer to The Blazer's claim for salvage, it was alleged that the grounding of The Altair was solely due to the negligence of those on board The Blazer, and that, therefore, not only could she not claim salvage, but that her owners were liable for breach of the towage contract, or a breach of duty to the extent of the losses incurred by the defendants, including the amounts awarded to the remaining tugs, and that in any event The Blazer was guilty of contributory negligence, and could recover no salvage.

The law applicable to the relation between tug and tow was stated by Lord Kingsdown in the case of The Julia, 14 Moo. P. C. C. 210, 10 W. R. H. L. Dig. 10. The passage to which I refer was quoted by Sir Barnes Peacock in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Smith v. The St. Lawrance Tow Boat Co., 21 W. R. 569, L. R. 5 P. C. 308, and by Lord Blackburn in the House of Lords in the case of Spaight v. Tedcastle, 29 W. R. 761, 6 App. Cas. 217. It is as follows: "When such a contract is made, the law would imply an engagement that each vessel would perform its duty in completing it; that proper skill and diligence would be used on board of each; and that neither vessel, by neglect or misconduct, would create unnecessary risk to the other, or increase any risk which might be incidental to the service undertaken. If in the course of the performance of this contract any inevitable accident happened to the one without any default on the part of the other, no cause of action would arise; such an accident would be one of the necessary risks of the engagement to which each part was subject, and create no liability on the part of the other. If, on the other hand, the wrongful act of either occasioned any damage to the other, such wrongful act would create a responsibility on the party committing it, if the sufferer had not by any misrepresentation or unskilfulness on his part contributed to the accident." In the present case The Blazer was engaged to tow The Altair from Falmouth to Hull for the sum of £120. At Falmouth the master of The Blazer gave the master of The Altair a code of signals for use on the voyage, and some further signals to be used in case of fog were exchanged. The master of The Blazer said that he told the master of The Altair that the navigation of the ship would depend on the latter. The master of The Altair denied this, and further said that the master of The Blazer told him that he (the master of The Blazer) had been several times to the Humber, and that the last time was not very long since. This was denied by the master of The Blazer. The master of The Altair was an excellent witness, and I believe his version of what occurred then and subsequently.

After the vessel left Falmouth the course was set by The Blazer, and never interfered with by those on board The Altair. [His lordship then discussed the course in fact taken up to the stranding, and proceeded:] The master of the tug and the master of the ship both calculated that this course would bring them to the Spurn Lightship; but it is quite clear, having regard to the chart, the sailing directions, and the state of the tide, that a sufficient allowance for its effect was not made by them. Pursued as this course was, it naturally brought the vessels to the place of stranding, far to the southward of where they should have been. At the time the departure was taken it was clear weather, but it afterwards came on foggy. If the vessels had been on a proper course the Spurn Lightship would have been seen or its fog signal heard. At the time of the stranding the vessel had run a distance from the point of departure almost exactly equal to the distance of that point from the lightship, and as nothing was seen or heard of the lightship the masters should have known for some time before the stranding that the vessels were not on a proper course. No soundings were taken from the tug. On board The Altair soundings were taken. The first at 3.40 a.m., when a sounding of 8½ fathoms was obtained, and from that time soundings were taken every five or ten minutes, 8 fathoms being always the result. At about 5.20 a.m. a sounding was obtained from The Altair of about 7 fathoms, 4 feet, and thereupon the master was preparing to signal the tug when a sound of breakers was heard on the port bow, and although the tug then ported, before anything further could be done the tug touched the ground and The Altair grounded and remained fast at the spot above stated. The Elder Brethren advise me that the course pursued by the vessels was, in the circumstances, an improper one, and more particularly that it was negligent to continue it so long when nothing was heard or seen of the Spurn Lightship, and, further, that the master of the tug ought to have taken or caused to be taken repeated soundings. The excuse made by him was that he thought that the ship would sound, and that he could not take soundings easily without stopping. But the Elder Brethren tell me that in ordinary practice in thick weather both tug and tow ought to sound, and that soundings could easily have been taken from the tug even while she was in the motion, and that the soundings, if taken by the tug as the vessels proceeded, would have shown that they were not on the correct course, and that, if a sounding had been taken by the tug, the leading vessel, shortly before the stranding, it would have shown that she was close in shore, and would have to haul out at once, and that if she had only done so the stranding of The Altair would not have occurred. If the responsibility for the course and soundings rested with the tug I have no doubt that those on board her were negligent with regard thereto, and that this negligence led to the disaster. But it was urged before me that the control of the navigation in this respect rested with the tow alone, and that those on board her should have checked the tug's course and are solely responsible for not doing so, at that at any rate those on board the tow were guilty of negligence in not so doing, and that their negligence contributed to the grounding. It is necessary, therefore, to consider where the responsibility rested, and the conduct of those on board The Altair in the matter. The first point depends upon the application of the principles laid down in the case of The Julia, to which I have above referred. Two cases illustrate how these principles should be applied. The first is the case of The Robert Dixon, 28 W. R. 716, 5 P. D. 54, where a tug which was engaged to tow a vessel from Liverpool round the Shenies, towed her without receiving any directions after the vessels got out to sea on such a course in bad weather that she was set low into the shore, required to be towed out from danger, and sustained the loss of anchors and chains. It was held that the tug could not claim salvage remuneration, and that her owners were liable for the loss. Lord Esher said: "I am very much inclined to think that a tug is bound to obey the orders of the captain, and if the captain had insisted on the tug keeping that course, the tug would have been bound to obey; certainly the captain could not have complained of the tug obeying him. But here, on the plaintiffs' own showing, the only evidence was that at the beginning of the towage the tug was directed to tow the ship in a particular course. I assume that to have been the right course; but on the way the weather became threatening. Assuming that no further order was given by the captain, it was the duty of the tug to use reasonable care and skill, and, unless she was ordered to the contrary, she had the command of the course." No point was made in that case of negligence on the part of the ship. There may have been some difficulty about giving orders in the bad weather from the ship to the tug, or some other grounds for negativing an inference that the ship acquiesced in the course taken by the tug.

The other case is Smith v. The St. Lawrance Tow Boat Co., 21 W. R. 569, L. R. 5 P. C. 508, where a vessel in tow of a tug proceeded in a thick fog and grounded in consequence in the River St. Lawrance, and it was held that the weather was so bad that the vessels ought not to have been under way, and that as they continued under way without any attempt on the part of those on board the tow to stop the tug, those persons must be taken to have assented to the tug proceeding; that there was negligence on the part both of those on board the ship and tug in proceeding in the way in which they did during the fog; and that as those on the ship contributed to the accident which occurred, the owners of the ship could not recover from the owners of the tug for the loss they had sustained. The danger of proceeding in that case was obvious. Sir Barnes Peacock, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, said: "It appears to be clear that, when no directions are given by the vessel in tow, the rule in the case of tug steamers is that the tug shall direct the course. The tug is the moving power, but it is under the control of the master or pilot on board the ship in tow." Then he proceeded to point out how both vessels were negligent for proceeding in the fog, and that the ship contributed to the accident by negligence in allowing the tug to proceed, and not ordering her to stop when it was dangerous to the knowledge of those on board the ship to proceed.

There seems no doubt that the tug is under the control of the master of the ship; but practically the tow cannot be always giving directions as to the course set by the tug, and I am informed by my assessors that the tow usually does leave the course, in such towages as the present, to the tug, and would not interfere unless there were reasonable grounds for doing so. As a matter of fact, in the present case, the direction of the course was assumed by the tug; and it was, perhaps, not unreasonable that it should be so, because the master of the tug had been to the Humber several times before, whereas the master of The Altair had only once sailed out of that river, in the year 1884.

I am of opinion, therefore, that as no direction were given by the ship to the tug, the latter was responsible for the direction of the course. I have found that the negligence of those on the tug, in the matters above stated, caused the disaster, and I hold that no salvage remuneration can be claimed by her.

Then, was the master of The Altair negligent in not checking the course of the tug by signal or otherwise? In his favour it was contended that he knew that the tug-master had been in the Humber before, and might reasonably expect the tug-master, with his experience, to make proper allowance for the tide, and that, although the soundings which the master of The Altair was getting would, if carefully considered, show that he was approaching shallower water, yet that he might reasonably expect that the leading vessel would take soundings and act upon them if they showed that the tug, which was 135 fathoms ahead of the tow, was getting into shoal water so as to render it necessary to haul her tow off. The master of the ship, however, had the same sailing directions and chart as the master of the tug had, and should have known that the course set from the Outer Dowsing Lightship did not allow sufficiently for the tide. If the weather had remained clear this would not have been so important, because the Spurn Lightship would have been made and the course could have been changed. But the weather became foggy, and when the vessel had run nearly the distance to the Spurn Lightship without it being seen or heard, ought the master of the ship to have allowed the tug to proceed? I am advised that he ought not to have done so. The entrance to the Humber is dangerous unless vessels entering are sure of their position. The channel between the Spurn Lightship and the Bell Buoy is only a mile and a-half wide, and it seems to be essential that, in such weather as existed, the lightship should have been made out before the entrance was attempted, and if that could not be done the vessel should have hauled off and waited till the weather cleared. The soundings taken by the master of The Altair should have shown him that he was running into shallow water.

I am of opinion that the master of The Altair was negligent in not checking the course of the tug. He was about to do so when the accident happened, but it was too late. In my opinion, and in that of the Elder Brethren, he was allowing the vessel to run unchecked into obvious danger. Moreover, if he had ported his helm as soon as he had obtained the last sounding the vessel would probably not have grounded.

If I were to hold that the master of The Altair was blameless in the matter, I should in effect decide that the master of such a vessel was justified in trusting the course entirely to his tug when entering a difficult port in foggy weather, and I should be introducing a dangerous precedent.

It was further contended for the defendants that, notwithstanding negligence on the part of the master of The Altair, the defendants could still recover on their counter-claim, and the case of Davies v. Mann, 10 M. & W. 546, and other cases following it, were relied on. But the proposition established by these cases is that "although there may have been negligence on the part of the plaintiff, yet unless he might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the consequence of the defendants' negligence, he is entitled to recover." From what I have found as to the negligence of the master of The Altair, it follows, in my opinion, that he might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the consequences of the tug's negligence, and ought to have done so. I find that the grounding was directly contributed to by the negligence of both the masters. The case is analogous to the case of Smith v. St. Lawrence Tow Boat Co.

I therefore give judgment in favour of the Grimsby tugs for the sums of £400, £200, and £300 against all the defendants, and for £20 against the defendants, the owners of The Altair, with costs. I pronounce against the claim of the owners, master, and crew of The Blazer, with costs, and against the counter-claim.

Solicitors for owners, master, and crew of The Blazer, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co.

Solicitors for other plaintiffs, Pritchard & Sons.

Solicitors for defendants, Stokes & Stokes.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Chitty, L.JJ.) — May 27.

UNIVERSO INSURANCE CO. OF MILAN v. MERCHANTS' MARINE INSURANCE CO. (a.)

Insurance—Marine—Premium—Liability of assured—Custom whereby broker is liable—Company's policy—Promise by assured to pay premium.

The general custom in the business of marine insurance whereby the broker and not the assured is liable to the underwriter for the premium is not limited to the case of a Lloyd's policy, but applies also to the case of a company's policy containing a promise on the part of the assured to pay the premium.

Appeal from the judgment of Collins, J., at the trial of the action without a jury.

The action was brought to recover £1,361 17s. 6d. for premiums on policies of reinsurance effected by the defendants with the plaintiffs through Messrs. Tweedie, a firm of insurance brokers. The business between the plaintiffs and the defendants was transacted upon the terms of an agreement which was prepared but never executed. By this agreement the plaintiffs were to take by way of reinsurance one-half of the aggregate of certain risks taken by the defendants. The premium payable to the plaintiffs was in every case to be at the same rate as that received by the defendants less 7½ per cent., and the premiums, less 7½ per cent. retained by the defendants as commission, were to be paid monthly by the defendants to Messrs. Tweedie, and by them to the plaintiffs' representative in London.

The policies of reinsurance were in the form which is known as a company's policy; they commenced with a recital of the proposal of the insurance to the plaintiffs, the proposers being in most cases stated to be the defendants, while in some cases the name of Messrs. Tweedie was inserted, and they proceeded to witness that, in consideration of the person or persons effecting the policy promising to pay the premiums, the plaintiffs promised and agreed with the insured to perform and fulfil the contract.

Messrs. Tweedie having suspended payment and executed a deed of assignment to a trustee for the benefit of their creditors, the plaintiffs called upon the defendants to pay the amount which was due in respect of premiums, and on their failure to do so brought this action.

The defendants relied on a general custom whereby the broker and not the assured was liable to the underwriters for the premium on a policy of marine insurance, and they gave evidence to show that the custom applied to a company's policy as well as to a Lloyd's policy; and they contended that the premiums were payable by them, not to the plaintiffs, but to the trustee of Messrs. Tweedie, against whom they claimed a right of set-off.

Collins, J., was of opinion that the custom was not limited to the case of an ordinary Lloyd's policy, but extended to a policy containing a promise on the part of the assured to pay the premium, and he accordingly gave judgment for the defendants.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Sir Robert Reid, Q.C., and Carver, for the plaintiffs.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and J. A. Hamilton, for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

May 27.—Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case the plaintiffs seek to recover premiums upon policies of insurance effected with them by the defendants. The policies are not in an unusual form. To my mind there is no difficulty in the case so soon as the question is understood. It seems to me that the plaintiffs are attempting to upset a course of business which has been carried on in London for a hundred years or more. The custom is that the underwriter does not look to the assured for payment of the premium directly, but to the broker. That custom need not be proved in this case; it has been proved so often that the courts take judicial notice of it. It is said that in this case the parties have agreed that the assured shall pay the premiums, and that therefore the custom is negatived. But it has never been supposed hitherto that the mode of dealing in accordance with the custom was contrary to the writing in the policy. It is not a contradiction of the policy, it is a mode of carrying out the contract embodied in the policy. Here the policies say in terms that the assured are to pay the premiums, but that must mean that the mode in which the payment is to be made is to be the customary mode. It is universally understood by all persons engaged in the business of marine insurance that that is the way in which the contract of insurance is to be carried out. The plaintiffs, therefore, have no right to sue the assured for the premiums, and the judgment of the learned judge must be affirmed.

A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: Although the present case arises out of a re-insurance by the plaintiff company of marine risks theretofore undertaken by the defendant company, it may be treated as if the plaintiff company were the underwriters of a policy of marine insurance upon the defendants' ship effected in the ordinary course of business in London through the instrumentality of a broker. The question is whether the underwriter in these circumstances can sue the assured for premiums due to him for so underwriting, or must he look to the broker and to him alone for payment. It cannot be denied that for about a century, at any rate, "according to the ordinary course of business of marine insurance as carried on in this country between the assured, the broker, and the underwriter, the assured do not in the first instance pay the premium to the broker, nor does the latter pay it to the underwriter; but as between the assured and the underwriter the premiums are considered as paid. The underwriter, to whom in most instances the assured are unknown, looks to the broker for payment, and he to the assured. The latter pay the premiums to the broker only, and he is a middleman between the assured and the underwriter. But he is not solely agent; he is a principal to receive the money from the assured and to pay it to the underwriter." I am here quoting the words of Bayley, J., in the case of Power v. Butcher, 10 B. & C., at pp. 339, 340, and what was in the year 1829 held by the Court of King's Bench to have been the then well-established custom in the business of marine insurance. It would appear from Edgar v. Fowler, 3 East 222, in 1803, that this custom was then existing, and Lord Ellenborough, in Edgar v. Bumstead, 1 Camp. 411, expressly recognized it and gave judgment on account of what he termed "the well-known course of dealing between the insurance broker, the merchant, and the underwriter." The evidence given in this case shows that this custom has never been departed from, and still exists, whether applied to underwriters underwriting at Lloyd's or to companies who underwrite at the present day. Arnold, in the first and second editions of his work upon Insurance, the first published in 1848 and the second in 1857, cites the above passage from Power v. Butcher as being the well-known law upon the subject, and in his second edition he sums up the matter thus: "Hence the general rule of law is that the broker is the debtor of the underwriter for premiums, and the underwriter the debtor of the assured for loss." Phillips, in the fourth edition of his treatise on Insurance, vol. 1, section 507 (in the year 1854), thus lays it down: "In England the premium on a marine policy is due from the assured to the broker, and from the latter to the underwriters. The broker has an action against the assured for the premiums, and the underwriters against the broker. All other claims and liabilities arising on the policy are between the assured and the underwriters." It is impossible for the plaintiff company to deny the existence of this custom, applicable as it is to the business of marine insurance in general in this country; but they are entitled to insist, if it be the case, that by their policy with the defendant company this undeniable custom is excluded, the express terms of the policy being contrary to and inconsistent with the custom, and this raises the real question in this case. I must, in the first instance, point out that if the plaintiffs' contention be correct, then this well-known line of business in this country has been entirely overturned when companies and not individuals are underwriters, for it is proved that the policy in question, so far as material to this point, is the ordinary form of policy which has been and is in use by the underwriting offices in general.

The point now taken by the plaintiffs arises because they find that they are unable to obtain the premiums due to them for underwriting the defendants' risks from the broker who effected the policy, he having suspended payment, and the plaintiffs now seek, we are told, for the first time, though like suspensions have often happened before, to get rid of the above-mentioned custom by arguing that by their contract of insurance they have excluded it; or, in other words, that the custom is contrary to and inconsistent with the express terms of the contract. The contract in question, which is not under seal as my brother Collins thought, is as follows: "Whereas it hath been proposed to the Universo Insurance Co. (Limited) by the Merchants' Marine Insurance Co. (Limited) . . . to make with the said company the insurance hereinafter mentioned and described, Now this policy witnesseth that in consideration of the said person or persons effecting this policy"—i.e., the defendants—"promising to pay to the said company"—i.e., the plaintiffs—"the sum of £37 10s. as a premium of and after the rate of £7 10s. per cent. for such insurance, the said company takes upon itself the burthen of such insurance to the amount of £500." In a Lloyd's policy the clause relating to the premium is this: "We, the assurers, confessing ourselves paid the consideration due unto us for this assurance by the assured." Now, why is it under a Lloyd's policy that the underwriter has to look to the broker for payment of the premium, and not to the assured? It is, as was pointed out by Lord Wensleydale (then Parke, J.) in Power v. Butcher, because, "by the course of dealing—that is, by the custom—the broker has an account with the underwriter; in that account the broker gives the underwriter credit for the premium when the policy is effected, and he, as agent of both the assured and the underwriter, is considered as having paid the premium to the underwriter, and the latter as having lent it to the broker again, and so becoming his creditor. The broker is then considered as having paid the premium for the assured." This statement of Lord Wensleydale was approved of by Lord

Blackburn in Xenos v. Wickham, 11 W. R. 1067, 14 C. B. N. S., at p. 456.

In the present case the broker, according to the ordinary course of business, kept an account with the plaintiffs, and in that account gave them credit for the premium when the policy was effected. Then, why is it to be said that by the policy in question the custom is excluded, the custom being that the broker is considered as having paid the premium to the underwriter when the policy was effected, and the underwriter as having lent it to the broker again, and so becoming his creditor?

It is said, because the present policy is expressed to be granted in consideration of the defendants' promising to pay the premium to the plaintiffs, and that this is inconsistent with the custom, and therefore excludes it. But in my judgment this statement in the policy means that the defendants promise to pay the premium to the plaintiffs according to the universal custom in which such payments are made in the business of marine insurance in this country when a policy is effected through the instrumentality of a broker.

It seems to me, therefore, that there is nothing in the written contract which excludes the custom, and I agree with Collins, J., in the judgment he has arrived at, and consequently this appeal should be dismissed.

CHITTY, L.J., read the following judgment: The established custom in marine insurance effected through a broker is, that the assured is not, and that the broker is, liable to the underwriter for the payment of the premium. The ground of the custom appears to be that in most cases the assured is not, and the broker is, known to the underwriter, and accordingly that the underwriter gives credit to the broker alone, and that there is an account between the broker and the underwriter in which credit is given for the payment of the premium. In order to sustain this course of business, and to enable the underwriter to recover from the broker the premium, when it is not in fact paid, it is considered in law that the premium has been paid to the underwriter by the broker, and that the underwriter has lent the premium to the broker. Now, not only is this custom firmly established, but it is settled law that it applies to a Lloyd's policy. A. L. Smith, L.J., has in his judgment gone through the authorities which support these propositions, and has dealt with them fully: it is unnecessary for me to cite them again. The policy before us is not a Lloyd's policy, but a policy which has been in vogue for many years, and is known as a company's policy. Marine policies of this class are all substantially in the same form. They differ in one point from a Lloyd's policy, and it is in respect of this difference that the substantial question arises for consideration on this appeal. There was ample evidence before Collins, J., which justified his holding, as he did, that the custom applies to a company's policy, such as that which we have before us; but the question is whether, as a matter of law, the custom is or is not excluded by the terms of the policy. Collins, J., has held that it is not.

Now, in a Lloyd's policy the underwriter confesses that the premium has been paid to him by the assured, although in fact it has not been so paid. A Lloyd's policy is not under seal; consequently the underwriter is not estopped by the policy itself from showing that the payment which he has acknowledged has not in fact been made. In an ordinary case of contract not connected with marine insurance, and apart from the custom, an acknowledgment of the receipt of money forming the consideration for the promise would go strongly to show that the person in whose favour the receipt is given is liable to pay the consideration which has not in fact been paid. But on a Lloyd's policy the custom steps in and negatives any such liability on the part of the assured, and it prevails to the extent of relieving him from all liability to pay the premium.

The policy before the court is not under seal. It purports to be granted in consideration of the persons effecting the policy—that is the defendants, the assured—promising to pay the plaintiffs, the insurers, the premium. The defendants did not execute the policy; but by accepting the policy the defendants must be held to have given the promise, subject, however, to the custom, unless it is excluded by the terms of the promise. In this case there were the usual accounts between the plaintiffs—the insurers—and the broker, in which credit was given for the premium in the customary manner. According to the custom, as already stated, the broker is deemed to have paid the premium to the underwriter and to have borrowed it from the underwriter. Collins, J., calls this a fiction; I do not dissent from his terms, but, like all fictions in law, it was raised for the purpose of justice, to give effect to the true understanding of mercantile men and to sustain the universal course of business between business men. Fiction or no fiction, it is law too firmly established to justify us in disregarding it. Now, applying this law to the policy in question, it seems to me that the promise by the assured to pay the premium may be read as a promise to pay in the customary manner—namely, by the broker; or, alternatively, that the broker is to be deemed according to the custom, and in point of law, to have paid the premium, and that by such payment the promise on the part of the assured has been fulfilled. In the result I think that the custom is not excluded, and that the judgment of Collins, J., is right.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Thomas Cooper & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. } May 20.

In re FULLER, HORSEY, SONS, & CASSELL AND LEATHLEY'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Custody of title deeds—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 2, r. 5.

A vendor of land cannot, in the absence of express stipulation, retain possession of title deeds because they relate to personal estate also in which he still retains an interest.

Summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874.

The applicant was the purchaser of certain building land at the East-end of London at a sale by auction on the 16th of July, 1896.

A memorandum was duly signed, and an abstract of title was delivered.

Requisitions were sent in, one of which was: "18. What deeds will be handed over upon completion?" The answer was "All."

The vendor, however, refused to deliver over a mortgage deed of the 31st of December, 1885 (under a power in which the sale to the purchaser was effected), on the ground that this deed related also to certain policies on the life of the mortgagor for £3,000.

(a.) Reported by G. B. HAMILTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A. St. John Clerke, for the purchaser.—In the absence of special stipulation the vendor is bound to give up the deeds. Section 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, altered the law. If a vendor retained land before that Act, the question whether the vendor was entitled to retain the deeds or not depended upon the respective values of the land sold and retained: Sugden Vendor and Purchaser, 14th ed., p. 433. "Part of the estate" in the Vendor and Purchaser Act does not include personal property. The Act deals exclusively with land. The title of the Act is "An Act to amend the law of vendor and purchaser, and further to simplify title to land." The preamble is: "Whereas it is expedient to facilitate the transfer of land by means of certaim amendments in the law of vendor and purchaser." Section 1 begins, "In the completion of any contract of sale of land," and the whole Act only applies to cases in which land is sold. There is no doctrine as to title deeds going with personal property, and the reason is that till the Judicature Act policies could not be assigned. The owner of an estate can sue for the title deeds: Harrington v. Price, 3 B. & Ad. 170; and Wright v. Robotham, 34 W. R. 668, 33 Ch. D. 106.

E. Brodie Cooper, for the vendor.—A liberal construction should be placed on an enabling Act, and it should not be limited to land. "Estate" is used in a large sense in the Act, and includes personal property.

NORTH, J.—I think that the case is perfectly clear. The vendor exercises a power of sale in a mortgage deed, and the abstract of the mortgage deed makes no reference to the fact that policies are included in the mortgage security. It is stated in reply to requisitions that all the abstracted deeds will be given up. At the last moment the vendor seeks to retain the deed, because it also relates to the policies. No doubt that might have been an excellent reason for putting in a condition as to the custody of the deed. It is said that the vendor was misled by the Vendor and Purchaser Act, and that a condition was not inserted because of that Act, but the answers to requisitions show that keeping the deed was only an afterthought. It is clear that the deed must be given up. There are many cases of actions by owners of land for deeds, but there is no case in which such an action was successfully defended upon the ground that a policy was subject to the deed. With regard to the argument that the Vendor and Purchaser Act applies, "an estate" means an estate in land freehold, copyhold, or leasehold, or an interest in land of some sort. The vendor retains no interest, and the document must be given up.

Solicitors, Leathley & Willes; Hatchett-Jones & Co.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. } April 28; June 17.

In re MACDONALD.
DICK v. FRASER. (a.)

Executor—Acknowledgment of debt by one of several—Statutes of Limitation—9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1—19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 14.

(a.) Reported by W. SCOTT THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

An acknowledgment within Lord Tenterden's Act of a debt of a testator by one of several executors is sufficient to take the case out of the Statutes of Limitation.

This was a summons taken out by the surviving executors of the late Mr. Macdonald (deceased) against the infant beneficiaries and Mr. Tillson, asking whether Mr. Tillson was or was not a creditor of the testator's estate, and if so, for what amount.

Mr. Tillson entered an appearance, and was willing that the question should be decided on this application.

The point raised was this, was a debt due from the testator to Mr. Tillson barred by the Statute of Limitations.

The testator died in 1894, and the will was proved by the present executors and by the testator's widow, since deceased. The widow was a beneficiary and also tenant for life of the residuary estate.

Between the years 1883 and 1888 Mr. Tillson acted as solicitor to the testator, and there were several matters in respect of which he claimed there was due to him a considerable sum of money for professional services.

On the 31st of October, 1894, the following letter was written and signed by the solicitors then acting for the testator's widow to Mr. Tillson: "Dear Sir,—Re Captain Macdonald, deceased. Possibly you are not aware of the death of Captain Macdonald. Amongst his papers his widow finds a memorandum that he was indebted to you for costs in respect of some proceedings as to a gold mine. We are instructed by Mrs. Macdonald to request you to furnish us with your account, that the amount may be paid. We shall be glad to receive the account at your earliest convenience."

Mr. Tillson did not send in the account at once, and before he did do so the widow died, and in consequence of her death her solicitors ceased to act, and declined to accept the account when sent.

Mr. Tillson only sent in his bill late in 1895, and it was admitted that the Statute of Limitations was a bar unless the letter of the 31st of October, 1894, constituted an acknowledgment of Mr. Tillson's rights.

George Cave, for the applicant.

H. B. Buckley, Q.C., and Morton Smith (A. B. Cane with them), for Mr. Tillson.

J. W. Greig, for the infant beneficiaries.

The following cases were cited: Fordham v. Wallis, 1 W. R. 118, 10 Hare 217; In re Hollingshead, Hollingshead v. Webster, 36 W. R. 660, 37 Ch. D. 651; Tullock v. Dunn, Ry. & Moo. 416; Scholey v. Walton, 12 M. & W. 510.

STIRLING, J., stated the facts, and continued: Lord Tenterden's Act requires the acknowledgment to be signed by the party to be charged, and this has been construed to mean by him personally; but by section 13 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act such acknowledgment may be given by an agent thereunto duly authorized. [His lordship referred to the evidence as to the authority of Mrs. Macdonald's solicitors to write and sign the letter of the 31st of October, 1894, and held that she had authorized them to write and sign it; and proceeded:] That letter, therefore, must be read as if Mrs. Macdonald had written it, and in my opinion amounts to a promise to pay if the the account is sent in.

It was contended that that promise was not made by the widow in her character of executor. It was not seriously contended (and I think could not be maintained) that she made that promise in her individual capacity, for she was under no liability whatever in respect of this debt. It was suggested, however, that she must be taken to have made the promise as beneficial owner. On this I desire to refer to what was laid down by Turner, L.J., in a similar question in Fordham v. Wallis, 10 Hare, 217, with reference to payment of interest on a debt. He says (p. 225), "To consider the question on principle, the bar of the statute is precluded by the payment of interest, because the payment of interest is an acknowledgment of the debt, and the law implies from the acknowledgment of the debt a promise to pay it." As is said by Lord Tenterden in Tanner v. Smart, 6 B. & C. 603, at p. 609, "Upon a general acknowledgment, where nothing is said to prevent it, a general promise to pay may and ought to be implied," and this implied promise rests, as I apprehend, upon the moral obligation to pay. How, then, is it to be affected by the circumstance of the party by whom it is made holding the position both of executor and devisee. . . . The question in those cases, in truth, is, by whom the promise is made, not what is the extent or effect of the promise," and he held that an executor who was also a devisee had made the promise in both capacities. This decision was referred to and followed by Chitty, L.J., in In re Hollingshead. In the present case it seems to me that it ought to be attributed to her in both characters. If it were necessary, which it is not, to decide in which of the two the promise was made, I should be of opinion that the evidence is most in favour of the view that the acknowledgment was made in her capacity of executrix.

Then comes the point on which most stress was laid. It was said that the acknowledgment was made by one only of several executors and therefore did not take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, but that it ought to have been made by all. In support of this the case of Tullock v. Dunn and the opinion of Baron Parke, in Scholey v. Walton, were relied on. Now, as to the decision in Tullock v. Dunn, there was an action against several executors and the statute was set up and it was held that a verbal acknowledgment by one of several executors had not the effect of preventing the operation of the Statute of Limitations. That case came to be considered by the Court of Exchequer in Scholey v. Walton, which was not a case of acknowledgment of debt. There there was a payment made by the defendant, not in his character of executor, but in his personal capacity, and the decision is founded on that. But the effect of an acknowledgment by one executor was discussed in argument and considered by the judges. In that state of the authorities I do not think that it can be said to be conclusively established that before the passing of Lord Tenterden's Act a promise to pay or an acknowledgment by one of two executors did not bind the others, but I am quite willing to accept the view that the weight of authority bears that way and to accept the cases as showing that the law as it then existed did not affect or prevent the operation of the statute.

But now I have to consider what was the effect of Lord Tenterden's Act. That Act after reciting the preamble of the English statute, 21 James 1, and the Irish statute, 10 Car. 2, proceeds to enact (section 1) "Where there shall be two or more joint contractors or executors or administrators of any contractor no such joint contractor, executor, or administrator shall lose the benefit of the said enactments or either of them so as to be chargeable in respect or by reason only of any written acknowledgment of a promise made or signed by any other or others of them." I pause there to remark that that does not appear to me to be applicable to the present case. It deals with the case where there are two or more executors of any contractor.

Then comes a proviso that "in actions to be commenced against two or more such joint contractors, or executors, or administrators, if it shall appear at the trial or otherwise that the plaintiff, though barred by either of the said recited Acts or this Act as to one or more of such joint contractors, or executors, or administrators, shall nevertheless be entitled to recover against any other or others of the defendants by virtue of a new acknowledgment or promise or otherwise, judgment may be given and costs allowed for the plaintiff as to such defendant or defendants against whom he shall recover, and for the other defendant or defendants against the plaintiff. So that if one of several executors makes an acknowledgment or promise the creditor may recover judgment against him in an action against all the executors. It is clear, therefore, from this enactment that the effect of an acknowledgment which satisfies the provisions of Lord Tenterden's Act is totally different from the effect of a verbal acknowledgment prior to the passing of that Act. In the first place, before the Act the plaintiff, suing a single executor or administrator in respect of a promise made by him, could have been met by a plea in abatement which was deprived of its validity by the Act. And consequently it seems to me that the effect of the decision in Tullock v. Dunn and Scholey v. Walton, so far as material with respect to an acknowledgment by a single executor is done away with, and that an action may be maintained against such single executor or administrator who makes such an acknowledgment or promise, whereas previously such an action could not be brought.

It is clear, therefore, that if Mrs. Macdonald were still living an action at law might have been maintained against her in spite of the doctrine laid down in the two cases, and judgment recovered against her on account of the acknowledgment contained in the letter of the 31st of October, 1894. Such judgment would have been for payment de bonis testatoris, and consequently there would have been a right to reach the assets unadministered of the testator.

Now comes the question on which there is very little authority indeed—What was the result of this acknowledgment in the event which happened? Mrs. Macdonald having died, did it go for nothing? In considering this, we must have regard to the clause to which I have already referred in Lord Tenterden's Act. In the first place, I think the use of the word "only" is emphatic, and the enactment provides to this effect, that, if one of several co-executors makes an acknowledgment, and nothing more than that, then the others were not to be chargeable. It is evident from the language of the Act that they may become chargeable by reason of something more, but it is not necessary to go into the question of what would be enough to make the others chargeable.

Then comes the important question, What is the meaning of the word "chargeable"? It seems to me that that means personally chargeable so as to be a personal demand against the executors with respect to it. In support of that view I will refer to the corresponding section of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97) with reference to payments by an executor. Section 14 enacts that, when there shall be two or more co-contractors or co-debtors, whether bound or liable jointly or jointly and severally, or executors or administrators of any contractor, no such co-contractor or co-debtor, executor or administrator, shall lose the benefit of the enactments therein mentioned so as to be chargeable in respect or by reason only of payment of any principal, interest, or other money by any other or others of such co-contractors or co-debtors, executors or administrators.

This language is almost identical—and in its material portions is identical—with that contained in Lord Tenterden's Act, the effect of which was considered by Chitty, L.J., in In re Hollingshead. I come to the conclusion, therefore, that the words "so as to be chargeable" mean "so as to impose a personal liability on the executor." I see no reason why there should be any question as to such personal liability, and there is nothing in the present case to limit the effect of the promise as regards the assets of the testator. The general proposition is that the power of an executor, when he is one of several, does not extend so as by his contract to impose a personal liability on the others, yet his power does nevertheless extend so as to enable him to bind the assets. Therefore, as against the assets, this acknowledgment is binding against them. I think that, under these circumstances, the debt is provable against the estate, the new promise and not the old debt being the measure of the creditors' right.

Solicitors, J. Spencer Chapman; W. M. Tillson; W. S. Greig.

Chan. Div. } April 27; May 22.
Stirling, J. }

In re DELMAR'S TRUSTS. (a.)

Will—Construction—Alternative or substitutional gift—Charitable trust—Scheme.

A testator by his will bequeathed £10,000 to his trustees upon trust to pay one-tenth of the income arising therefrom to "the Protestant Alliance, 1851, or some one or more kindred institutions having for their object the maintenance and defence of the doctrines of the Reformation and the principles of civil and religious liberty."

Held, that the language of the will imported not a substitutional but an alternative gift, and that the testator's intention was to benefit a class of institutions of which the Protestant Alliance was a type; that a scheme for the application of the fund should be prepared, under which, primâ facie, the Protestant Alliance would take the chief, if not the entire, benefit.

This was an originating summons taken out by the trustees of the will of Frederick Orlando Thompson Delmar, deceased, in the matter of the Delmar Charitable Trust and the matter of the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1894, for the construction of the testator's will so far as it directed payment of one-tenth part of the income of the Delmar Charitable Trust to the Protestant Alliance or some one or more kindred institutions having certain objects.

The respondents were the treasurer of the Protestant Alliance and the residuary legatees under the will. The Attorney-General was, by an order in chambers, made a respondent.

At the hearing counsel for the Protestant Alliance pointed out that the summons should have been taken out under order 55, and not under the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and the summons was duly amended.

The testator, by his will dated the 9th of October, 1895, after directing payment of certain annuities and pecuniary legacies, made the following bequest: "I give the sum of £10,000 to my trustees, to be held by them upon the trust following—that is, to invest the same in securities allowed by law for trustees' investments, and to vary such investments from time to time to time as in their discretion they may think fit, and to hold such investments as a fund to be called the Delmar Charitable Trust, and to receive the annual dividends and income thereof, and in every year to pay thereout one-tenth part thereof to the Protestant Alliance, 1851, or some one or more kindred institutions having for their object the maintenance and defence of the doctrines of the Reformation and the principles of civil and religious liberty against the advance of Popery, and in every year to divide the remainder of such income between such of the charitable institutions in London or in the neighbourhood of London as they may from time to time select, in such proportions as they may deem fit having regard to the relative importance and magnitude of such institution, and subject to such provisions for applying the same as they may in their discretion impose, but so that the several gifts shall enure to the benefit of, and to extend the principal objects for which the several institutions are constituted"; and the testator desired that his trustees might include in the institutions to participate in the said income to such extent as they might deem fit certain institutions having specified objects. The testator died in 1896.

The Protestant Alliance claimed to be entitled to the whole of the one-tenth part of the income arising out of the Delmar Charitable Trust. The following institutions (inter alia) also claimed to participate in the one-tenth part of the income—viz., the Church Association, the National Protestant League, the National Protestant Church Union, the Protestant Defence Brigade, the Calvinistic Protestant Union, and the Protestant Evangelical Mission and Electoral Union.

The trustees of the will claimed to have an absolute discretion as to the institutions, if more than one, who should participate in the income, and as to the proportions thereof respectively.

It appeared from the affidavit filed by the secretary of the Protestant Alliance that the object of that society, which was founded in 1851, was as follows: "To maintain and defend against all encroachments of Popery the Scriptural doctrines of the Reformation and the principles of religious liberty as the best security under God for the temporal and spiritual welfare of the British Empire."

Buckley, Q.C., and Kerly, for the trustees.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Meates, for the residuary legatee.

Dibdin, for the Protestant Alliance.—The testator's intention was to provide against lapse. The Protestant Alliance is to receive this sum as long as it exists, and if it cease to exist that money is to be paid to other charities of the same kind.

He referred to Crafton v. Frith, 20 L. J. Ch. 198; Carey v. Carey, 6 Ir. Ch. 255; and Rymer v. Stanfield, 43 W. R. 87, [1895] 1 Ch. 19.

Joyce, for the Attorney-General.—I submit that the court has to determine how this income is to be applied, and that the proper course is a scheme.

Buckley, Q.C., in reply.—I submit that the will gives a discretion to the trustees.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 22.—STIRLING, J., after stating the facts and reading the will, continued: I have read the whole of those portions of the will of the testator which relate to his charitable gifts, although the question arises only as to the institution and application of the one-tenth part to which I have already referred, because it is contended that the language of the second part, where he deals with what relates to the nine-tenths, might throw light upon what was meant in the first part. The first point, however, that has to be determined is what is the position of the Protestant Alliance under the gift. On behalf of the Protestant Alliance it is contended that the society is entitled to receive the whole of the one-tenth income so long as it exists, and that the gift in favour of some one or more kindred institutions having the objects specified only arises when the Protestant Alliance shall have ceased to exist. Now, that in effect is a contention that the gift to one or more kindred institutions is in the nature of a substitutional gift in the event of the Protestant Alliance ceasing to exist, and that rests upon the proposition that a gift in a will to A. or B. is primâ facie to be treated as a substitutional gift to B. in case A. cannot take the benefit which is intended to him. Now, for that broad principle I am unable to find any authority. Undoubtedly there are many cases in which it has been decided that a gift to A. or B. is substitutional, and that conclusion has been arrived at more particularly in cases where the gift is in favour of "A. or his children."

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A typical example is the case of Carey v. Carey, which was referred to in the argument, and which I have more fully considered since, but that case (and as it appears to me all the others which I have examined) was decided on a consideration of the whole will and all the circumstances which can be taken in consideration upon the construction of a will. Now, coming to this particular will, I think that the language of the testator read according to its natural meaning imports not a substitutional, but an alternative gift. It seems to me that what he intended to benefit was either the Protestant Alliance or some one or more kindred institutions. He selects the Protestant Alliance as the type of institution which he had meant to benefit, but I do not think he meant the benefit to be exclusively assigned to them. So understood, the gift is a perfectly good charitable gift, and I have not to face the difficulties which would arise if the gift were in favour of a private individual—difficulties which are so fully and learnedly considered in the judgment given by the Lord Chancellor in the case to which I have referred. It seems to me that this must be dealt with upon the ordinary footing of a charitable gift. It was next contended that the trustees had an absolute discretion as to what institutions were to benefit under the gift, and in what proportions and in what manner, but that contention was rested upon this, that in the gift of the nine-tenths of the income between the charitable institutions in London or the neighbourhood the testator has conferred the power upon the trustees of deciding first of all the selection; secondly, the proportions in which the institutions were to share and the provisions for applying the same which they might in their discretion propose; in fact he has given them an absolute discretion as to the distribution of the nine-tenths among the charitable institutions in London and the neighbourhood. It was said as a matter of construction those same discretions ought to be read into the previous gift. I am unable to come to that conclusion. The words, "as they may from time to time select in such proportions," and so on, stand in the middle of directions which relate exclusively to charitable institutions in London and the neighbourhood, and it seems to me that the power of exclusive selection and distribution and appointments ought not to be read into the prior gift. The result therefore is that as the Attorney-General is here and desires it there must be a scheme. That scheme ought of course to be of the simplest description, and I should think that it might well be embodied in the order which is now to be made. But primâ facie the Protestant Alliance would largely, if not conclusively, benefit, and if the application is to be made for the benefit of any other institutions, great weight will of course be in every way given to the views of the trustees with whom, in the absence of any interposition on the part of the Attorney-General, the right to distribute the fund exists. The costs of all parties will come out of the £10,000 bequest.

Solicitors, Kerly, Son, & Verden; C. H. Collette; Hare & Co.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } April 6.

"THE CRATHIE." (a.)

Ship—Damages—Limitation of liability—Right of plaintiffs to claim in respect of amount of damages already paid—Adjustment of claims between defendants, some of whom have recovered damages under order of foreign tribunal—Practice—Bail for interest on amount required exclusively to answer life and personal injury claims—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 503, 504.

The owners of a vessel who have obtained a decree limiting their liability under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for damage to goods, loss of life, or personal injury, are entitled to put in at the reference in the limitation suit a claim for such sums not exceeding the value of their vessel as they may have been compelled to pay under the order of a foreign court in respect of such damage, loss of life, or personal injury, and in regard to such claim to receive or have distributed to them the same dividend out of the amount in court or otherwise secured, as the plaintiffs in the foreign court would have received if execution on the judgment pronounced by the foreign court had been stayed and such plaintiffs had themselves sued here and brought in their claim in the limitation proceedings.

Those foreign plaintiffs who have not been paid abroad the full amount which they would have received if plaintiffs here, can come against the fund in court or otherwise secured for the balance of the dividend due to them.

By the practice of the Admiralty Division the plaintiffs in a limitation of liability suit brought for the purpose of limiting their liability in respect of damage to goods, loss of life, and personal injury arising from a collision for which their vessel is to blame, are required before a decree is pronounced in their favour, in addition to paying into court the statutory amount to which their liability for damage to goods is limited, together with interest, to give bail not only for the loss of life and personal injury claims for which they are liable, but also for interest on such claims calculated from the date of the collision until payment.

This was an action of limitation of liability instituted on behalf of the owners of the British steamship Crathie against the owners of the cargo lately laden on board the steamship Elbe, the survivors of her crew and passengers, and (subject to all exceptions) the owners of the steamship Elbe, and the freight due in respect of the carriage of the said cargo, together with, subject to the like exceptions, the legal personal representatives of the crew and passengers who lost their lives by reason of a collision which occurred between the two vessels on the 30th of January, 1895, when The Crathie was on a voyage from Rotterdam to Aberdeen.

The statement of claim was verified by affidavit, and alleged, inter alia, that in consequence of the collision the lives of a large number of persons on board The Elbe were lost, together with the whole of her cargo and the crew and passengers' effects; that on or about the 25th of February, 1895, The Crathie was arrested at Rotterdam at the instance of the North German Lloyds, the owners of The Elbe, and an action was instituted in the tribunal of that port against The Crathie for the recovery of the damages occasioned to the North German Lloyds by reason of the collision; that the said action was determined by the said tribunal in favour of the North German Lloyds, and The Crathie would shortly be sold by order of the court at Rotterdam, and the proceeds applied in satisfaction of the said judgment; and that the plaintiffs, the owners of The Crathie, were willing to pay into court or give bail for the sum of £3,668, less the amount of the net proceeds of the aforesaid sale, being £8 per ton on the registered tonnage of The Crathie, calculated as aforesaid, together with interest thereon, and to give bail, if so required, for the further sum of £3,209, making in all the sum of £6,877, being £15 per ton on the gross registered tonnage of The Crathie.

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The statement of claim prayed, inter alia, that the plaintiffs might be allowed to give bail for the said sum of £6,877, less the net amount of such sale, together with interest thereon from the date of such collision until payment, or to pay that amount with interest as aforesaid into the registry.

On the 15th of June, 1896, the action was heard before the judge in court, and a decree was pronounced therein limiting the liability of the owners of The Crathie in respect of damage to goods, &c., loss of life, and personal injury arising out of the collision to the sum of £6,877, being £15 per ton of the registered tonnage of The Crathie, subject to the usual deduction for crew space, on the usual terms of bringing the aggregate amount of £8 per ton, together with interest, into court, and giving bail in respect of the loss of life claims in the sum of £3,209, but with a reservation of all questions as to the liability of the plaintiffs for any damages for loss of life or personal injury, and as to the appropriation of the net proceeds of the sale of The Crathie under an order made in an action instituted by the owners of the steamship Elbe at Rotterdam.

On the 12th of February, 1896, the registrar made the following report: This terrible collision between these two steamers occurred in the North Sea on the 30th of January, 1895, and The Elbe sank, and nearly all aboard of her were drowned. She had left Bremen with a large crew and a number of passengers, principally emigrants, and a quantity of cargo for New York. The Crathie was in ballast from Rotterdam for Aberdeen, and being badly damaged returned to Rotterdam. Shortly after the collision proceedings were commenced against The Crathie by the owners of The Elbe and others, and the vessel having been sold by order of the court, the proceeds of sale were eventually paid out to the claimants in that court. On the 25th of February, 1895, an action was commenced in this court by the owners of The Crathie with a view to limiting their liability according to English law, and on the 15th of June, 1895, a decree was pronounced fixing their statutory liability at £6,877, being £15 per ton on the tonnage of The Crathie, exclusive of interest. All questions, however, were reserved with respect to the plaintiffs' liability for loss of life or personal injury and with respect to the appropriation of the proceeds of sale of The Crathie under the order of the court at Rotterdam. On the 4th of July, 1896, a sum of £5,879 8s. was paid into court, being at the rate of £8 per ton, inclusive of interest thereon at 4 per cent. per annum from the date of the collision to the date of payment into court, and bail has been given to pay, when required, the balance of £7 per ton, amounting to £3,209. It was suggested by counsel at the reference that interest was not payable on this latter amount, at all events from the date of giving bail; but hitherto no distinction has been made by the court in regard to interest on the £8 per ton and interest on the £7 per ton; and I am opinion that interest is due on the balance of £3,209 at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from the date of the collision until the actual date of payment, whenever that may be. All claims upon this statutory liability fund and interest were referred to the registrar and merchants for assessment, and the time allowed for filing claims having expired, the case came before us on the 5th of December, 1895.

In the court at Rotterdam there were three sets of claimants, the owners of The Elbe and two insurance companies, claiming for the portions of cargo insured by them.

These claims were pronounced for on the 6th of November, 1895, and were subsequently assessed, the claim of the owners of The Elbe at 565,000 guilders and the claims of the insurance companies at 185,186 guilders, 18 cents, and 107,522 guilders, 5 cents, being equivalent respectively (at the exchange of twelve guilders to £1) to £47,125. £15,432 3s. and £8,960 3s. 4d., and the net proceeds of The Crathie, amounting, after payment thereout of certain costs, to 12,061 guilders, 80 cents, were divided rateably among the claimants as follows: To the owners of The Elbe (8,189 guilders, 16 cents), £682 8s. 8d.; to the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co. of New York (2,449 guilders, 80 cents), £204 3s.; to the British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co. (1,422 guilders, 54 cents), £118 10s. 10d., making a total of (12,061 guilders, 50 cents) £1,005 2s. 6d. Of these claimants it is only the first and third who are claiming in the present action. No claim has been put forward here on behalf of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co. At the reference Mr. Holman, counsel for the owners of The Crathie, contended, as I think with good reason, that his clients, being liable only for £15 per ton, were entitled to have credit for the sum of £1,005 2s. 6d., which had been already paid out of the proceeds of the vessel at Rotterdam, and to have that amount repaid to them out of the fund in court.

There is, however, a further question affecting not the owners of The Crathie but the apportionment among the various claimants—namely, whether the owners of The Elbe and the British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co. are entitled to retain the sums received by them in the Dutch Court in part satisfaction of their claims (which to that extent would be paid in full), and to rank for the balance of their claims rateably with the other claimants against the fund in court, or whether the amounts received by them at Rotterdam ought to be brought into hotchpot before apportioning the fund, in which case they would take only a proportion with the other claimants of the sums already received by them. I venture to think that the latter view is right. Although the decree of the Dutch Court was pronounced on the 6th of November, 1895, before any proceedings had been taken for limitation of the liability of the owners of The Crathie the claims of The Elbe and the insurance companies in the Dutch court were not assessed until after the commencement of the present action, and the case does not seem to differ substantially from what occasionally happens here in collision cases where one party obtains a judgment for damages which are referred to assessment, and before the assessment takes place the other party institutes an action in which he afterwards obtains a decree limiting his liability. In such a case no preference is given to the party who has first obtained judgment. His claim is paid rateably with other claims against the limited amount.

There however are questions which were reserved at the trial, and pending the decision of the court upon them the claims have been assessed in the annexed schedule irrespectively of any apportionment or of any deductions to be made by reason of the proceeds of The Crathie having been distributed at Rotterdam. I would add that the value of the steamship Elbe has been allowed at the amount found due on the assessment at Rotterdam, which is somewhat less than the amount put forward at the reference. The claims presented for loss of life have been assessed at a total sum of £15,870, which is far more than will exhaust the £7 per ton and interest which is exclusively applicable to the payment of such claims. For the balance of their claims the life claimants are by the practice of the court entitled to share pari passu with the property claims on the £8 per ton and interest.

It appeared by the schedule to this report that £7,556 was allowed for loss of property to the British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co., and to the owners of The Elbe, in respect of their claim for the loss of The Elbe, her provisions, stores, and coals, £47,125; and that, whilst the total of the sums allowed by the registrar and merchants as compensation to the various claimants for the loss of life amounted as stated in the report to £15,870, the sums allowed by them as compensation for loss of property were, on the whole, £130,690. The proportions of these aggregate sums to be paid to the various claimants were not set out in the schedule.

March 22.—Sir W. Phillimore, Q.C., and Kilburn now moved the judge in court: First, that the report of the registrar be generally confirmed, but reviewed if necessary so as to insure that the recommendation of the registrar therein be carried into effect by advising that the claim and judgment in favour of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co. of New York in the proceedings at Rotterdam rank as a claim against the fund in court to the full extent of the said judgment, and by a further order that the several sums of £682 8s. 8d. obtained by the owners of the steamship Elbe, of £204 3s. obtained by the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co., and of £118 10s. 10d. obtained by the British and Foreign Insurance Co. at Rotterdam, be deducted from the several amounts to which the said several claimants may be entitled; and that the full amount of such deductions be forthwith paid over to the plaintiffs, or in the alternative, for an order for the payment out to them of the said sums of £682 8s. 8d., £204 3s., and £118 10d. 10d., amounting in all to the sum of £1,005 2s. 6d., the net proceeds of the wreck of The Crathie at Rotterdam. Secondly, that the court do order that no interest be payable upon the sum of £3,209, being £7 per ton on the gross register of The Crathie, in respect of which bail has been put in.

J. P. Aspinall, Q.C., and Butler Aspinall, for the owners of The Elbe and certain defendants (Nos. 71, 72, and 73), claimed costs in respect of loss of life.

J. Walton, Q.C., and Stubbs, for owners of a portion of the cargo on board The Elbe.

Baden Powell, for other owners of cargo on board The Elbe.

Pritchard, for other defendants, claimants in respect of loss of life (No. 1, No. 55).

The arguments of counsel sufficiently appear from the judgment.

The authorities referred to not cited in the judgment were: The Simla, Williams and Bruce Admiralty Practice, p. 700; The Baron Aberdare, 36 W. R. 616, 13 P. D. 105; The Vera Cruz, 33 W. R. 477, 10 App. Cas. 59; The Orient, 20 W. R. 6, L. R. 3 P. C. 696.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 6.—BARNES, J.—The facts of this case are as follows: On the 30th of January, 1895, a collision occurred in the North Sea between the British steamship Crathie and the German steamship Elbe, belonging to some of the defendants, and at the time of the collision bound from Bremen to New York with cargo and passengers. In consequence of the collision The Elbe sank and was totally lost, with her cargo and the effects of the crew and passengers, and a large number of the crew and passengers were drowned. The Crathie after the collision put into Rotterdam, damaged by the collision, and proceedings were taken against her there by the owners of The Elbe, by the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co. of New York, and by the British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co., who were interested in portions of the cargo of The Elbe. In these proceedings The Crathie was found to blame for the collision, and sold by order of the court, and the net proceeds of the sale—viz., £1,005 2s. 6d.—were paid out to the three claimants rateably. The owners of The Elbe received £682 8s. 8d., the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co. of New York £204 3s., and the British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co. £118 10s. 10d. The owners of The Crathie, some of whom reside in England and some in Scotland, instituted the present suit to limit their liability for the collision, which occurred without their fault or privity; and on the 15th of June, 1896, a decree was pronounced fixing their statutory liability at £6,877, being £15 per ton on the tonnage of The Crathie, exclusive of interest, but all questions with regard to the liability of the plaintiffs for any damages for loss of life or personal injury, and with respect to the appropriation of the proceeds of the sale of the vessel under the order of the court of Rotterdam, was reserved.

On the 4th of July, 1896, a sum of £3,879 8s. was paid into court, being at the rate of £8 per ton, inclusive of interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from the date of collision till the date of payment into court, and bail was given to pay when required the balance of £7 per ton, amounting to £3,209. The claims in the suit were referred to the registrar and merchants for assessment, and the registrar made his report on the 12th of February, 1897, from which it appears that the total claims for loss of life has been assessed at £15,870, and for loss of property at £130,690. This last sum includes a claim by the owners of The Elbe for the loss of that vessel amounting to £47,125, and a claim by the British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co. in respect of the goods for which they had claimed at Rotterdam amounting to £7,556, but the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co. of New York made no claim in the present proceedings. Objections were taken to the report of the registrar, which were heard by me on the 22nd of March on motion, when the several parties were represented. The owners of cargo, other than the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co. and the British and Foreign Insurance Co., objected that no claim could be made in these proceedings by the owners of The Elbe and these two companies, because they had elected to sue in Holland.

The claims of these claimants, however, were not satisfied in full in the proceedings in Holland, and there is no ground for excluding them from coming in as claimants in this suit. The objection was not supported by the citation of any authority or by any valid argument. A discussion then took place as to the proper method of adjusting the claims against the sum of £3,879 in court, having regard to the payments made to the three claimants in Holland. I am of opinion that the amount to be paid to each claimant against this fund must be calculated, in the first instance, as if no payments had been made in Holland, and as if the Atlantic Insurance Co. had claimed in this suit, but that the owners of The Elbe and the British and Foreign Insurance Co. must respectively give credit as against the sums which such a calculation will show to be payable in respect of their claims for the sum which they have respectively received in Holland. The amount will then work out thus: If the credits to be allowed by the two last-mentioned claimants respectively are equal to or less than their respective proportions of the fund, these two claimants respectively will have the differences, if any, to receive, and the plaintiffs will take out of the fund a sum equal to the said amounts already received by these two claimants; and it follows that the plaintiffs will also take out of the fund a sum equal to the said amount received by the Atlantic Insurance Co. If, on the other hand, the credits respectively exceed their respective proportions of the fund, these two claimants will take nothing out of the fund, and the owners of The Crathie will only take out of the fund the proportions which the three claimants in Holland should have received out of it if no previous payments had been made to them. As the Atlantic Insurance Co. make no claim in this suit, if the sum which would have been their proportion of the fund had they been claimants exceeds what they have received, the difference will be distributed amongst the other claimants pro rata.

This adjustment gives proper effect to the limitation of liability to which the owners of The Crathie are entitled under the statute, and is in accordance with the only decision to which I have been referred on the subject—viz., the Scotch case of Rankine v. Raschen (Court of Sessions Cases, 4th series, vol. 4, p. 725). With regard to the claims for loss of life, there seems to have been some question at one time whether the claimants could make any claim in this suit, because they had not brought actions in England under Lord Campbell's Act, and these claims were filed considerably more than a year after the accident, but some of them had sued the owners of The Crathie in Scotland, where some of the owners resided, and it was stated to me that, except for the limitation proceedings, the claims can be made in Scotland, and that the delay has not barred them in that country. Therefore it was conceded before me that the life claimants were entitled to make their claims in these proceedings. These claims exceed the said sum of £3,209, and the life claimants seek to resort for the balance of their claims to the fund in court—namely, £3,879 8s.—pro rata with the other claimants. An objection to this was suggested in argument, but this objection was not raised in the notice of motion, and was abandoned, and I therefore accede to this demand of the life claimants: see Williams and Bruce Admiralty Practice, p. 382.

The only other matter in dispute was as to whether or not the plaintiffs are liable to pay interest on the said sum of £3,209, representing £7 per ton on the ship's tonnage. The life claimants contended that the plaintiffs are liable to pay interest on this sum from the date of the collision until it is brought into court for distribution in the same way as they are liable to pay interest on the sum representing £8 per ton on the ship's tonnage. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contended that they are under no liability for interest on the said sum of £3,209. That the owners of a ship claiming to limit their liability in our courts in respect of loss or damage caused to any other vessel, or to any goods, merchandise, or other things whatsoever on board any other vessel, by reason of the improper navigation of the ship, are liable to pay interest on the amount of their liability calculated at £8 per ton on the ship's tonnage from the date of the collision until the date of payment into court, has been determined in several cases (see The Northumbria, 18 W. R. 188. L. R. 3 A. & E. 6, and Smith v. Kirby, 24 W. R. 207, 1 Q. B. D. 131, and cases there cited). The practice of the Admiralty Court upon this point has been invariable. The statute limits the liability to damages beyond the statutory amount, but the interest has to be paid in addition, because the payment of the amount is delayed from the date of the loss until the payment into court. This practice has been followed with regard to the £7 fund in several instances, of which particulars have been furnished to me by the registrar when claims for loss of life has exceeded the limit of that fund, and in my opinion this is right in principle: see The Victoria, 37 W. R. 62, 13 P. D. 125.

I see no substantial distinction between the cases of the two funds. Interest ought to be paid for the delay in bringing in the £7 fund just as much as in the case of the other fund. This places all claimants in the position in which they would be if these claims were made and dealt with at the time when the liability in respect of them arose, avoids the inconsistency which would exist if the life claimants received no interest on the £7 fund, and yet were to share in respect of the balance of their claims pro rata with other claimants in the interest on the £8 fund; and removes all temptation to the wrongdoer to delay the payment as long as possible.

It was urged that one of the reasons which influenced the learned judges who decided the cases to which I have referred to allow interest on the £8 fund was that in the Admiralty Court interest is always allowed from the date of the loss on claims from loss of property, whereas the claims for loss of life are personal claims of a common law nature, to which interest should not be added. But I think it is correct to answer that there is nothing to prevent the jury in a common law action, or the registrar and merchants, if they are left to assess the claims in admiralty, from taking into account any delay in payment as part of the damages, so that interest can thus be recovered from the date of the collision (see Lord Hatherley in Straker v. Hartland, 2 H. & M. 570, 13 W. R. Ch. Dig. 52, and The British Columbia Saw Mills. Co. v. Nettleship, 16 W. R. 1046, L. R. 3 C. P. 499, and the cases collected under the title "Interest Recoverable as Damages" in Mayne on Damages, 4th ed., pp. 150-152). I understand from the registrar that his report was intended to be in accordance with the principles I have indicated; but to prevent any uncertainty in the matter I direct that the accounts be adjusted in accordance with my judgment, and subject to this direction I confirm the report and order the plaintiffs to pay into court interest on the said sum of £3,209 from the date of the collision until that sum is brought into court.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Denning, Holman, & Co.

Solicitors for the owners of The Elbe, Clarkson & Co.

Solicitors for the owners of the cargo of The Elbe, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co.; Stokes & Stokes.

Solicitors for the defendants interested in loss of life claims No. 1 to No. 55, Pritchard & Sons.

Prob. Div. and Adm. Div. Divorce. } May 20; June 4.

MOSS v. MOSS (OTHERWISE ARCHER). (a.)

Divorce—Nullity—Fraud inducing marriage.

A marriage is not rendered null and void by concealed unchastity or pregnancy on the part of the wife at the time of the marriage.

Hearing of the husband's petition for a declaration of nullity of his marriage with the respondent on the ground of her fraud in concealing from him the fact that she was pregnant by another man at the time of the marriage.

The cause was undefended, but the Queen's Proctor, at the suggestion of the Court, appeared to argue the case.

May 20.—Bargrave Deane, Q.C., Ram, and Marchant, for the petitioner.

Inderwick, Q.C., and Guy Stephenson, for the Queen's Proctor.

The facts proved and the arguments are fully set out in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 4.—JEUNE, P., delivered the following considered judgment:—In this case the petitioner seeks to have his marriage with the respondent declared null and void, on the ground that, without his knowledge in fact, and without any neglect on his part to make himself acquainted with the truth, his wife was pregnant by another man at the time of his marriage with her. I find that these allegations of fact were proved. It was also stated that the connection of the respondent with the father of her child was incestuous. The proof of this was not made complete. I do not know whether it could have been; but the allegation was admitted to be immaterial for the purposes of the present case. Had the connection been with a relative, within the forbidden degrees, of the petitioner, there is high authority for saying that the marriage would have been incestuous and void. On these facts, the argument before me was that there was fraud by the wife in regard to the essentials of marriage, and that, therefore, the marriage was null and void. It would, perhaps, be sufficient for me to say that for this proposition no authority in the English law can be found, and it would be impossible for this court, at the present day, to give assent to a principle of such importance, and so far-reaching, without the sanction of precedent. The absence of English authority was, indeed, almost, if not quite, admitted on behalf of the petitioner, and the argument in his favour was mainly based on the reasoning in decisions of some of the American Courts.

But the case was argued by Mr. Deane with so much earnestness and ability that I feel bound to state my view of the English authorities to which he referred, and to indicate the difference, as I conceive it to exist, between the law as understood in England and that laid down in certain States of America on the point in question. In the case of Swift v. Kelly, 3 Knapp 257, 293, decided in 1835, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, Lord Brougham, Parke, B., and Shadwell, V.C., being members of the board, expressed its opinion in the following terms: "It should seem, indeed, to be the general law of all countries, as it certainly is of England, that unless there be some positive provision of statute law, requiring certain things to be done in a specified manner, no marriage shall be held void merely upon proof that it had been contracted upon false representations, and that but for such contrivances consent never would have been obtained. Unless the party imposed upon has been deceived as to the person, and thus has given no consent at all, there is no degree of deception which can avail to set aside a contract of marriage knowingly made."

It is not necessary to inquire how far the law of other countries may be supposed at that time to have been the same as that of this country; but I think that the above words, unqualified as they are, do represent with substantial accuracy the law of England. While habitually speaking of marriage as a contract, English lawyers have never been misled by an imperfect analogy into regarding it as a mere contract, or into investing it with all the qualities and conditions of ordinary civil contracts. They have expressed their sense of its distinctive character in different language, but always to the same effect. Lord Stowell said that it was both a civil contract and a religious vow: Turner v. Meyers, 1 Hagg. Consist. 414, referring, no doubt, mainly to the incapacity of the contracting parties to dissolve it. Dr. Lushington spoke of it as more than a civil contract: Miles v. Chilton, 1 Rob. Ecc. 684. Lord Hannen said: "Very many serious difficulties arise if marriage be regarded only in the light of a contract. It is, indeed, based on contract of the parties, but it is a status arising out of a contract: Sottomayer v. De Barros, 27 W. R. 914, 5 P. D. 94. The late President, Sir Charles Butt, said, in the case of Andrews v. Ross, 37 W. R. 239, 14 P. D. 15, that "the principles prevailing in regard to contract of marriage differ from those prevailing in all other contracts known to the law." It is not necessary to enumerate all those differences. The most striking of them are familiar. The parties who contract a marriage cannot at their will dissolve it. Excepting for the moment such fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation as is alleged in the present case, no fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation enables the defrauded party who has consented to it to rescind it. Incapacity to consent arising from mental weakness is a fatal objection, not only if urged by or on behalf of the person unable to consent, but if put forward by the capable party to the contract. See Hunter v. Edney, 10 P. D. 93; Durham v. Durham, ibid, p. 80, 33 W. R. Dig. 96. Again, if both parties to the contract knowingly and wilfully marry without compliance with the law as to publication of banns, either can have the marriage declared null: Andrews v. Ross—a state of the law which drew from the late President the observation above quoted. I do not mean that, regarding marriage as a contract, explanations more or less far-fetched might not be given of these peculiarities, in order to force the law of marriage into line with the law of ordinary civil contract, but English courts have not resorted to these expedients, and, while not taking a pedantic objection to the use of the term contract as applied to marriage, they have been content to recognize characteristic peculiarities in the nature and incidents of the marriage contract.

The result is that the English law of the validity of marriage is clearly defined. There must be the voluntary consent of both parties. There must be compliance with the legal requirements of publication and solemnization, so far as the law deems it essential. There must not be incapacity in the parties to marry, either as respects age and physical incapacity or as respects relationship by blood or marriage. Failure in these respects, but I believe in no others (I omit reference to the peculiar statutory position of the descendants of George II.), renders the marriage void or voidable. It has been repeatedly laid down that a marriage may be declared null on the ground of fraud or duress. But on examination it will be found that this is only a way of amplifying the proposition long ago laid down (Fulwood's case, Cro. Car. 482, 488, 493) that the voluntary consent of the parties is required. In the case of duress with regard to the marriage contract, as with regard to any other, it is obvious that there is an absence of a consenting will. But when in English law fraud is spoken of as a ground for avoiding a marriage, this does not include such fraud as induces a consent, but is limited to such fraud as procures the appearance without the reality of consent. The simplest instance of such fraud is personation, or such a case as that supposed by Lord Ellenborough in Rex. v. Burton-on-Trent, 3 M. & Sel. 537, of a man assuming a name to conceal himself from the person to whom he is to be married. In Portsmouth v. Portsmouth, 1 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 355, and Harrod v. Harrod, 1 K. & J. 4, the fraud consisted in taking advantage of a mind not absolutely insane, but weak, to induce, in the one case a man, in the other a woman, to enter into a contract which —to use the phrase of Wood, V.C., in the latter case— he or she did not understand. Browning v. Reane, 2 Phill. 69, and Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 4 Notes of Cas. 295, are other cases of the same kind. In all these—and, I believe, in every case where fraud has been held to be the ground for declaring a marriage null—it has been such fraud as has procured the form without the substance of agreement, and in which the marriage has been annulled, not because of the presence of fraud, but because of the absence of consent. This is illustrated by the imaginary case suggested by Lord Campbell in Reg. v. Millis, 10 Cl. & F. 534, 785, of a mock marriage in a masquerade where the kind of result which fraud might have produced would be produced by mistake. In such an instance there would be no fraud, but for want of real consent the marriage would be declared void. But when there is consent no fraud inducing that consent is immaterial. Lord Stowell has at least three times expressed this in the most emphatic language. In Wakefield v. Mackay, 1 Phill. 134, 137, that learned judge said: "Error about the family or fortune of the individual, though procured by disingenuous representations, does not at all affect the validity of the marriage"; in Ewing v. Wheatley, 2 Hagg. Consist. 175, at p. 183: "It is perfectly established that no disparity of fortune or mistake as to the qualities of the person will impeach the vinculum of marriage"; and in Sullivan v. Sullivan, 2 Hagg. Consist. 238, at p. 248: "The strongest case you could establish of the most deliberate plot, leading to a marriage, the most unseemly in all disproportions of rank, of fortune, of habits of life, and even of age itself, would not enable the court to release him from claims which, though forged by others, he has rivetted on himself. If he is capable of consent and has consented, the law does not ask how the consent has been induced."

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

The only authorities before me which were referred to as in any degree inconsistent with these views are the case of Miss Turner's Marriage Act, and a dictum of the late President in Scott v. Sebright, 35 W. R. 258, 12 P. D. 21. Neither of these deals with such facts as are relied on in the present case, and this case I put forward at most as sanctioning a somewhat wider application of this doctrine of fraud as a ground for annulling marriage than the above authorities indicate. In the case of Miss Turner the marriage was annulled by Act of Parliament. It is not possible to say exactly on what ground the votes of the legislators were given; but it is suggested that the marriage was brought about, as indeed it was, by conduct into which fraud largely entered. It might be sufficient to say of this decision that, as was pointed out in Templeton v. Tyree, 21 W. R. 81, L R. 2 P. & D. 420, it was an Act of the Legislature, not necessarily, therefore, proceeding on the principles of the Ecclesiastical Courts, which, in nullity cases, are the guide of this tribunal. It is also to be remarked that, in fact, the case was never brought before the Ecclesiastical Court, though, no doubt, the omission to do so was explained by Lord Eldon in the House of Lords and Mr. Peel in the House of Commons to have been caused by the impossibility of placing the evidence of Miss Turner, as a party, before the Ecclesiastical Courts: Hansard, vol. 17, 2nd ser., pp. 787, 1134. But a stronger observation, I think, is that duress is distinctly alleged in the petition: House of Lords Journal, vol. 59, p. 308, and that the evidence in the case clearly proved that not only by fraudulent misrepresentations of fact, but by duress of threats, such apparent consent as was given was extorted from the victim of this treatment. In Scott v. Sebright, 35 W. R., at p. 259, 12 P. D., at p. 23, the late President said: "The courts of law have always refused to recognize as binding contracts to which the consent of either party has been obtained by fraud or duress, and the validity of a contract of marriage must be tested and determined in precisely the same manner as that of any other contract." Standing by themselves, these words may appear capable of a wider effect than any other English authority of which I am aware would warrant. But read in connection with the facts before the court, which showed a case of deception and force acting on a weakened mind, they do not appear to me to go further than to lay down that as in the case of marriage, as in that of other contracts, fraud and duress may be so employed as to render an apparent consent in truth no consent at all. The principles thus long and uniformly asserted by the English courts, and the very fact that the point has never been raised, appear to me to be so conclusive on the present question that, even if it could be shown that authority to the contrary could be found in the canon law, I should say that that authority has not been accepted in this country. But as a fact I think that the principles above indicated may be traced back to the canon law. The canon law clearly refuses to allow a marriage to be declared null on the ground of previous unchastity of the wife, and it goes far to declare that the only fraud which vitiates marriage is that which goes to the consent. Ayliffe in his "Parergon," p. 361, says: "Matrimony ought to be contracted with the utmost freedom and liberty of consent imaginable, without fear of any person whatsoever; for matrimony contracted through any menace or impression of fear is null and void ipso jure. . . . For marriages contracted against the will of either of the parties are usually attended with very bad and dismal consequences. . . . I have just now observed that the principal thing required to a legal marriage is the consent of the parties contracting, which is sufficient alone to establish such a marriage. And though there is nothing more contrary to consent than error, yet every error does not exclude consent, wherefore I shall here consider what kind of error it is, according to the canon law, that hinders or impeaches a matrimonial consent and renders it null and void ab initio. Now, there are four species of error which are hereunto referred. The first is styled error personæ, as, when I have thoughts of marrying Ursula, yet, by my mistake of the person, I have married Isabella. For an error of this kind it is not only an impediment to a marriage contract, but it even dissolves the contract itself through a defect of consent in the person contracting it. For deceit is oftentimes wont to intervene in this case, which ought not to be of any advantage to the person deceiving another. A second species is styled an error of condition; as when I think I marry a free woman, and through a mistake I have contracted wedlock with a bondwoman, and so vice versâ; for by the canon law such an error is an impediment to a matrimonial contract. But as there is now no such thing among Christians as persons that are truly bondmen and bondwomen (this kind of bondage or servitude being now abolished among us by the advantage of the Christian religion) I shall not long insist on this head. But if a freedman married a bondwoman, knowing her to be such, the Church did not dissolve such a marriage. And thus we read that the marriage between Abraham and Agar the handmaid was a true and valid marriage. The third species is what we call error fortunæ, and is when I think to marry a rich wife and in truth have contracted matrimony with a poor one. But this error does not, even by the canon law, dissolve a marriage contract made simply and without any condition subsisting. But it is otherwise by that law if I have contracted with a person to marry her upon condition that she is worth so many thousand pounds and the condition is not made good. The last species is styled an error of quality—viz., when a person is mistaken in respect of the other's quality with whom he or she contracts. As when a man marries Berta, believing her to be a chaste virgin, or of a noble family and the like, and afterwards find her to be a person deflowered or of mean parentage. But, according to the common opinion of the doctors, this does not render the marriage invalid; because matrimony celebrated under such kind of error, in point of consent, is deemed to be simply voluntary as to the nature and substance of it, though in respect of the accidents it is not voluntary."

While the above is, as I believe, the correct view of the English law, there is no doubt, not only that the law of other countries is not the same on the point in question, but also that in America the difference has been arrived at by arguments which proceed on principles embodied in the English law.

It is not, of course, necessary to examine in any detail the positive enactments of any other country, nor the law of any country whose system of jurisprudence is not the same as our own. The law of the Civil Code of France, the German Protestant ecclesiastical law, the Prussian, Austrian, and Italian Codes will be found collected in Fraser on Husband and Wife according to the Law of Scotland, vol. 1, p. 452. It is, however, curious to observe how the tribunals of some of these countries have deduced from the principle of nullity of marriage on account of error in the person (which English law treats only as a question of identity) the conclusion that concealed pregnancy, or even loss of virginity, vitiate marriage. Thus, a French court, applying the language of the Code, erreur dans la personne to the case of erreur sur la personne morale has held a marriage void on account of concealed pregnancy, a view rejected by the Commission which prepared the Italian Code, and a Prussian tribunal appears by a similar interpretation of similar (perhaps somewhat wider) words in their Code to have included the case of unchastity. There is a remarkable decision on the Roman-Dutch law in the Supreme Court of the Cape of Good Hope, to which Mr. Deane referred me, Horak v. Horak, 3 Searle, 389. The facts there were the same as those in the present case, and the court held the marriage void, following, it would seem, the authority of Voet against what Voet admits to be the authority, though he disputes the reasoning, of the canon law. I will only point out that the learned judges feel compelled to repudiate the length to which Voet carries his argument—namely, the annulment of marriage on the ground of unchastity alone, and the language of their judgment recognizes what difficult questions their decision raises and leaves for future solution. Although, however, the question of annulment of marriage by reason of concealed unchastity has been discussed by Scotch text-writers, one authority only, Bankton, appears to have given in his adhesion to the doctrine of Voet as regards antenuptial incontinence in a wife, but he courageously overcomes the objection of parity between the sexes by remarking, "A breach of chastity in a man before marriage is not so heinous or scandalous as in a woman; nor is there a presumption that the woman would have refused the man on that ground, though she had known it." Lord Stair, on the other hand, has laid down, "If one married Sempronia supposing her to be a virgin rich or well-natured, which were the inductives to his consent, though he be mistaken therein, seeing it is not in the substantials, the contract is valid" (see Fraser, vol. 1, p. 451). There is no decision, as far as I am aware, of any Scotch tribunal annulling a marriage on the ground either of concealed unchastity or concealed pregnancy, nor has any distinction between the two ever been suggested. The decisions in the American courts on which the learned counsel for the petitioner places his main reliance do, no doubt, cover the present case, and the more important of them are, I think, decisions professing to be based on the same principles as we recognize. Speaking with all respect, these courts have, in my opinion, introduced a novelty into the law common to the two countries, and have broken in on the principle that the only fraud which annuls a marriage is that which renders the mind of one of the parties not a truly consenting mind. They repudiate equally with English tribunals the idea that any other fraudulent representation vitiates a marriage, but they lay down that there is one fraudulent representation, or fraudulent concealment, which renders a marriage void, and that is the representation or concealment by which a woman induces one man to marry her when she is pregnant by another. The leading decision to this effect was given by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in 1861 (Reynolds v. Reynolds, 3 Allen 605), a case decided on demurrer. It is not quite clear whether the Chief Justice by whom the case was decided conceived himself to be deciding according to the principle of the ecclesiastical law of England, because he was acting under a statute of the State (Stat. 1855, c. 27, re-enacted by Gen. Stats., c. 107, s. 4), which authorized a decree of nullity "when a marriage is supposed to be void, or the validity thereof is doubted, either for fraud or any other legal cause," and he stated that "this statute was founded on the assumption that a marriage into which one of the parties was induced to enter through the fraud and deception of the other is null and void, and, like other contracts, may be annulled and set aside by the defrauded party."

The learned and eminent American text-writer, Mr. Bishop, however, considers that this statute was "merely jurisdictional" (Bishop on Marriage, ed. 1891, vol. 1, 485), and I think, therefore, that it may be assumed that this enactment was not considered to enlarge the law. The argument of the Chief Justice, as I understand it, is that fraud vitiates a marriage just as it does other contracts, but that the fraud must be "in the essentialia of the marriage relation," and that the fraud of a woman in concealing her pregnancy by a man other than her intended husband at the time of her marriage is such a fraud. It is, he considered, a fraud in the essentialia of marriage for two reasons—first, because a child may be born which, according to the presumption of law, will be the husband's, thought not really his; and, secondly because the woman, at the time of marriage, is incapable of bearing a child to her husband. The departure, as I venture respectfully to think, from the law of England consists not only in extending the analogy between the law of marriage and the law of other contracts, but more especially in declaring a circumstance to be of the essence of marriage which the English law does not so hold. According to English law, as I have above said, the only material circumstance, by operating on which fraud vitiates a marriage, is the reality of consent. The law of Massachusetts appears to me to add another, not, indeed, the want of chastity in the wife, but such want of chastity as results in pregnancy at the time of the marriage. But are the grounds on which this circumstance is singled out sufficient? The most effective criticism of them appears to me to be supplied by the writer, Mr. Bishop, whom I have above mentioned. He analyzes the judgment in Reynolds v. Reynolds with great minuteness, and with regard to both the points above mentioned he gives what appear to me to be conclusive answers. He points out, as to the presumption of paternity, that a man who has evidence to prove the marriage void can prove the child not to be his. It may be added that the birth of the child after makes but little difference, according to English law, in the pecuniary liability of the husband, as 4 and 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 57, throws on him, at least during his wife's life, the maintenance of her illegitimate children whenever born. As to the incapacity of the woman at the time to become pregnant by her husband, he replies that such incapacity (unlike the sexual incapacity for which the courts annul marriages) is temporary only. He is of opinion, therefore, that the reasoning, when looked at in all its parts, is unsatisfactory. In this opinion I respectfully agree. It appears to me impossible to say that it is immaterial that a wife has been unchaste and immaterial that she has become pregnant by that unchastity, but it is material if such pregnancy continues till the marriage. I could understand a broad principle that unchastity before marriage should vitiate the contract, as some States of America have, I believe, enacted that it shall, on the ground that a man believes he is making a pure woman his wife. But that is assuredly not the law of England, and unless there is to be one law for a man and another for a woman it is impossible to suppose it ever could be. But I do not understand why the accidental circumstances—first, of misconduct resulting in pregnancy; and, secondly, of that pregnancy continuing to the marriage—should constitute the momentous difference between a valid and invalid marriage. I think I ought, in fairness, to add that, although Mr. Bishop disapproves the judgment of the Court of Massachusetts when looked at in its parts, he nevertheless approves of it as a whole. "Though the reasoning," he says, p. 494, when thus examined, step by step, appears "inadequate, few in our American profession will reject its conclusion. The true view plainly is that here is a cord of several strands, no one of which has any strength to sustain the result when put upon it alone. But duly combined they do sustain it. The effect of combination pervades equally the law of nature and the law of the land. In the latter it is frequently manifest, for example, in conspiracy, both civil or criminal, and it is manifest in every part of the law where there is occasion for its presence." I will only say that metaphor and analogy in legal reasoning are apt to be dangerous guides. The above decision was followed, though under special statutes, in the cases of Morris v. Morris, Wright 630; Ritter v. Ritter, 5 Blackford Indiana Rep. 81; and Carris v. Carris, 9 C. E. Green New Jersey Rep. 516. Some of the American courts have, however, felt bound to limit the application of the principle that concealed pregnancy at the time of the marriage vitiates it. In Scroggins v. Scroggins, 3 Dev. 535, the husband would not swear that he believed his wife chaste at the time of the marriage. Both parties were white. After marriage a mulatto child was born. The marriage was, however, held to be valid, on the ground, it would appear, that the husband should have detected his wife's condition. In a later case, Scott v. Shufeldt, 5 Paige N. Y. Ch. Rep. 43, it appears to have been suggested as a reason for this decision that the woman could not be proved to have deceived her husband, as she might not, at the time of marriage, have known whether he or the negro was the father. In Crehore v. Crehore, 1 Brown, Mass., 330, and in Foss v. Foss, 12 Allen 26, the wife was pregnant at her marriage by a man other than her husband, but the husband had been guilty of antenuptial incontinence with her, and it was held that he was "put on his guard" or "put on inquiry," and so a decree in his favour was refused. On the other hand, in a case in California (Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. Rep. 87), it would appear that the decision in Scroggins v. Scroggins was disapproved of. I refer to these cases chiefly to show that it has been felt that even the comparatively narrow principle that a marriage is voidable by the pregnancy of the wife at the time of it by a man other than her husband must receive still further limitations. I venture to think that such limitations could not stop at the point indicated by the above decisions. What would be said if the husband did not become aware of his wife's pregnancy at marriage for a long time after it, and perhaps after the birth of legitimate children, as well might happen if a sailor left his wife for a voyage soon after marriage, and before his return there was a miscarriage or the child died? Could he many years after annul the marriage? It is difficult to see why not, if he had no means previously of discovering the truth. Could he bastardize his children? It is also difficult to see why not, unless some further refinement be introduced into the law. My belief is that, to assent to the proposition for which the petitioner contends would be to introduce into a law which now is, and beyond question should be, and he believed to be, certain, a new principle not resting on any sound basis, and, develop as it must in several directions, sure to give rise to many doubts and much confusion. To show that this apprehension is not visionary, I venture to quote the experience of the American text-writer to whom I have already referred, expressed in the last edition of his work, Bishop, vol. 1, p. 452. Speaking of the subject of fraud in relation to marriage, he writes: "Such judicial utterances upon it as we have are largely conflicting, and otherwise muddled. So that, should an author discussing the subject present all the views, and those only, which have occurred to the judges and found embodiment in their utterances, he would lead his readers into a labyrinth of contradictory and chaotic things, out of which the practitioner could not readily discover a path." I hope that I may be pardoned for declining to take a step which, apparently, leads to such consequences. I have to express my acknowledgments to the learned counsel on both sides for the great aid which their researches have afforded to me. I am sorry for the undeserved misfortune of the petitioner, but the petition must be dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

Solicitors for the petitioner, Gedge, Kirby, & Millett.

The Queen's Proctor.

Privy Council.

(From the Supreme Court for Lower Canada, Province of Quebec.)

April 7.

LAROCQUE v. BEAUCHEMIN. (a.)

Company—Shares—Payment in cash—Promoters—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.

Although an arrangement between promoters and a company that the former should sell property to be acquired by the latter for so much cash and so many shares is in contravention of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), still there may be an independent agreement on the part of the promoters to take so many shares presently payable in cash, and an independent agreement by the company to purchase the property for so much money down which would be perfectly legitimate, provided the shareholders are fully informed and a fair price is given.

Anything which would be sufficient evidence to support a plea of payment would be payment in cash within section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867.

Spargo's case, 21 W. R. 306, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 407, approved.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Supreme Court for Lower Canada, Province of Quebec.

The facts are set out in their lordships' judgment.

E. Blake, Q.C. (of the Canadian Bar), for the appellant.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., Cartmell, and Allan, for the respondents.

The judgment of their lordships, Lords HERSCHELL, WATSON, MACNAGHTEN, MORRIS, and SHAND, was delivered by Lord MACNAGHTEN.—The appellant is the liquidator of a company called La Compagnie de Papier de Sorel incorporated in 1886 under an Act of the Provincial Legislature of Quebec known as "The Joint Stock Companies Incorporation Act." The authorized capital stock of the company was 100,000dols. divided into 1,000 shares of 100dols. each. The subscribed capital was 55,000dols., or 550 shares.

The respondents are some of them shareholders and the rest the representatives of the deceased shareholders in the company. The shareholders, whose representatives are parties to the action, together with those of the respondents who were themselves shareholders, were the promoters of the company. From them the company bought the property upon which it carried on its business; and they held the whole of the subscribed stock with the exception of fifty shares belonging to Mr. Finlay, the manager.

The action was brought to recover from the respondents in their individual or representative capacities sums amounting in the aggregate to 25,000dols. The relief sought was based on fraud and nothing else. The declaration in the action stated that although the nominal and ostensible price of the property was 35,000dols. the real price actually paid was 10,000dols. only, and it charged that the property was in fact worth no more; the difference according to the statement in the declaration was accounted for in the books of the company by means of entries which the appellant as plaintiff alleged to be false and fictitious, making it appear that the promoters had paid up their shares in full while 25,000dols. still remained unpaid.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The facts are not in dispute. The property had belonged to a company called "The St. Lawrence Pulp and Paper Co." which failed almost immediately after it commenced operations. The liquidator put the property up for sale by auction in March, 1886. It was then bought by or on behalf of four persons interested in the old company for the sum of 9,000dols. The purchasers entered into communication with certain persons described by the respondent Beauchemin, who was one of their number, as "capitalists," with the view of forming a new company and re-establishing the business. M. Beauchemin was called as a witness by the plaintiff. He said that the four purchasers represented that the property which they had bought was worth 50,000dols., but that he would not take it at that price, and as the result of negotiations it was agreed that the property should be sold to the new company as soon as it was formed for 35,000dols., and that the difference between that sum and the auction price which, by the addition of interest and incidental expenses, was brought up to 10,000dols., should be for the benefit of the promoters of the new company, that is, for the four purchasers and M. Beauchemin and his friends.

The evidence as to value was clear and uncontradicted. A. M. Pontbriand, a manufacturer living in Sorel, who was interested in the old company, was called for the defence. His firm, he said, had made the machinery and put it up. He knew the property well. Including land, buildings, and machinery, it had cost about 80,000dols., a sum which unfortunately exhausted the whole of the capital of the company. He valued the property at the time of the liquidation of the old company at 41,150dols. At the time of the sale the machinery was in perfect order, but the buildings required some slight repairs, which might cost 1,000dols. or so. For the purpose of a paper manufactory the property was, he considered, worth 40,000dols. It would have cost the new company from 50,000 to 55,000dols. to provide itself with similar works elsewhere.

On the 5th of May, 1886, the promoters and Mr. Finlay, who had then joined the enterprize, having subscribed between them 55,000dols. towards the joint stock of the proposed undertaking, held a provisional meeting as shareholders in the new company. The meeting appointed provisional directors, and authorized them to make an immediate call on the capital subscribed and to apply for incorporation. The directors accordingly met and made a call of 75 per cent., payable on the 20th of May.

On the 26th of June, 1886, a petition for incorporation was presented on behalf of the shareholders in the new company. The petition set forth the particulars required by the Act, including the names of the shareholders and the amounts subscribed by them respectively. Letters patent incorporating the new company were duly granted on the 5th of August.

On the 3rd of September a meeting of the shareholders was held; the minutes of the former meetings were read and adopted, and directors were appointed. At a meeting of the directors held on the same day the president, M. Beauchemin was authorized to sign in the name of the company the deed of sale of the property and to acquire it from the then owners for the price of 35,000dols., and a final call was made of 25 per cent., payable on the 16th of October.

In September, 1886, the promoters were credited in the books of the company with payment in full of their shares. The amounts so credited were paid half in cash and half by receipts given to the company by the vendors to the extent of 25,000dols. on account of the purchase price of the property.

After working for about two years and a-half the company went into liquidation. In June, 1889, the appellant was appointed liquidator and in March, 1890, he was authorized to institute this action.

The action came on to be heard before the superior court on the 24th of November, 1894, when it was dismissed with costs. The court held that the plaintiff had failed to prove the material allegations of his declaration. The judgment was affirmed on appeal by the superior court sitting in review on the 31st of December, 1895.

It appears from the reasons given by the Honourable Jetté, J., that the only question argued before the Court of Review was whether the shares of the promoters were paid in full, having regard to the provisions of article 4722 of the Revised Statutes of Quebec, which formed part of the statute under which the company was incorporated. That article so far as is material to the present question is as follows:

(1.) The capital stock of all joint-stock companies shall consist of that portion of the amount authorized by the charter which shall have been bonâ fide subscribed for and allotted, and shall be paid in cash.

(5.) Every form and manner of fictitious capitalization of stock in any joint-stock company, or the issuing of stock which is not represented by a legitimate and necessary expenditure in the interest of such company, and not represented by an amount of cash paid into the treasury of the company which has been expended for the promotion of the objects of the company, is prohibited, and all such stock shall be null and void.

Jetté, J., considered that paragraph 1 of article 4722, which was originally enacted as section 1 of the Quebec statute, 47 Vict. c. 73, was a reproduction more or less exact of section 25 of the Imperial statute known as the Companies Act, 1867. Construing the expression "paid in cash" in article 4722, paragraph 1, by the light of well-known English authorities as to the meaning of the same words in section 25 of the Imperial statute of 1867, his honour held that the shares of the promoters were fully paid.

Before their lordships an attempt was made to reopen the charge of fraud which seems to have been abandoned in the Court of Review. It was urged that the price of the property was not fixed or considered by an independent board of directors, and that in this respect the transaction was improper and fraudulent. This argument seems to be based on a misconception of the decision in Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co., 27 W. R. 65, 3 App. Cas. 1218, where the facts were very different. In the present case it was not disputed that every single shareholder was perfectly aware of all the circumstances attending the formation of the company, and that nobody was or could have been deceived. Indeed, their lordships agree with the opinion of Jetté, J., who prefaced his judgment by observing that the promoters acted in perfect good faith, and that the value of the property was proved to be 35,000dols. at the least.

The learned counsel for the appellant then contended that the understanding between the parties was that the property should be sold for so much in cash and so much in shares. It was admitted that if this had been the real arrangement it would be in contravention of the statute. But the evidence is all the other way. According to the evidence there was an independent agreement on the part of the promoters to take so many shares presently payable in cash and an independent agreement by the company to purchase the property for so much money down. There was not even an attempt in cross-examination to shake the testimony on this point.

The appellant's counsel were at last driven to question the authority of Spargo's case, 21 W. R. 306, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 407, and the long line of decisions in which that case has been approved and followed. They pointed out that on more than one occasion Spargo's case has been disapproved by the present Lord Chancellor (In re Johannesburg Hotel Co., 39 W. R. 260, [1891] 1 Ch. 119; Ooregum Co. v. Roper, 41 W. R. 90, [1892] A. C. 125) and they asked their lordships not to follow it.

Their lordships are not prepared to dissent from the decision in Spargo's case. It is a decision of the highest authority. It was pronounced by James and Mellish, L.JJ., and the view which those eminent judges expressed had, as appears from their judgments, the approval of Selborne, L.C. Referring to Fothergill's case, 21 W. R. 301, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 270, in which section 25 of the Act of 1867 was considered, and in which judgment had been delivered only the day before by the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices, James, L.J., made the following observations, which are not inapplicable to the facts of the present case: "It was said by the Lord Chancellor—and we entirely concurred with him—that it could not be right to put any construction upon that section which would lead to such an absurd and unjustifiable result as this, that an exchange of cheques would not be payment in cash, or that an order upon a banker to transfer money from the account of a man to the account of a company would not be payment in cash. In truth it appeared to me that anything which amounted to what would be in law sufficient evidence to support a plea of payment would be a payment in cash within the meaning of this provision. . . . If a transaction resulted in this, that there was on the one side a bonâ fide debt payable in money at once for the purchase of property, and on the other side a bonâ fide liability to pay money at once on shares, so that if bank notes had been handed from one side of the table to the other in payment of calls they might legitimately have been handed back in payment for the property, it did appear to me in Fothergill's case, and does appear to me now, that this Act of Parliament did not make it necessary that the formality should be gone through of the money being handed over and taken back again; but that, if the two demands are set off against each other, the shares have been paid for in cash. . . . Supposing the transaction to be an honest transaction, it would in a court of law be sufficient evidence in support of a plea of payment in cash, and it appears to me that it is sufficient for this court sitting in a winding-up matter. Of course, one can easily conceive that the thing might have been a mere sham, or evasion, or trick to get rid of the effect of the Act of Parliament, but any suggestion of sham, or fraud, or deceit seems to be entirely out of the question in this case, because everybody in the company knew of the transaction; every shareholder of the company was present and was a party to the resolution; there was no deceit practised on any creditor, nor was there any registration of these shares except as shares paid up. This seems to me to dispose of the case." "It is a general rule of law," added Mellish, L.J., "that in every case where a transaction resolves itself into paying money by A. to B. and then handing it back by B. to A., if the parties meet together and agree to set one demand against the other, they need not go through the form and ceremony of handing the money backwards and forwards." Even if this line of argument were less convincing than it appears to their lordships to be, they would not be disposed to disturb an authority which has been accepted and acted on for more than twenty years.

It is to be observed that in the Quebec statute the expression "paid in cash" occurs in one place and "paid in cash into the treasury of the company" in another, from which it may be inferred that "payment in cash" does not necessarily and in all cases mean "payment into the treasury of the company."

In the result their lordships will humbly advise her Majesty that the appeal ought to be dismissed. The appellants will pay the costs of the appeal.

It appears that during the pendency of the appeal proceedings were stayed against two of the respondents, against each of whom the claim was under the appealable limit. The order will include the dismissal of the appeal, with the usual consequences as against those two respondents.

Solicitor for the appellants, S. V. Blake.

Solicitor for the respondents, Guy Ellis.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) June 15.

STONE v. PRESS ASSOCIATION (LIMITED). (a.)

Libel—Consolidation of actions—Actions against different defendants for same libel—Time for making order—Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64), s. 5.

An order may be made under section 5 of the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, consolidating actions by the same plaintiff against different defendants in respect of the same libel before the defences in the actions have been delivered.

Appeal from an order made at chambers.

The plaintiff brought an action for libel against the Press Association, and sixteen other actions in respect of the same libel against the proprietors of sixteen newspapers. The Press Association had sent the libel complained of to the various newspapers which published it.

The defendants, before the defences were delivered, took out a summons, under section 5 of the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64), to have the actions consolidated. By section 5: "It shall be competent for a judge or the court, upon an application by or on behalf of two or more defendants in actions in respect to the same, or substantially the same, libel brought by one and the same person, to make an order for the consolidation of such actions, so that they shall be tried together. . . . In a consolidated action under this section the jury shall assess the whole amount of the damages (if any) in one sum, but a separate verdict shall be taken for or against each defendant, in the same way as if the actions consolidated had been tried separately; and if the jury shall have found a verdict against the defendant or defendants in more than one of the actions so consolidated, they shall proceed to apportion the amount of damages which they shall have so found between and against the said last-mentioned defendants; and the judge at the trial, if he awards to the plaintiff the costs of the action, shall thereupon make such order as he shall deem just for the apportionment of such costs between and against such defendants."

It was stated at the hearing of the summons that the only defences would be payment into court.

The master ordered the actions to be consolidated directly the defences were delivered. The judge ordered the actions to be consolidated at once.

The plaintiff appealed.

Rufus Isaacs, for the plaintiff.—A consolidation order under section 5 can only be made after the defences have been delivered, or at any rate to take effect after the defences have been delivered. The effect of this order is to allow one defence to be delivered on behalf of all the defendants, and to allow the defendants to make one payment into court to cover all the actions. The section does not allow that. The words "so that they shall be tried together" show that the actions are to be consolidated for the purposes of trial only. The section contemplates separate payments into court, because the jury must find separate verdicts for or against each defendant. It would be most embarrassing to the plaintiff to have one payment into court on behalf of all defendants, because the libel is more serious on account of the head-lines inserted and the damages different in some cases than in others. The amount paid into court in each action ought to be stated, so that the plaintiff may see whether the sum paid in is sufficient. To save the cost of separate defences the plaintiff is willing to accept one defence, provided that it is specified how much each defendant pays into court.

Temple Franks (J. E. Bankes with him), for the defendants, was not called upon.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case an apparently serious libel has been published about the plaintiff. It was published in this way: A news agency published it and communicated it to various newspapers. The plaintiff, in order, as he says, to vindicate his character, has brought seventeen actions in respect of the same libel. The Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, states what may then be done under those circumstances. The defendants may ask for an order under section 5 consolidating the actions. That section leaves the matter in the judge's discretion. The judge has a discretion to make the order for consolidation, so that the actions shall be tried together. There is nothing said about the time when he is to make the order. If the order were not to have been made until after defence delivered or issue joined, the section would have said so. It is insisted on behalf of the plaintiff that separate defences should be delivered, and that, unless that be done, the latter part of the section cannot be worked. I do not agree with that contention. According to the section, the jury must assess the whole amount of the damages in one sum. That is the only sum the plaintiff has to do with. A separate verdict must then be taken for or against each defendant in the same way as if the actions had been tried separately. If the jury find a verdict against the defendant in more than one action, they must apportion the amount of the damages which they shall have so found between and against such last-mentioned defendants. If, for instance, the jury assess the damages at £60, and find separate verdicts against, say, six separate defendants, they must then apportion the £60 as against the different defendants. They may apportion £10 against each, or may award £30 or £40 against the principal libeller and apportion the balance among the remaining five in equal or different sums. That apportionment cannot affect the sum payable to the plaintiff. The whole object of the Act is to prevent multiplicity of defences and multiplicity of costs. It is said that this view will create a difficulty about costs; but I cannot think so, because the judge at the trial has full power under the section to apportion the costs as he deems just between and against the defendants. The appeal must be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This Act was passed for the purpose of relieving defendants from a multiplicity of actions. The Press Association published the libel by sending it to various newspapers and the various newspapers copied it, and the plaintiff, in order to clear his character, sued the Press Association and sixteen newspapers. That is exactly the state of things which the Act was passed to put an end to. The seventeen libels being substantially the same the defendants took out a summons to have the actions consolidated. It must be taken that all the defendants are merely going to pay money into court as a defence. The master ordered the actions to be consolidated after the defences were delivered. The result would be that there would be seventeen different statements of defence and seventeen separate payments into court. The judge varied this order by directing the consolidation to take place at once. It is said that the judge had no power to do that under the Act. The Act does not specify any time when the order is to be made. It is said that the words, "so that they shall be tried together," mean that the order is not to be made until after the defences have been delivered. I cannot find that in the section. It seems to me that the judge may at any time order the actions to be consolidated. The order of the learned judge was therefore right.

RIGBY, L.J.—This Act was passed with the object of diminishing costs where more than one action was brought in respect of the same libel. Section 5 gives a discretion to the judge. It contemplates that the defendants may put in different defences, and that a verdict may be found against some of the defendants and in favour of others. What is a judge to do when he is asked to consolidate actions under this section? He will naturally ask what the defences are going to be. If he is told, as he was here, that the defendants are all going to pay money into court, he sees at once that separate defences are not necessary. The only question in such a case would be whether the sum paid into court was enough. If the jury, by their verdict, find that it is enough, the judge will then tell the jury to find a verdict for all the defendants. In these circumstances I think that the order is right. I do not say that the judge ought to make an order which will have the effect of excluding separate defences. He has jurisdiction to make the order at once, but if he finds that separate defences are going to be put in he ought to make his order in such a form as not to prevent the defendants from raising separate defences.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, C. J. Smith, & Hudson.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lewis & Lewis.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — May 31.

THE HUDDERSFIELD CORPORATION v. THE RAVENSTHORPE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Water supply — Local Government — Alteration of boundaries — Construction of waterworks — Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 51, 52—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 57, 59—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 36 (2).

Where an area has been added to the district of a local authority by an order of the county council, the local authority acquire a right to supply the added area with water under section 51 of the Public Health Act, 1875. But this right is controlled by section 52 of the same Act, and, therefore, before "constructing" waterworks within the added area, notice must be given to every existing water company whose limits of supply include the added area. And laying pipes to extend the local authority's existing water system into the added area is "constructing" waterworks within section 52.

Cleveland Water Co. v. Redcar Local Board, 43 W. R. 90, [1895] 1 Ch. 168, approved but distinguished.

Decision of North, J. (ante, p. 436), reversed.

This was an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of North, J. (reported ante, p. 436, [1897] 1 Ch. 652), and raised the questions—first, what rights an order of a county council adding a district to the jurisdiction of a local authority gave the local authority with regard to the water supply of the district so added; and secondly, whether the laying pipes by the local authority within the added district as an extension of the water supply in their old district was "constructing waterworks" within section 52 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

The facts are fully reported in the report of the case in the court below, and can be shortly stated here as follows: The plaintiffs were the Huddersfield Corporation suing as a local authority having limits of supply extending beyond their municipal area. The defendant council were an urban district authority who take water in bulk from Dewsbury and distribute it to customers in their own district. Their predecessors were many years ago the Ravensthorpe Local Board, having a district which formed part of the township and parish of Mirfield, the parish and township being conterminous. The rest of the township of Mirfield also became an urban district, governed by the Mirfield Local Board. By an Act of 1871 the limits of the water supply of the Huddersfield Corporation were enlarged so as to include the township of Mirfield. The Huddersfield Corporation did not actually supply with water any part of the Ravensthorpe district, which was supplied by its own local authority; but the Huddersfield Corporation did supply the other part of the Mirfield township, including a small piece of about 20 acres, the subject of this action.

By an order of the West Riding County Council, made in March, 1895, and duly confirmed by the Local Government Board under the Local Government Act, 1888, the 20 acres of Mirfield mentioned above, and another somewhat larger piece, were transferred from the district of the Mirfield Urban Council to that of the Ravensthorpe Urban Council. The order transferred to the defendant council "all the rights, liabilities, and obligations which are attaching to the Mirfield Council, wholly in respect of the added area, and all property within such area, vested in" the same council.

The Ravensthorpe authority had lately taken steps to lay pipes in the 20 acres for the purpose of supplying water to that part of the added district. The plaintiffs applied by motion in this action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from constructing waterworks in this part of their added district without having given the notice required by section 52 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to the plaintiffs as being the water authority actually supplying the district.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Section 51 of the Public Health Act, 1875, empowers urban local authorities to construct waterworks for the supply of water in their district. Section 52 provides that "before commencing to construct waterworks within the limits of supply of any water company empowered to supply water they shall give written notice to every water company within whose limits of supply the local authority are desirous of supplying water; and it shall not be lawful for the local authority to construct any waterworks within such limits, if and so long as any such company are able and willing to supply water proper and sufficient for all reasonable purposes for which it is required by the local authority."

North, J., held that the defendants were not bound to give any previous statutory notice to the plaintiffs of the defendants' intended extension of their waterworks into the added area; and that such extension was not "constructing waterworks" within the meaning of section 52.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and A. Glen, for the appellants.—The defendants by extending their mains into a new area are constructing waterworks within a new district. They are bound to give us notice under section 52 of the Public Health Act. We submit that they had waterworks in their old district, and they are now constructing them in a new district. The alteration of the boundaries is immaterial. Sections 57 and 59 of the Local Government Act, 1888, do not authorize the county councils to take away any rights. If they have the power to deprive us of our monopoly at all it must be under section 59 and there is nothing in that section to authorize them.

They also referred to Cleveland Water Co. v. Redcar Local Board, 43 W. R. 90, [1895] 1 Ch. 168; West Surrey Water Co. v. Chertsey Union, 43 W. R. 6, [1894] 3 Ch. 513; and to the Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 51, 55, 64.

Vernon Smith, Q.C., and R. C. Glen, contra.—The defendants have a concurrent right with the plaintiffs to supply water. This case comes within the decision in the Redcar case. If we were extending our mains within the old district we should be exactly within that case, and the position here is similar. Sections 57 and 59 of the Local Government Act are important. First, there has to be an inquiry, and then the county council can make an order. Then the Act provides for the extension of the jurisdiction of any local authority. [LINDLEY, L.J.—Is this jurisdiction?] Yes, it is jurisdiction as regards the water supply under the Public Health Act. [RIGBY, L.J.—Assuming your contention is right, did the order provide any jurisdiction?] We submit it did. The added portions are to be in exactly the same position as the old district. Section 51 of the Public Health Act does not apply here at all. When the area is added we become the authority entitled to supply water. We are only contending for concurrent powers. Putting in these mains would not have been a construction of waterworks within the old district, and we submit it is not a construction of waterworks within the added district. Even if this is a construction of waterworks the injunction should be limited to prevent us supplying water to third parties: West Surrey Water Co. v. Chertsey Union.

No reply was called for.

LINDLEY, L.J.—We are all of opinion that North, J.'s, view cannot be supported. In order to make my own opinion clear, I will state very shortly how the point arises. [His lordship stated the facts, and continued:] Now we have to consider this, whether the effect of the order of the county council in 1895 rectifying the boundaries of Mirfield parish — because that is really what it was—and putting this little added bit into the Ravensthorpe district has extended the power of the Ravensthorpe district council to supply that added bit with water. Now, to a certain extent it appears to me that it has, because by the addition of that added piece to Ravensthorpe section 51 of the Public Health Act, 1875, comes into operation. But section 51 is followed by section 52, which is in the nature of a proviso, and what the plaintiffs say is this: "There is nothing in the order of the county council which has deprived us of our right to supply this added piece with water, and although you (the defendants) have got a right to supply water to this added piece by reason of the transfer of that piece to your district that right of yours is controlled by section 52 of the Act of 1875, and, in short, you cannot supply that added piece unless we are unable or unwilling to supply it ourselves." Now, that must depend not only upon section 52 of the Public Health Act, but upon the terms of the order of the county council and upon the authority under which that order was made. If you look at the order itself one is struck by the circumstance that there is nothing whatever in it about water. Whether the county council in making that order contemplated such a discussion as this I do not know, but so far as words go there is not a word to lead one to suppose that their attention was drawn to it at all.

Now, turning from the terms of that order to the authority under which it is made, it is to be found in the Local Government Act of 1888, sections 57 and 59; our attention has been called to them. I do not wish to express a decided opinion upon them, but I doubt very much whether the county council had power to do anything of the sort. There are some general words which might possibly warrant it, but I confess I have very grave doubts about it, and even if they had the power there is not a word in the order to show that they have exercised it. Therefore it appears to me that the order of the county council, so far as the authority goes and so far as the terms go, does not decide the question at all, and does not help us to decide it. All that the order does is to transfer this added piece from that part of the parish of Mirfield in which it was before into the Ravensthorpe district so as to enlarge the Ravensthorpe district.

That brings us back to section 52 of the Act of 1875. [The Lord Justice read the section.] One sees perfectly well what the object of that was. I am not now criticizing the language; the object was this, that if you find an established water company you are not to deprive them of the power of supplying water under their powers without giving them notice; and the object of giving them notice is obviously in order that they may consider whether they will exercise their power—if they are able and willing to do it, and if they are able and willing to do it then they are to be at liberty to exercise their powers. That is the general object of it.

Now comes this question, which, so far as I know, is a new one. Can it be said here with truth that the Ravensthorpe authority are constructing waterworks within this added area, or are they to be regarded as merely extending their old waterworks which they had constructed and laid down and possessed in their old district of Ravensthorpe? Now, I must say, having regard to the interpretation of the section, it seems to me to be a very strong thing indeed to say that they are not about to construct—I do not understand that they have actually done it—a waterworks within this added piece, laying down pipes and constructing waterworks. Then it is said: "No, that is not so; it is only extending their old waterworks"; and reliance is placed upon the decision of Chitty, J., in the Cleveland case. That decision appears to me to be perfectly right, and if it had been the other way the learned judge would have attributed to section 52 an operation which he saw, and which I think everybody else sees, was never contemplated by the Legislature at all. He had not to deal with what we have got—the extension of waterworks into a new district; he had not that problem before him at all. He had before him the question of whether an established waterworks company in a particular district were prohibited from extending those waterworks within that same district. He said: "No; that is not what the Act of Parliament means." There is a difficulty about the language there, because, in a sense, the extension of such waterworks as the Redcar people were making was a serious matter. It was not putting down an extra pipe or a pump; it was almost doubling their supply, increasing their reservoirs to a very large extent, and it was a construction of waterworks. If you look at it apart from the Act of Parliament nobody could say they were not constructing waterworks. Of course they were; but he said: "That is not what the section is aiming at. You had these rights before, and you are not deprived by the section of your rights." I follow that, and I think it is right. North, J., appears to have been misled by not observing that Chitty, J., was dealing with a totally different case. When you come to look at the language of the Act, I cannot see that putting pipes into a district where the Ravensthorpe authority had no right whatever to put them before the Order in Council was made, is not constructing waterworks within that area. I think it is. I think, therefore, the appeal must be allowed.

A little care must be taken about the injunction, and the injunction ought to be confined to the added area. I say added area, because that is an expression understood; it is used in the order of the county council, and the notice of appeal is so worded that I do not think it is quite right. It must be confined to the added area, and be expressed in the language of the 52nd section.

LOPES, L.J.—What has created the difficulty here is this, that in 1895 a piece of Mirfield was added to Ravensthorpe district by the county council—about twenty acres. Whether the county council had power to make such an order or not I do not say, but they have made it, and it has been acted upon. Previously to that the Ravensthorpe water authority could not supply Mirfield with water, but the Huddersfield Corporation could, and did. The question which arises is this. Does the fact that a piece of Mirfield has been added to the Ravensthorpe district give them a power to supply water which they had not before. In other words, does the alteration of the boundary—because it was nothing more—enable Ravensthorpe to supply this added piece with water? In order to determine that, the important section is section 52, and that section is so important that I shall venture to read part of it: "Before commencing to construct waterworks within the limits of supply of any water company empowered by Act of Parliament or any order confirmed by Parliament to supply water, the local authority shall give written notice to every water company within whose limits of supply the local authority are desirous of supplying water, stating the purposes for which and (as far as may be practicable) the extent to which water is required by the local authority." It seems to me the object of that is to enable the company, by being informed of the quantity of water and the purpose, to make up their minds how far they are willing to supply the water. Then it goes on—and these words are imperative: "It shall not be lawful for the local authority to construct any waterworks within such limits"—that is, within the limits of the supply of the company—"if and so long as any such company are able and willing to supply water proper and sufficient for all reasonable purposes for which it is required by the local authority." No notice has been given here, and that section has not been complied with. Putting it broadly, what is the object of that section? The object of that section appears to me to be this, that companies already in existence are to be protected against new companies or new authorities invading their district and erecting new works where such company is willing and able to supply water proper and sufficient for all purposes. I think that is the object of that section.

The question then which arises here is this: Are the defendants constructing waterworks in Mirfield, or are they merely adding to and improving existing waterworks? In my judgment the laying down of mains in a district not before supplied by the local authority, and where the local authority had no jurisdiction to lay down mains is a construction of waterworks in the fair and reasonable sense of the term. I use the words "fair and reasonable sense of the term," because those are the words that are used by Chitty, J., in the Cleveland case. I think that North, J., decided this case in the way he has, relying upon the Cleveland case; but when the Cleveland case is carefully looked at, it appears to me that it has no application to the present. In that case there was no invasion of any new district. It was there the improvement of, and addition to, existing waterworks. Therefore in my judgment it was entirely different from this case. If all the defendants here were doing was adding to or improving their waterworks within their district, I should have been prepared to say that was within that case.

The present case is entirely different. It is an invasion of a new district by them where they had not supplied water before, and in which they are laying down pipes and mains necessary to enable them to supply water. I cannot come to any other conclusion but that that is a construction of waterworks within the meaning of the Act of Parliament.

RIGBY, L.J.—The Public Health Act of 1875, when conferring by section 51 upon local authorities the power, and imposing in a certain sense the duty, of supplying their district with water, took notice of the fact that all over the country there are existing, or were existing, or might at the time exist, waterworks companies which had the right of supplying water within certain definite limits. Those limits might be coincident with the district of the local authority, or might cover part only of such district; but in any case section 52 clearly intended to give some measure of protection to the existing waterworks company. Before commencing their waterworks the local authorities were to give notice, and then they were not to construct waterworks within the limits of the existing waterworks company if that waterworks company were in a condition to supply the water as provided by the Act. Therefore manifestly in the first instance, the section contemplated a dealing with waterworks companies that were in existence before the local authority began to supply. Did it depend upon the mere accident as to where the local authority began their works? I think not. In the case where the limits of the local waterworks company were co-extensive with the limits of the local authority, no difficulty would arise; but could it be the intention that, if the local authority took half only, they might begin outside the half which was included within the limits of the water company, and, having commenced there, might go extending onwards within the limits of the water company? I think not. I am inclined to think that commencing waterworks means commencing waterworks within those limits for, at any rate, the supply of those limits. Before going within those limits they are to give the notice; having given the notice, nevertheless they are not to come within the limits by constructing waterworks if the waterworks company could make a proper supply.

Now, Chitty, J., had before him in the Cleveland case the case of the local authority having had the right to supply the entire area, and having in fact supplied that area so far as there had been any supply, or, as far as I can see, any demand for the water, before ever the water company was in existence, before the water company had any right to supply there at all. Now the position of things is altogether reversed in substance. The question is no longer what protection should be given to a water company that has had an unlimited right to supply before the local authority comes to interfere; but do the words of this Act necessarily give to a new company a position against the old local authority? I think Chitty, J., found some difficulty in dealing with the case because the words of section 52 appear to be rather strong. But there can be no doubt, I think, that to such a case as that section 52 was never intended to extend, and I for my part find no reason to criticize unfavourably the way in which that learned judge arrived at the conclusion that in that particular case and under those circumstances there was no construction of waterworks within the meaning of section 52 of the Act of 1875.

Now, we have really got the old problem, not a new one. We have got a case in which the Huddersfield Corporation had the right of supplying water within the added area at a time when there had been no waterworks of any kind in that area introduced by any local authority. So that it is the old problem that we have to deal with and not a new one. Did the county council when, acting as it appears to me quite within its jurisdiction, it took away part of the district of Mirfield and added that to the district of Ravensthorpe, in any way affect the rights of the Huddersfield Corporation to supply with water that transferred area which is called the "added area" or the "disputed area"? That is really what we have to consider now. Now, undoubtedly when that happened and before that happened the Ravensthorpe district council had, I think, constructed waterworks within their original district. All that they had done, it is true, was to lay down mains, and to take in water at a particular point or points where they bordered upon the Dewsbury district and by means of the mains and service pipes under their control in their own district to supply water there. It appears to me that that was not only within the popular meaning of the word, but within the parliamentary meaning, constructing waterworks. They did that before the Huddersfield Corporation had ever come there at all. So the situation with respect to the Ravensthorpe original district was the same as that in the Cleveland case. But in the added area the Ravensthore Council had never done anything at all.

Now, then, the question is, did they construct or would they be constructing waterworks if they did in that added area exactly the same thing that they had done in their old original district? For my part I can entertain no doubt that they would be, and that they would be doing so within the meaning of section 52 of the Act of 1875. We were asked, and I think that is really the substance of the argument on the side of the local authority, to say that we ought not to go behind the fact that at the present time by reason of the order of 1895 the district of Ravensthorpe includes the added area. I think, on the contrary, we are obliged to go behind. I do not know that the county council had any authority to interfere in any way with the water supply in any of these districts. I feel reasonably confident that if they had any such authority they did not exercise it here. They did not purport to exercise it here in any way. Therefore I think the order of 1895 has left the rights as they were before, subject only to this, that de novo a power has been given to the Ravensthorpe local authority to supply water in that added area subject to the restriction of section 52.

In my judgment what they propose to do would be constructing waterworks within this new added area included within the limits of supply of the Huddersfield Corporation, and they can only do it by complying with the terms of the section.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Riddell, Vaizey, & Smith, for F. C. Lloyd, Huddersfield; Jaques & Co., for Watts & Son, Dewsbury.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. } June 15.

In re MARGETSON. (a.)

Solicitor—Costs—Lien—Compromise by plaintiffs and defendant behind solicitor's back—Collusion.

Where the plaintiffs in proceedings for taxing a bill of costs had, without the knowledge of their solicitor, come to an agreement with the defendant to stay the proceedings, the defendant paying them the sum of £25 "towards their costs" in the proceedings, and stating that he did so gratuitously because "they had been clients of his for some time, and appeared then to have spent all their money," and the plaintiffs had withdrawn their retainer to their solicitor,

Held, on the facts, that the inevitable result of such agreement must be to deprive the plaintiffs' solicitor of his rightful costs; that the plaintiffs and the defendant must have been aware that this would be the consequence of their agreement; and that, consequently, it was a collusive agreement bringing the parties within the decision of Price v. Crouch, 35 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 610, 60 L. J. Q. B. 767, 40 W. R. Dig. 248, and that the plaintiffs' solicitor was entitled to an order that his costs should be taxed as between solicitor and client and paid to him by the defendant.

Summons.

This was an application by L. C. Margetson, as solicitor for a Mr. and Mrs. Pugh, plaintiffs in proceedings relating to taxation of a bill of costs alleged to have been incurred on their behalf by the respondent, S.-J., their former solicitor, asking that the applicants' costs in the proceedings might be ordered to be taxed and paid by the respondent, or, in the alternative, that it might be ordered that the applicant be at liberty to continue the proceedings for the purpose of recovering and obtaining his costs from the respondent.

Mr. and Mrs. Pugh had, behind the back of the present applicant, come to an agreement with Mr. S.-J. to stay all further proceedings, Mr. S.-J., on account of their necessitous circumstances, paying them a sum of £25 towards the cost of the proceedings. Mr. and Mrs. Pugh had withdrawn their retainer to Mr. Margetson, and had not paid anything due to him for costs.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Mr. S.-J. by his affidavit stated that he had given "the said sum of £25 gratuitously to Mr. and Mrs. Pugh because they had been his clients for some time and appeared to have spent all their money."

Warrington, Q.C., E. S. Ford, and H. Courthorpe-Monroe, for the applicant.—This was a collusive bargain for the purpose of preventing the applicant Margetson getting his costs. The applicant is therefore entitled to an order against the defendant, or, in the alternative, leave to continue the proceedings: Price v. Crouch, 35 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 610, 60 L. J. Q. B. 767, 40 W. R. Dig. 248.

Ribton, for the respondent.—In order that the applicant may succeed it is clear on the cases that he must prove one of two things—either that he has given express notice of his lien, as was the case in Price v. Crouch, and Ross v. Buxton, 38 W. R. 71, 42 Ch. D. 190, or he must prove collusion between the parties for the purpose of defeating his rights. The affidavits filed on his behalf do not prove this, and he is not entitled in order to prove his case to read the affidavits filed in answer by his opponent.

KEKEWICH, J., said: It is a professional rule that when parties to a dispute are represented by solicitors, neither of those solicitors should communicate with the principal of the other touching the matters in question.

That is a binding rule in the profession, and is strictly consonant with good sense and convenience, because it is impossible that solicitors can really do their duty unless they have the full confidence of their clients and are enabled to communicate the one with the other. But the courts have uniformly held, without in the slightest degree impeaching the propriety and advantage of that rule, that if the parties have solicitors, and the solicitor for one party meets the principal on the other side, and a bargain is made, that bargain is good. It cannot be said that the authority of the principal is gone when he employs a solicitor because such a thing as that is impossible, and therefore, whether there is litigation or not, if the solicitor for the plaintiff meets the defendant and makes a compromise with him that compromise is binding on the defendant or the plaintiff, as the case may be, notwithstanding that up to that time he was represented by a solicitor; that is as much common sense as the rule itself. But what the court has also said is that, if that is not done honestly in a straightforward way, and merely with a view to get rid of litigation, but also with a view of defeating the solicitor's lien, that compromise shall not prevail. If the one solicitor meets the party on the other side, or if the two parties compromise, knowing of the lien of the solicitor, and are intending to defeat it, then that shall not be allowed, and the only question is whether that was the intention. That rule runs through all these cases. Lindley, L.J., refers to it in the case of The Hope, where he says at p. 146 of 8 P. D.: "There is no rule that the parties may not compromise an action without the intervention of their solicitors. They must, however, do so honestly, and not intend to cheat the solicitors of their proper charges." I recognize the rule. Did they not cheat here? The word is not at all too strong, and I recognize the propriety of the use of it. The question is whether in this case I have such evidence as satisfied the court in the case of Price v. Crouch.

Here comes in the point urged by the counsel for the respondent. He says that if the applicant does not make out his case on the affidavits which he files in support of it, and if the respondent is ill-advised enough to answer those affidavits—which in the view put forward he need not have answered—then the applicant cannot read that affidavit which has been filed against him, and which presumably covers his opponent's case, but is bound to read his own affidavit independently and thus give the respondent the opportunity of showing that no case has been made out. I challenged the counsel for the respondent to find any authority for that proposition, and he says that it is the ordinary practice, and there is no authority for it. It is strange that such a practice has never come under my notice during the years in which I have been engaged in the Chancery Division. The rule affecting the proper conduct of the case is, that if your opponent does not make out a case, you must have the courage to say so, and not file affidavits at all. If you think his case requires an answer, you must take your chance by your answer of covering your opponent's case.

I will not pause to inquire whether the affidavits of the applicant made out any case. It was a weak one no doubt. I will assume that the applicant has not made any case in his affidavit, but I am clear that the affidavit in answer does. I must read the evidence of Mr. S.-J. himself in connection with that which he incorporated with it, and which was an affidavit not made at the same time, but only referred to as S.-J.; but then he says that the substance of what passed is incorporated in that affidavit. Then what passed? Mr. S.-J. had an interview with Mr. and Mrs. Pugh, and the result of it was that, knowing they were in necessitous circumstances, he paid them £25, not as a kind of bargain to stop the taxation, of which he said he was not afraid, but nevertheless having that inevitable result, which they both knew; and be the bargain a bargain or no bargain, as it may be in the legal sense of the words, both parties perfectly well knew that once the £25 was paid the taxation would be dropped, and Mr. S.-J. would be free from any anxiety caused by the order for taxation. It is said, indeed, that the money was paid with a view of satisfying part of the costs of the proceedings. Mr. and Mrs. Pugh say in their affidavit that Mr. S.-J. had "offered to contribute a sum of £25 towards our costs of these proceedings." What Mr. and Mrs. Pugh knew I do not know. It is evident they were in poor circumstances, and were probably over-persuaded by Mr. S.-J. But I must take them to know what were the ordinary consequences of their acts, and that they were accepting £25, as they say themselves, towards their costs, without the slightest intention of its being applied towards the payment of their costs. Mr. S.-J., on the other hand, knew of their difficulty, and although he stated that he paid the money towards their costs he must be taken to have known as a solicitor, and, being well acquainted with this particular old client, that the money would not find its way into Mr. Margetson's pocket in reduction of his costs. It seems to me that, without any such cross-examination as the counsel for the respondent invites, the opponent was well advised enough. I think that what was done on Mr. S.-Js.' part was intended to deprive Mr. Margetson of his costs. I cannot quite acquit Mr. and Mrs. Pugh, but I have no doubt that they did not realize the impropriety of what they were doing. The case seems to me to come distinctly within the authority of Price v. Crouch. As for the particular order which the applicant wants I did not want authority, but I was impressed with the idea that the court could not do what was right. Here, however, I have a case which is an authority in point. The only question is what the form of order should be. As I propose to make an order in a more extended way, it will include the sum of £25, which will only be allowed towards the costs as a whole. The summons in the case of Price v. Crouch asked that the costs of the action might be taxed, and paid to the applicant, or, in the alternative, that the applicant might be at liberty to continue the proceedings in order to recover the costs. Where a plaintiff and defendant compromise an action with the knowledge that they are so acting as to deprive the plaintiff's solicitor of his costs, such solicitor is entitled to an order for the payment of his taxed costs of the action by the defendant, or for continuance of the action for the recovery of such costs. Reading there "taxation" for "action," the present summons asks exactly the same thing. The Divisional Court sustained the order of the judge in that case. I am at liberty to consider that either of the alternatives would be right. It seems to me that the first alternative is right. There is an apparent anomaly in allowing proceedings to be continued which cannot be continued in the name of the client who has withdrawn his retainer. There is also this objection, that if the order to continue the proceedings is made new costs must be incurred; and Margetson has no right to incur costs except with the view of recovering those already incurred; so that ought to be avoided if it can be done consistently with the judgment.

The first alternative seems not to be open to objection. I therefore make an order that the costs incurred by Mr. Margetson up to the receipt of the letter of the 9th of September, 1896, be taxed and paid by the defendant to the applicant.

I am directing such taxation as is necessary for ascertaining those costs, and no further costs need be incurred; and in addition I direct that Mr. S.-J. do pay the costs of this application.

Solicitors, L. C. Margetson; H. S.-J.

Chan. Div.
Romer, J. } June 18; July 6.

In re WALKER.
WALKER v. LUTYENS. (a.)

Will—Gift to "issue"—Illegitimate children.

A testatrix gave shares of income of her residuary estate to certain named nephews and nieces with a gift over to the respective issue of any who should die during the lifetime of two other named persons.

M. A., one of the nieces named, had married F. A., her deceased sister's husband, and had by him a daughter G. and a son F. M. A. was called in the will by her married name, was described as the wife of F. A., and G. was described as their daughter. M. A. died within the period mentioned.

Held, that, under the circumstances, G., though illegitimate, could, under the gift to issue, claim her mother's share of income.

Megson v. Hindle, 28 W. R. 866, 15 Ch. D. 198, commented upon.

Adjourned summons.

This was a case raising the question of the meaning of the word "issue."

The testatrix Elizabeth Walker by her will dated the 18th of July, 1879, directed as follows:

"I direct that my trustees shall invest the ultimate residue of the said moneys, &c., &c., and shall stand possessed of the said residuary, trust moneys, and the investments for the time being representing the same, and the real estate of or to which I shall die possessed or entitled, and my said leasehold house, in trust to pay one moiety of the net investments, dividends, rents, and annual interest thereof . . . to my brother Richard Fryer during his life; and the remaining moiety thereof to my sister, Susanna Thacker, during her life for her separate use free from all marital rights. And upon the death of either of them to pay the moiety previously payable to the deceased equally between my nephews and nieces, Dorothea Wyld, Richard Fryer Morson, Anne Thacker, Mary Addams, William Fryer, Thacker, and Dorothea Elizabeth Fryer, and my great-nieces, the said Caroline Hope Pieters, and Marian Osler, or such of them as shall be living at the death of the deceased, during the life of the survivor of my said brother or sister, if they shall respectively so long live. Provided that if any of my said last-named nephews and nieces and great-nieces shall die during my lifetime or during the lifetimes of my said brother or sister leaving issue him or her surviving such issue shall take, and if more than one equally between them, the share of income which his, her, or their parent would have taken if living at the time of the decease of either of my said brother or sister, and from and after the decease of the survivor of my said brother and sister then as in the said will mentioned." The will also directed the trustees to stand possessed of certain sums upon "trust to pay to or permit my niece Mary, the wife of Francis Holland Addams, to receive the rents, investments, dividends, and annual income thereof for her life, for her sole and separate use, free from the control of her present or any future husband, or of his debts or engagements, and from and after her decease then as to the said capital sums and interest and the said hereditaments and the rents thereof, in trust for her daughter Gertrude Susannah Addams if living absolutely and if dead then as therein mentioned."

The niece referred to by the testatrix as "Mary Addams, wife of Francis Holland Addams," was not legally married to the said F. H. Addams, who was in fact her deceased sister's husband. Mary Addams by the said F. H. Addams had two children—viz., Gertrude Susannah Addams (now Gertrude Susannah Lutyens) and Francis Robert Addams.

The testatrix died in 1881. Her brother Richard Fryer died in 1882, and the income of his moiety was thereupon distributed as provided for in the will, Mary Addams receiving her proportion of such income. Mary Addams died in 1896, and upon her decease her share of such income was claimed by the defendant Dorothea Wyld, a niece of the testatrix, and by Caroline Hope Pieters, a grand-niece, as residuary legatees on the ground that the word "issue" in the will did not include either the defendant Gertrude Susannah Lutyens or the defendant Francis Robert Addams, and that consequently Mary Addams died without issue her surviving within the meaning of the will.

All questions as between Gertrude Susannah Lutyens and her brother having been waived by her, the real point for decision was whether under the terms of the will she could make any claim to her mother's share of income in the residuary estate.

Mulligan, Q.C., and Hatfield Greene, for the trustees of Elizabeth Walker's will, stated the facts.

Crossfield, for Francis Robert Addams.—Under the circumstances here the word "issue" can and does include illegitimate children: Per Lord Selborne in Hill v. Crook, 22 W. R. 137, L. R. 6 H. L. 265; Bowen, L.J., in In re Haseldine, 34 W. R. 327, 31 Ch. D. 511; In re Horner, 36 W. R. 348, 37 Ch. D. 695; In re Harrison, [1894] 1 Ch. 561.

(a.) Reported by RALEGH B. PHILLPOTTS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Compton Smith, for Gertrude Susannah Lutyens.

Childers, for the residuary legatees.—Hill v. Crook can be distinguished; there there was a distinct expression of intention to include the particular illegitimate children. There is merely a substitutionary gift to issue here. Bagley v. Mollard, 1 Russ. & My. 581, followed in Megson v. Hindle, 28 W. R. 866, 15 Ch. D. 198, and In re Hall, 35 Ch. D. 551, are authorities against the claim of Mary Addams' children, who are illegitimate. [ROMER, J., expressed his opinion that some circumstance was probably omitted from the report of Megson v. Hindle which would have explained the statement made there by Jessel, M.R., that the testator knew the grandson about whom the question arose, was illegitimate.]

ROMER, J.—With regard to the clause on which the question before me depends, I agree that the word "issue" (which, having regard to the text, here means children) must be taken (at any rate primâ facie) to mean legitimate children. But it appears to me that for the purposes of the will, so far as concerns the niece Mary Addams, the testatrix has declared that the daughter Gertrude is to be regarded and taken as legitimate. The testatrix describes the niece Mary as the wife of Mr. Addams, and refers to Gertrude as the daughter of the niece, and (in a codicil) as the grand-niece of the testatrix. And as Gertrude survived her mother I think I ought not to hold that for the purposes of the clause in question the share of the niece Mary Addams is to be dealt with on the footing that she died without leaving issue.

I need not consider the question as to the other child of Mary Addams, for the daughter Gertrude has expressed her desire to allow that child to share with her. I know of no case precisely like the present, but I do not think that in giving this decision, I am extending the principle governing the numerous cases cited before me in which illegitimate children have been allowed to take. Of course, if the principle stated by Sir John Leach, M.R., in Bagley v. Mollard had been still law that whenever the general description of children will include legitimate children it cannot also be extended to illegitimate children, then my decision must have been the other way. But that principle is clearly not now law. I do not think it necessary for me to go through the numerous cases cited. If the gift in this will had been to Mary Addams for life, with remainder to her children, then there is ample authority for holding that, having regard to the statements in this will (though in a different part of it), the daughter Gertrude must have been held a child for the purposes of the gift. See, for example, Hill v. Crook, and especially the observations of Lord Cairns at p. 285, In re Haseldine, and In re Horner, and I cannot see any difference in principle, for the purpose I am now considering, between the above supposed case and a simple gift to Mary Addams, with a substitutionary gift to her children in case she died before a certain period. Nor do I see why the principle should not be applied to the precise case before me where the substitutionary gift is not confined to the case of the gift to Mary Addams, but is a general substitutionary gift applying to gifts to other named persons as well as to the gift to Mary Addams.

I will only add a few words with regard to two cases cited before me. As to Megson v. Hindle, when the circumstances of that case are considered it will be seen that the testator had treated the illegitimate child separately from the other or legitimate children, and had not shown any intention to regard him as legitimate for the purposes of his will or to include him in the general term "children." And in the case of In re Hall there was nothing in the will to show that the testator regarded the illegitimate son of his sister as legitimate or intended to include him in a gift to that sister's children beyond the description of him as a nephew, which description standing alone was not sufficient. In my opinion, therefore, the two children of Mary Addams are entitled to her share of income.

Solicitors, Shelton, Walker, & Tayler; Deacon & Co.; A. D. Wilde.

Chan. Div. } Romer, J. } May 29, June 30.

In re BOYD.
KELLY v. BOYD. (a.)

Will—Power of appointment—Appointment for all purposes—Lapse.

The question whether a general power of appointment has been so exercised by the donee as to take the fund subject to the power away from the persons entitled in default of appointment for all purposes, is one of intention to be gathered from the dispositions of the fund made by the donee.

J. K., a donee of a general power of appointment by will of a sum of £5,000 (as to which, in default of appointment, there was a gift over to other persons by the donor of the power), exercised the power by appointing the fund directly in equal shares between eight nephews and nieces, to whom she also gave legacies out of her own estate which, both in her will and codicil, she distinguished from the £5,000. She appointed an executor; but her own estate was more than sufficient to pay all her debts and legacies. A nephew and a niece died in her lifetime.

Held, following In re Davies' Trusts, 20 W. R. 165, L. R. 13 Eq. 163, that J. K. had not indicated an intention to make the £5,000 her own for all purposes; and that the persons entitled in default of appointment under the limitation in the instrument creating the power took the shares appointed to the nephew and niece who had died in the donee's lifetime.

Petition.

This was a petition for the distribution of a fund in court.

The question in the case was whether a general testamentary power of appointment over a sum of £5,000 had been fully exercised by the donee, or exercised only for the limited purpose of giving effect to the particular dispositions expressed in her will and codicils.

By the will of William Boyd, who died in 1855, one-fourth of the proceeds of sale of his residuary real and personal estate was settled on trust for his daughter, Juliana Kelly, and her husband for life, remainder to their children, with a gift over in default of children taking a vested interest. The testator further empowered the trustees of his will notwithstanding the trusts thereinbefore contained "out of the said one-fourth share of the residue of my said estate to raise the sum of £5,000 sterling, and pay the same to such person or persons as my said daughter Juliana shall by her last will and testament or any codicil or codicils thereto, and whether covert or sole, direct and appoint or give and bequeath the same."

(a.) Reported by RALEGH B. PHILLPOTTS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Juliana Kelly made her will in September, 1869, in which, after a recital as to the power of appointment over the £5,000, were the following words: "Now, in exercise of such power I give and bequeath the said sum of £5,000, and also all the residue of my real and personal estate and effects not otherwise disposed of by me equally between and amongst my several nephews and nieces following" (the testatrix here named eight nephews and nieces) "as tenants in common and not as joint tenants." The testatrix further directed that if any of the nephews and nieces whom she had named should die in her lifetime leaving a child or children such child or children were to be entitled to his, her, or their parent's share. She appointed Joseph Anderson executor.

The will contained no charge or direction for the payment of debts.

The testatrix made a codicil to her will in May, 1878. By this she appointed another executor in the place of Joseph Anderson, who had died, and gave to each of the before-mentioned nephews and nieces £1,000 sterling "out of my own moneys." She directed that all legacy duty should be paid "out of my general residue which I bequeath unto and between my said nephews and nieces as directed by my will."

By another codicil of January, 1886, the testatrix recited that she had appointed "a certain fund therein named and also the residue of my estate" equally between the nephews and nieces named in the will, and that she had also given to each of them legacies of £1,000 "out of her own moneys." One of these legacies she revoked, and in other respects immaterial to the question of the case, she altered her former dispositions of her property.

The testatrix died on the 4th of December, 1896, having had no children. Her personal estate was sworn at £45,913, which was more than sufficient to pay all her debts and legacies. Two of the appointees, a nephew and a niece, had died in her lifetime neither having had any children, and the question now arose whether of the £5,000 appointed as aforesaid two eighth parts, being those intended for the nephew and niece who had died, had not lapsed, and passed as unappointed by Juliana Kelly under the will of her father, the original testator William Boyd.

Levett, Q.C., and Dunham, for the petitioners, who claimed to be entitled to the two eighths under the will of William Boyd.—The question is one of intention. The testatrix has not intended to make the £5,000 part of her estate for all purposes, and the two eighth parts are unappointed and pass under the will of William Boyd. In re Davies' Trusts, [1871] 20 W. R. 165, L. R. 13 Eq. 163, governs the present case.

They also referred to Theobald on Wills, 4th ed., pp. 200-202.

Farwell, Q.C., and Davenport, for the respondent.—The testatrix intended to make the £5,000 her own for all purposes, and take it out of the trusts of her father's will. This fund would have been available for payment of her debts, and the executor whom she appointed could have given a discharge for the whole fund: In re Hoskin's Trusts [1876] 5 Ch. D. 229, 6 Ibid. 281. In re Davies' Trusts is inconsistent with In re Pinède's Settlement, [1879] 28 W. R. 178, 12 Ch. D. 667; In re Ickeringill's Estate, [1881] 29 W. R. 500, 17 Ch. D. 151; Coxen v. Rowland, [1894] 42 W. R. 568, [1894] 1 Ch. 406. The two eighth shares should go to the next-of-kin of Juliana Kelly.

Levett, in reply.—Only six-eighths of the £5,000 would be available for Juliana Kelly's debts. The appointment to the nephew and niece who predeceased her was no appointment. An executor only takes what is validly appointed: In re Thurston, [1885] 34 W. R. 528, 32 Ch. D. 508.

ROMER, J.—In the present state of the authorities the question I have to decide is by no means an easy one. The principle which has to be applied to all cases of this class is clear. I have to ascertain whether the donee of the power meant by the exercise of it to take the property dealt with out of the instrument creating the power for all purposes, or only for the limited purpose of giving effect to the particular dispositions expressed. The difficulty lies in the application of the principle. The conclusion I have come to in the present case is that the testatrix has not by her will and codicils sufficiently indicated an intention to make the £5,000 the subject of the power, hers for all purposes, and that so far as concerns the lapsed shares they go as in default of appointment. My reasons are as follows: In the first place this is not a case of an appointment of the £5,000 to trustees for purposes, some of which lapse. The appointment is direct to beneficiaries, so that authorities like In re Van Hagan, 29 W. R. 84, 16 Ch. D. 18, which depend upon a question of resulting trust, are not in point, and I have to decide the case having regard to the authorities which deal with direct appointments to beneficiaries. Now, the testatrix has herself drawn a distinction between the £5,000 and her own property. She has given certain legacies by her codicils expressly payable "out of her own moneys," by which I understand her to mean that in no case was the £5,000 (which was not her own) to aid in case of deficiency of her own property in paying those legacies, and she does not anywhere treat or describe the £5,000 as part of her own residue or as her own moneys. In the will she gives the £5,000 and also all the residue of her property not otherwise disposed of by her, by which latter phrase I understand she meant all her own property not disposed of by any codicil or codicils or in payment of her debts; and in one codicil she states that by her will she has appointed and given "a certain fund therein named," and also the residue of her estate. So that, looking at the will and codicils together, it appears to me she had shown that she treats the £5,000 not as her own, but as something distinct from her own property and not merging in her own residuary estate. Again, for what it is worth, there is here no express charge of debts. It is true she appoints an executor, and if her own estate had been insufficient to pay her debts and the legacies which are not expressly payable only out of her own property, then no doubt the £5,000 would have been applicable to make good the deficiency, and to that extent the executor might have had recourse to it. But her own property was more than sufficient to pay all her debts and legacies, and the fact that an executor might for a limited purpose have had a right to reach the fund would not in itself be sufficient to take the fund for all purposes away from the persons entitled in default of appointment. See for example Laing v. Cowan, 24 Beav. 112, 6 W. R. Ch. Dig. 56, where it was held that an express direction to pay debts, coupled with the appointment of an executor, took the fund from the persons entitled in default of appointment, but only so far as it was required to pay the debts; and see further In re Thurston, Thurston v. Evans.

But there is another authority which, if rightly decided, completely covers the case before me; that is In re Davies' Trusts. Indeed that case had not the element in the case before me of the testatrix expressly distinguishing between the appointed, and her own, property; and so the case before me is stronger in favour of those claiming in default of appointment, but in all other respects the two cases are substantially identical. That case was decided in 1871 by Wickens, V.C., and though often referred to since, has never been dissented from or disapproved, nor can I find any authority which would justify me in declining to follow it after this lapse of time. Indeed it has been expressly followed in Ireland in In re De Lusi's Trusts, 3 L. R. Ir. Ch. 232, 27 W. R. Dig. 9.

Certain cases have been referred to in argument before me which it is suggested are inconsistent with, or cast doubts upon In re Davies' Trusts, but I think the suggestion is unfounded, and I will shortly refer to the chief of them in order to show this.

In re Pinède's Settlement was a case where Jessel, M.R., under the circumstances referred to by him in his judgment, was able to ascertain that the testatrix intended to include in the gift of her residue both the residue of the appointed fund and any savings of her own property she might possess as one blended fund, and treated the appointed property as her own and made it her own for all purposes. The case of In re Davies' Trusts was cited and in no way disapproved of by the Master of the Rolls; on the contrary, he refers with approval to In re De Lusi's Trusts, which followed In re Davies' Trusts, as stating accurately the principle on which each case ultimately falls to be decided. In re Ickeringill's Estate, decided by Hall, V.C., was a peculiar case, and, I think, turned upon this, that the Vice-Chancellor thought, under the circumstances concerning the devise of real estate to which he refers in his judgment, that the gift in the testatrix's will in that case was equivalent to an appointment and devise to her two sisters in trust so as to make the question one of resulting trust, as in In re Van Hagan; at least, that is what I gather from the judgment, especially from the observations at the bottom of p. 156 and top of p. 157 (17 Ch. D.), but whether I am right in this or not it is clear that the Vice-Chancellor distinguished the case before him from In re Davies' Trusts, and cast no doubt upon the decision in the latter case. Lastly, in Coxen v. Rowland the decision of Stirling, J., turned upon the words used by the testatrix, which indicated sufficiently her intention that the appointed property should be deemed hers for all purposes. As pointed out in that case, it is not essential in order that an appointed fund may be for all purposes taken out of the instrument creating the power, that there should be, in the first instance, an appointment to a trustee; nor did Wickens, V.C., in In re Davies' Trusts express a contrary view, and the suggestion that the reasoning on which he decided that case has been since decided to be unsound appears to me unfounded.

Solicitors, Tarry, Shirlock, & King, for Griffiths & Co., Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Phelps, Sidgwick & Biddle.

Chan. Div. } Byrne, J. } July 9.

In re HOLT.
HOLT v. HOLT. (a.)

Trustee—Practice—Breach of trust—Married woman restrained from anticipation—Indemnity—Pleading—Third-party notice—Liberty to apply—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 45—R. S. C., ord. 16, r. 55.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In an action for breach of trust in which the trustees of a settlement and the tenant for life a married woman restrained from anticipation, were defendants, the defendant trustees in their defence alleged that the breach was committed at the request of the defendant tenant for life, and that her interest ought to be impounded by way of indemnity; but they did not raise this point either by way of third-party notice under ord. 16, r. 55, or by way of counter-claim.

Held, that upon the allegations respectively contained in the statement of claim of the plaintiff, and in the defence of the defendant trustees, the court had jurisdiction to give the defendant trustees liberty to apply in chambers in the action, to enforce any right of indemnity they might have against the tenant for life; and that under section 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893, the court could make an order impounding the life interest of a married woman restrained from anticipation, by way of indemnity.

This was an action brought on the part of certain infants by their next friend claiming as beneficiaries under the trusts of a settlement made on the marriage of the defendant Helen Eliza Gossell with John Oakes Holt, and dated the 16th of January, 1878, to make good a breach of trust. The facts of the case were as follows:—

Under the settlement it was declared that the sum of £1,500 paid to the trustees thereof, T. H. Rollason and S. F. Rollason, by Otto J. T. Gossell, should be held upon trust, to invest in the manner therein directed, and to pay the interest to the defendant Helen E. Holt for her life for her separate use without power of anticipation, and after her death to the said John O. Holt (but only if he should not have been a bankrupt, or other the events therein mentioned should not have happened) during his life, or other the period therein mentioned, and subject thereto in trust for the children of the said marriage, who, being sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or being daughters, should attain that age or marry.

By a settlement known as the settlement of 1887, and made between the said Otto J. T. Gossell of the one part, and the said T. H. Rollaston and S. F. Rollaston of the other part, it was declared that a further sum of £1,000 paid by the said Otto J. T. Gossell to the said T. H. Rollason and S. F. Rollason should be held on like trusts as those declared in the marriage settlement of 1878, and the trustees were empowered to advance the sum of £1,000 to John O. Holt on interest, the same being secured by the bond of John O. Holt, with one or more sureties. This sum was subsequently advanced to John O. Holt, and secured by the joint bond of John Oakes Holt, J. A. Dorsib, G. Holt, and S. F. Rollason.

On the 19th of December, 1892, T. H. Rollason retired from the trusteeship, and G. Holt was appointed trustee in his place. In January, 1893, G. Holt and S. F. Rollason advanced to J. O. Holt and the said Helen E. Holt the sum of £1,500, which represented the whole of the trust funds of the settlement of 1878. The advance was made on the security of the joint and several promissory note of John O. Holt and Helen E. Holt and on their joint and several covenant to repay and on the security of a policy upon their joint lives, and of an assignment by John O. Holt of certain letters patent for making metallic ship berths.

G. Holt died in 1894 and S. F. Rollason in 1897. J. O. Holt was adjudged a bankrupt in 1894. The defendants, the executors of G. Holt and the executrix of Samuel F. Rollason, put in separate defences. They alike alleged that the breaches of trust were made at the instigation and request and with the consent in writing of Helen E. Holt. Mrs. Holt did not put in a defence, but she was subpœnaed as a witness by some of the other defendants. The statement of claim asked, inter alia, for a declaration of the liability of the trustees' estates to make good the loss, and for the administration of the trusts of the settlements.

MacSwinney, for the plaintiffs.

Wilkinson, for the defendant tenant for life.—The question of the liability of the tenant for life cannot be gone into on the present occasion. No proper proceedings whatever have been taken by the other defendants to raise the issue. They have not done so either by a third-party notice under R.S.C., ord. 16, r. 55, or by a counter-claim. It is possible that in these ways the issue might have been raised; but even that is not altogether clear. Practically the other defendants have taken no proceedings whatever against the tenant for life. What they are trying to do is to raise the issue in an indirect way. Further, there is no evidence whatever that the tenant for life in any way instigated, requested, or consented in writing to the breach of trust. There is no evidence to entitle the court to order an inquiry. If the question is to be raised at all, it must be raised by the representatives of the trustees bringing an action against her.

Badcock, for the representatives of G. Holt.—If the trustees are not technically in the right in the way they have proceeded, the court has jurisdiction to permit them to amend. There can be no possible injustice in this course to any party, and there is no reason why the tenant for life should not be examined vivâ voce in court. An injustice, however, would be done if the trustees were forced to bring a fresh action.

R. J. Parker, for the executrix of S. F. Rollason.—There is no question but that under the old practice the court had jurisdiction to dispose in such an action of the defendants' claim to be indemnified by the tenant for life. Such a point could either have been raised in the bill or taken in the answer. If it had been taken in the answer an inquiry would have been directed. The jurisdiction by which the court executes trusts is the same as formerly. This is an administration action, and in an administration action all equities can be enforced. The proper course in this case is to direct an inquiry as to whether the tenant for life concurred in the breach of trust: Sawyer v. Sawyer, 33 W. R. 403, 28 Ch. D. 595, was referred to.

Wilkinson, in reply.—Sawyer v. Sawyer does not come within section 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893, and in that case, which was prior to the Married Women's Property Act, 1883, Mrs. Sawyer, the tenant for life, was not restrained from anticipation. The old practice is unimportant in this connection. In deciding the question whether a married woman has instigated, requested, or given consent in writing to a breach of trust, the law relies on the exercise of judicial discretion which must be properly exercised. It is not a matter in which an inquiry can be directed.

BYRNE, J.—The action is brought by an infant remainderman for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that the estates of certain deceased trustees are liable to make good certain moneys, some of which they had become liable for, to a limited amount, by reason of having concurred in giving security for bonds, which limit their liability each to £334. The second breach of trust is in respect of a sum of £1,500. The action asks, so far as necessary, to have the trusts of the settlement executed. Amongst the defendants are the executors of George Holt, one of the persons whose estate is sought to be made liable. In the defence put in on their behalf there is the following paragraph: "If in fact the advance by the said George Holt and Saml. Fredk. Rollason of the said sum of £1,500 to the said John Oakes Holt and the defendant Helen Eliza Holt was a breach of trust, the same was made at the instigation or request or with the consent in writing of the defendant Helen Eliza Holt, and with full knowledge on her part that such advance constituted a breach of trust, and the defendant Helen Eliza Holt took the benefit of such breach of trust, and these defendants claimed that, under the circumstances aforesaid, all the life interest of the defendant H. E. Holt under the said settlements of the 16th day of January, 1878, and the 17th day of March, 1887, ought to be impounded by way of indemnity to the executors of the said Geo. Holt, deceased." And in the defence put in on behalf of the other executors they plead to a similar effect. Both the defendants say in their defence that they will rely, as against the tenant for life who is co-defendant, upon the provisions of section 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893.

Now, the co-defendant, the tenant for life, says that this matter cannot be disposed of, because the question has not been raised either by way of counter-claim or by third-party notice under rule 55 of order 16, and that it is impossible for the court in this action to allow this question to be raised, but that the parties desiring to raise it ought to commence a new action for the purpose. At one time I was disposed to think that the tenant for life might be justified in saying: "If it is to be raised, there should be a third-party notice; let this stand over for that purpose and let the costs be reserved"; but the position is this at the present moment, that counsel for both parties—for the tenant for life and for the trustees—are agreed that in their view it is very doubtful whether rule 55 of order 16 would permit of such a thing being done. In point of fact, the argument on behalf of the tenant for life reduces itself to this: That, inasmuch as the claim for indemnity against the defendant tenant for life is only raised in the defence of the co-defendants, the only way in which the thing can now be properly tried is by bringing a new action, with, I suppose, new pleadings, delay and all the necessary expense attendant upon such a proceeding. I should have been sorry to have been driven to such a conclusion, and I do not think I am so driven. This being an action for the execution of the trusts, and this being an equity arising by reason of the position of the parties as well as by virtue, in this particular case, of the section of the Act of Parliament, I am of opinion that it is within the competence of the court, on such a point being suggested by the trustees, who admittedly are liable, either to direct an inquiry, properly framed, or to give leave to apply as to enforcing such a claim against the tenant for life, although she be a married woman.

There is some force in what was said by Mr. Wilkinson, that it is one of those cases in which the court has to exercise a careful discretionary jurisdiction.

The court has under the section of the Act to find it just to do so, and no doubt will in every case inquire very carefully into the circumstances, having full regard to the fact that the equity is sought to be raised against a married woman restrained from anticipation; but that is a point which can be perfectly well considered by and safely left to the judge who has to determine the form of the inquiry and the way in which the matter should be raised by the court. It may be that he will think, on the suggestion of the lady, that it ought to be raised by means of an adjournment into court in the first instance and hearing evidence vivâ voce. I do not think any injustice will be done by that, and I think gross injustice would be done if I were to hold that this point could not be raised except by bringing a new action, with all the consequent expense. It was said that I have no jurisdiction to make such an order, and for some time there was a little difficulty in finding any very near precedent for what I propose to do; but there is the case Sawyer v. Sawyer. It appears from the statement of the case that that action was commenced in November, 1878, by the children of Edward Sawyer and Betsy, his wife, against John Sawyer, the surviving trustee, and James Allwright, the executor of the deceased trustee of the marriage settlement of Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer, for the purpose of making the trustee liable for certain money, subject to the trusts of the settlement, which had been lost. Mr. and Mrs. Sawyer were made parties as defendants. In point of fact it was a case extremely like the present, one of those cases where the tenant for life is not joined for sufficiently obvious reasons with the infant plaintiff in bringing the action, but is made a defendant. When that case came on for trial Chitty, J., gave judgment that the trustees were jointly and severally liable to replace the sum which had been sold by the trustees and advanced to Mr. Sawyer, and an inquiry was directed to ascertain at whose request and under what circumstances the money had been sold out and advanced. Mr. Wilkinson says that this was not a case in which a married woman was restrained from anticipation, nor was it a case coming within section 45. The principle, however, appears to me to be exactly the same. If such an inquiry could be granted against a married woman who was not restrained from anticipation, such inquiry can be granted now, having regard to the provisions of section 45, sub-section 1, of the Trustee Act of 1893, against a married woman or in reference to a married woman, restrained from anticipation.

One other point was taken. It was said that no such inquiry or liberty to apply ought to be given unless there was some evidence upon which the court could act as making a foundation for an inquiry. I am not sure that the allegation of a defendant trustee made liable for a breach of trust, that the breach was committed at the instigation and with the consent of the tenant for life, would not be sufficient to create jurisdiction, provided, of course, that as to costs care was taken that any such inquiry should be held at the risk of the person requesting or seeking it; but in this case we have in paragraph 9 of the statement of claim this allegation: "The plaintiffs have recently ascertained that in the month of January, 1893, the said George Holt and Samuel F. Rollason wrongfully advanced the sum of £1,500, which then represented the whole of the trust funds of settlement of 1878, to the said John O. Holt and to the defendant Helen E. Holt upon the security of their joint and several promissory note and of their joint and several covenant to repay, and of a policy upon their joint lives and of an assignment by the said John O. Holt of certain letters patent for making metallic ship berths. The said security is wholly insufficient, and the said advance was a breach of trust." That allegation is admitted by the defendants, and I think there is a sufficient allegation there and therefore sufficient evidence that there was some consent in writing or instigation or request on the part of the tenant for life. It is not evidence that it was so, but it is evidence which enables the court to see that it is not a mere imaginary matter, but that it is a case in which some evidence will be forthcoming to show request on the part of the person who herself joins in giving the promissory note and in the covenant and security for the breach of trust which has been committed. If it stood there alone the court would not be able to make a married lady liable; but if there is a sufficient ground for the suggestion on the part of the defendants that there may be a case, it is sufficient, I think, to entitle me to do what I propose to do in respect to this matter—viz., to give to the representatives of the deceased trustees liberty to apply in chambers with reference to enforcing such right, if any, as they may have against the tenant for life, and as to the method of determining such matter or words to that effect (the precise form may perhaps be the subject of an application hereafter), and that may be prefaced by the words "and at the request of the trustees' representatives give them liberty to apply," I do not think that it will make much difference, but I will put those words in.

Solicitors, T. G. Bullen; Crowders & Vizard, for Stratton & Son, Wolverhampton; Sharpe, Parker, Pritchards, & Barham, for Ryland, Martineau, & Co., Birmingham.

Chan. Div. } June 1.
Byrne, J. }

WAINWRIGHT v. MILLER. (a.)

Power of appointment—Life interest—Forfeiture clause—Fraud on power—Lapse—Remoteness.

Property was vested in trustees of a marriage settlement "to pay the income thereof to the wife for her life, and after her death in trust for all and every or such one or more exclusively of the other or others of the child or children of the marriage at such ages, days, or times, for such estates or interest, and if more than one in such shares and proportions, and with, under, and subject to such powers, provisions, conditions, and limitations as the said wife should by deed or will appoint." There was issue of the marriage three daughters, and the wife by deed-poll appointed two thirds in trust for two daughters absolutely; "And as to the remaining one equal third part thereof upon trust to pay the said income thereof to the" remaining daughter H. E. S., "if not at my death a member of the Roman Catholic Church or of any sisterhood, during her life, or until she shall become a member of the Roman Catholic Church or of any sisterhood, without power of anticipation during any coverture; and subject as aforesaid, as to the capital and income thereof, for the" other two sisters in equal shares.

After the death of her mother H. E. S. became a member of an Anglican sisterhood.

Held, (1) that the appointment was not a fraud on the power; (2) that the appointment was not void for remoteness, and that the gift over took effect.

Trial of action.

This was an action brought by the trustees to determine whether a trust contained in a deed-poll dated the 19th of April, 1890, and made by Tryphosa Sutton in exercise of a power of appointment vested in her by a marriage settlement, for payment of one equal third part of certain trust funds to the defendant Harriet E. Sutton had or had not determined, and if so from what date it had determined.

The facts of the case were as follows:

By an indenture dated the 13th of April, 1847, being a settlement executed on the marriage of the said Tryphosa Sutton, then Tryphosa Wainwright, with John Sutton, certain real and personal estate belonging to Miss Wainwright were conveyed to the trustees thereof upon trust to pay the income thereof to herself during her life, and after her decease in trust for all and every other such one or more exclusively of the other or others of the child or children of the marriage, at such ages, days, or times, for such estates or interests, and if more than one in such shares and proportions, and with, under, and subject to such powers, provisions, conditions, and limitations as the said Tryphosa Wainwright should by deed or will appoint.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The issue of the marriage consisted of three daughters, Tryphosa Mary, Jane, and Harriet Ellen.

Mrs. Sutton survived her husband and executed the power by a deed-poll bearing date the 19th of April, 1890, appointing that the settled property and the income thereof should be held as to one-third on trust for Tryphosa Mary, as to one-third on trust for Jane, "and as to the remaining equal one-third part thereof upon trust to pay the same to the said Harriet E. Sutton, if not at my death a member of the Roman Catholic Church or of any sisterhood, during her life or until she shall become a member of the Roman Catholic Church or of any sisterhood, without power of anticipation during any coverture; and subject as aforesaid as to the capital and income thereof, for the said Tryphosa Mary and Jane in equal shares."

Mrs. Sutton died in October, 1893, and a third of the income was paid to Harriet until the end of 1895, when she became a member of an Anglican sisterhood.

The trustees then instituted the present proceedings and Harriet and her sisters were made defendants.

Vaughan Hawkins, for the trustees, stated the facts.

J. G. Wood, for Harriet E. Sutton.—The execution of the power contained in the deed poll was not a valid exercise of the power, and if it was, it was void for remoteness: D'Abbadie v. Bizoin, Ir. Rep. 5 Eq. 205, 19 W. R. Ch. Dig. 137; ; Hodgson v. Halford, 27 W. R. 545, 11 Ch. D. 959; Farwell on Powers, p. 421. The condition attached to the appointment to Harriet is one which may not operate until a time subsequent to that which the law has prescribed. It may be said that the decision in Hodgson v. Halford is against me; but it is not so on the point as to remoteness. Further, the rule in that case is too broadly expressed. D'Abbadie v. Bizoin is not altogether consistent with it, and the court should follow the last-mentioned case.

Dibdin, for the other sisters.—The object of the appointor was to prevent the money going to the sisterhood: Allcard v. Skinner, 36 W. R. 251, 36 Ch. D. 145.

The appointment is not open to objection on the ground that it is a fraud on the power: Hodgson v. Halford; Duke of Portland v. Topham, 12 W. R. 697, 11 H. L. Cas. 32. Nor is it bad on the ground of remoteness. It is not necessary to ascertain the persons taking on a condition until the forfeiture has taken place: Stuart v. Cockerell, L. R. 7 Eq. 363, 17 W. R. Ch. Dig. 191; dicta of Knight-Bruce, V.C., in Boughton v. James, at 1 Coll. Ch. Cas., p. 46; Evans v. Walker, 25 W. R. 7, 3 Ch. D. 211; In re Roberts, Repington v. Roberts, 19 Ch. D. 520. The remoteness against which the rule for prevention of perpetuities is directed is remoteness in the commencement or first taking effect of limitations, and not in the cessor or determination of them. A life estate determinable on an event, and a remainder vested on that life estate is a vested remainder if the person to take is ascertained. This is the case here.

He referred to Lewis on Perpetuities, p. 173; Challis Law of Real Property, 2nd ed., p. 64.

J. G. Wood, in reply.—It cannot be said that an estate is determined if it depends on a contingency or an uncertainty. It cannot be said that at the time of the death of Mrs. Sutton the estates of the persons to take in the event of the estate of Harriet lapsing were clearly marked out and determined: Hodgson v. Halford.

BYRNE, J., after stating the facts: Two points have been taken on behalf of Harriet Sutton. One point is this. It is said that it is a fraud on the power to appoint in this form; and a case of D'Abbadie v. Bizoin, has been cited in support of that view. On the other hand it is admitted that the case of Hodgson v. Halford, before Hall, V.C., is an authority which is undistinguishable in principle from the present case. It is said that the general rule laid down by the Vice-Chancellor in that case is too broadly expressed. Whether that be so or not, the case in question is one which, in its facts, comes so closely to the present that the principle applied in that case must apply in the one I have before me. I am asked to say that it is inconsistent with the authority of D'Abbadie v. Bizoin, which was cited before Hall, V.C., in Hodgson v. Halford, although he does not expressly deal with it in his judgment. It is sufficient for me to say that the circumstances in D'Abbadie v. Bizoin were very much more removed from the circumstances in the present case than the case of Hodgson v. Halford; and I consider that the latter case is an authority binding on me. Accordingly, I hold that this is not a case of a fraud on the power. On that point the contention fails.

Then a second point is raised, which is this. It is said that the appointment is void on the ground of remoteness. It is said that the appointment of one equal third part to pay the income to Harriet Sutton—who was not alive at the time when the deed of settlement creating the power of appointment was made—being given to her in the first place on the condition that she should not be a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and, secondly, on the condition that she should not become a member of a sisterhood, is void, because, it is said, the event of entering a sisterhood might not happen within a life in being at the date of the settlement or within twenty-one years afterwards.

I am of opinion that the gift is not void for remoteness. In the first place I would refer to what was decided by Malins, V.C., in Stuart v. Cockerell, and afterwards referred to in Evans v. Walker. In the latter case, at p. 213 (3 Ch. D.), the Vice-Chancellor says: "The first point is whether the gift to the nephew and two nieces of the testator is void for remoteness, and it is quite clear to my mind that it is not, because there is no objection to a gift to unborn children for life and then to an ascertained person, provided the vesting is not postponed. That point I commented on in Stuart v. Cockerell." The point so far is conceded by counsel on behalf of Harriet Sutton, but it is said that the uncertainty introduced by reason of the estate for life given to Harriet Sutton being made determinable upon her entering into a sisterhood or becoming a member of the Roman Catholic Church is such as to render the gift void, which, if the estate was not thus limited, would be perfectly good. Now, it appears to me in the first place that Hodgson v. Halford is not an authority in favour of Harriet Sutton on this point, and among other things for the reason which alone would be quite sufficient, that in that case the persons who were to take were not to be ascertained till after the happening of the event. It is clear in the present case that if this were a gift to her for life, and subject thereto the capital and income were to go to the persons named, it would be perfectly good.

It is said that a contingency is introduced on an uncertainty after the event on which the persons who are to take will take. In my opinion the gift is the gift of one estate to Harriet Sutton, and just as much a gift of one estate as if it were a gift to her simpliciter for her life. It is true that that estate may be determined prior to her death on the happening of a certain event. This also, I think, is clear, that the gift in favour of Tryphosa Miller and Jane Sutton is a vested gift, and there is no uncertainty on the persons who are to take on the determination of the prior estate.

Two or three other cases have been referred to, and I will mention one as showing the opinion of Knight-Bruce, L.J., when Vice-Chancellor, on this matter, although it was not necessary in the circumstances of that case for him to decide the point. I refer to Boughton v. James, 1 Coll. C. C. 44, where at p. 46 the Vice-Chancellor says: "Undoubtedly, as estates in fee may be well given, so life interests may be well given by will to the children of a living person who is a bachelor at the testator's death. But as an estate in fee to be devised validly must be so devised as to vest within the compass of lives in being at the testator's death, and twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of them, so I conceive, must be a life interest. That it is limited in its duration can, I apprehend, make no difference. It may be true that a life estate, devised to a person not in existence at a testator's death, may be made by his will to cease before its natural termination at any time or upon any event; but that is a very different question," by which the learned judge means a very different question from that which he had to determine in the case before him. I read that as determining that just as his lordship thought that an estate in fee might be given so life estates might be given, and that life estates might be given although made to cease before the natural determination at any time or in any event. Then I was also referred to Lewis on Perpetuities, p. 173, where the learned author says: "The remoteness against which the rule for the prevention of perpetuities is directed is remoteness in the commencement or first taking effect of limitations, and not in the cessor or determination of them. An estate that is to arise within the prescribed period may be so limited as to determine on the happening of any event however remote, as for example the indefinite failure of issue of a person, which we shall presently see is too remote a contingency for the commencement of limitations. But an estate can only be made to determine upon an event thus remote, and when by its original form and limitation it will regularly cease by the happening of the contingency as the term of the duration of the estate, for as will hereafter be seen a power reserved to a person to determine the limitation upon such remote event would be void."

The view of the learned author, which agrees with the view taken by Knight-Bruce, L.J., I think states the rule correctly.

The result is that I hold, in the first place, that there is no fraud on the power; and secondly, that the gift over in this case is good, and upon the admissions made by the parties I hold that it has taken effect.

Solicitors, Wainwright, Pollock, & Co.; Leefe & Leefe; Sandilands & Co.

Q. B. Div.
(Hawkins and Wright, JJ.) July 3.

JAMES v. EVANS & CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Justices—Summary jurisdiction—Dispute—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 4.

Section 4 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, gives jurisdiction to courts of summary jurisdiction to hear and determine disputes under the Act provided that the amount claimed does not exceed £10.

On the 16*th of November,* 1896, a workman wrongfully left the employment of his employers, intimating that he did not intend to return. On the 16*th of December the employers brought an action in a court of summary jurisdiction to recover* £10 damages in respect of the absence of the workman from his work from the 16*th of November to the* 28*th of November. They recovered the amount claimed. Subsequently the employers brought a second action against the workman to recover* £10 damages in respect of his absence from work between the 30*th of November and the* 12*th of December.*

Held, that the court of summary jurisdiction had no jurisdiction to hear and determine the second action.

Case stated by the stipendiary magistrate for the city of Birmingham.

Section 4 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), provides as follows:

A dispute under this Act between an employer and a workman may be heard and determined by a court of summary jurisdiction, and such court, for the purposes of this Act, shall be deemed to be a court of civil jurisdiction, and, in a proceeding in relation to any such dispute, the court may order payment of any sum which it may find to be due as wages, or damages, or otherwise, and may exercise all or any of the powers by this Act conferred on a county court: provided that, in any proceeding in relation to any such dispute, the court of summary jurisdiction—

(1) Shall not exercise any jurisdiction where the amount claimed exceeds ten pounds; and

(2) Shall not make an order for the payment of any sum exceeding ten pounds, exclusive of the costs incurred in the case; and

(3) Shall not require security to an amount exceeding ten pounds from any defendant or his surety or sureties.

The appellant was, in October and November, 1896, in the employment of the defendants, who were tube manufacturers, under an agreement dated the 22nd of October, 1896, by which the respondents agreed to engage, and the appellant agreed to serve the respondents in the capacity of working foreman for the term of fifty-two weeks for the sum of 38s. per week and a bonus, payable every Saturday.

On the 16th of November, 1896, the appellant left the respondents' service, and never afterwards returned to it.

On the 16th of December, 1896, the respondents commenced an action in the City of Birmingham Police Court under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, to recover £10 damages. The particulars of claim were as follows: "The claim is for damages for the defendant absenting himself from work from the 16th of November, 1896, to the 28th of November, 1896. Amount claimed £10." The magistrate, after hearing the evidence, found that the appellant had wrongfully absented himself from his work, and gave judgment for the respondents for the amount claimed.

On the 29th of December, 1896, the respondents commenced a second action in the same court, the particulars of claim in which were as follows: "The claim is for damages for the defendant absenting himself from work from the 30th of November, 1896, to the 12th of December, 1896. Amount claimed £10." In this action it was admitted that the appellant, when he left work on the 16th of November, intended finally to determine his employment, and that that intention was not assented to by the respondents. The magistrate gave judgment for the respondents for the amount claimed. The appellant appealed from this judgment.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Asquith, Q.C. (Roskill and McCardie with him), for the appellant.—The judgment appealed against was wrong. The jurisdiction of the magistrates, being limited by section 4 of the Act to £10, was exhausted by the judgment in the first case. Further, the claims in both proceedings were for one and the same cause of action. The respondents could have brought one action in the High Court or in the county court to recover the damages caused by the breach of the agreement, and it was not competent for them to bring a series of actions in the police court to recover damages for abstention from work during different periods of time covered by the same agreement.

Carson, Q.C. (Hugo Young with him), for the respondents.—The cause of action was a continuing one, and an action could be brought at any time after damage had accrued. The respondents had therefore the option of suing in a court of summary jurisdiction when damage to the extent of £10 had accrued, or of getting the whole damage assessed in the county court or High Court: Ex parte Baker, 5 W. R. 623, 7 E. & B. 697; Youle v. Mappin, 9 W. R. 637, 30 L. J. M. C. 234; Unwin v. Clarke, 14 W. R. 688, L. R. 1 Q. B. 417, at pp. 421-424, per Blackburn and Mellor, JJ.; Cutler v. Turner, 22 W. R. 840, L. R. 9 Q. B. 502; Barnsley v. Taylor, 37 L. J. Q. B. 39; Hochster v. De la Tour, 1 W. R. 469, 2 E. & B. 678; Brunsden v. Humphrey, 32 W. R. 944, 14 Q. B. D. 141; Cutter v. Powell, 2 Smith's L. C., 10th ed., p. 1, and cases therein cited. The cause of action being a continuing one the magistrate's jurisdiction was not exhausted by the first action, for when fresh damage accrued a fresh "dispute" arose which might be heard and determined by the magistrate.

The judgment of the COURT was delivered by HAWKINS, J.—[After reciting the facts and arguments, his lordship proceeded:] I am of opinion that the first of the objections raised on behalf of the appellant must prevail.

The Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), is entitled "An Act to enlarge the powers of county courts in respect of disputes between employers and workmen, and to give other courts a limited civil jurisdiction in respect of such disputes." Section 3 is that which relates to the jurisdiction of county courts. It defines a dispute under that Act to be a "dispute between an employer and a workman arising out of or incidental to their relation as such." It preserves to the county court its then existing jurisdiction, and in addition thereto, by sub-section 1, confers upon it powers to adjust and set off, the one against the other, all claims, whether liquidated or unliquidated, and for wages, damages, or otherwise, on the part either of the employer or the workman. By sub-section 2 power is given to the county court to rescind any contract between the employer and the workman upon such terms as it thinks just.

Section 4 refers to the jurisdiction over such disputes, of a court of summary jurisdiction. It enacts that such court, for the purposes of that Act, shall be deemed to be a court of civil jurisdiction, and in a proceeding in relation to any such dispute the court may order payment of any sum which it may find to be due as wages or damages, and may exercise all or any of the powers by that Act conferred on a county court, provided that in any proceeding in relation to such dispute the court of summary jurisdiction shall not exercise any jurisdiction where the amount claimed exceeds £10.

The case of Clemson v. Hubbard, 24 W. R. 312, 1 Ex. D. 179, expressly decides that claims such as those now before us are disputes within the meaning of the statute. In dealing with the first objection it is essential to consider what was the character and extent of the dispute between the parties to the first proceeding on the 16th of December, 1896, when that action was commenced. Now, it is clear that both the periods of absence, in respect of which the two proceedings were commenced, had expired on the last-mentioned day, and the whole of the damages in those two proceedings, to which Evans & Co. claimed to be entitled, might have been recovered in one action, and as one cause of action, whether brought in the High Court or a county court, or in the police court (if Evans & Co. had been willing to reduce their claim so as to bring it within the limited jurisdiction of such a court). I am of opinion, therefore, that the whole claim for damages in respect of such continuous absence formed, at the expiration of that continuous period of absence, in fact and in law, one dispute only, and ought to have been so treated, and I do not think it was competent for Evans & Co. to divide that one continuous period of absence into two periods of about a fortnight each for the mere purpose of making it appear that there were two separate disputes between the parties, and thus harrassing the workman with two proceedings.

The one dispute on the day of the commencement of the first proceeding was, as to the right of the workman to absent himself since the 16th of November, and, if he had no such right, as he clearly had not, what damage had been sustained by his employers. There was no suggestion that there was any difference between any one day of the twenty-eight days of absence and the others.

I look upon the course pursued by the employers as a mere device and endeavour to give jurisdiction over a claim for £20, by splitting it into two of £10 each. I think we are enabled to defeat this device, and ought to do so.

I know it has been argued that the particulars in the first action were confined to the first half of the period of absence. To my mind they ought not to have been so, unless the employers intended to abandon the rest of their claim, and at all events they could not affect the workman's right to say, in answer to the second proceeding, that the jurisdiction of the magistrate was exhausted by his judgment in the first.

It may be, and I will assume (for the purposes of this case) the law to be, that each day's absence from his work in breach of his contract might, standing alone, be treated as a separate cause of action, but where there are a number of consecutive days of absence intervening between the first of those days and the bringing of the action for breach of contract, it is only one continuing breach of the one contract, which day by day becomes more extensive and of greater magnitude; each succeeding day of wrongful absence becomes incorporated with those which have preceded it, and so the breach assumes a more important aspect; but where, as in this case, the workman from the first by his conduct intimated his intention finally and absolutely to break his contract, and does so by leaving his service, it is but one breach, though each day's additional absence may add to the damages recoverable against him.

The case of Grimbly v. Aykroyd, 1 Ex. 479, may be usefully referred to upon this part of the case, as elucidating the principle upon which I have come to the conclusion at which I have arrived.

For the reasons I have given I think the appellant is entitled to judgment. And it has become unnecessary to enter upon any discussion as to what the employers might have done had they sued in the High Court or the county court, nor is it necessary to look into futurity, or to offer any opinion as to what course is open to either of the parties so long as the agreement remains an existing undetermined contract. It would be useless, therefore, to discuss the various cases cited with reference to the second objection.

There must be judgment for the appellant, with costs.

Judgment for the appellant; leave to appeal refused.

Solicitors for the appellant, Harrison & Davies, for Hooper & Ryland, Birmingham.

Solicitors for the respondents, Unett, Moore, Bayley, & Co., Birmingham.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } March 8.

GOODWIN v. GOODWIN AND ARNOLD. (a.)

Divorce—Order for costs—More than six years' delay in issuing execution—Application to the court—Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 42, r. 23.

Where on a husband's petition for dissolution of his marriage a decree nisi is granted with costs against the co-respondent, and the husband does not issue execution for more than six years, application should be made to the court for leave to issue execution.

Motion for leave to issue execution against the co-respondent, although more than six years had elapsed since the decree nisi.

On the 1st of July, 1886, the husband obtained a decree nisi for the dissolution of his marriage with the respondent, together with an order for payment of the costs by the co-respondent. At that time the co-respondent had no means, and the husband did not proceed further against him, but the co-respondent recently acquired means, and the husband thereupon carried in for taxation his bills of costs against the co-respondent, and on the 15th of February, 1897, the bill was taxed at £299 3s. 11d., and the registrar's certificate of costs signed.

Priestley, for the petitioner, applied, ex parte, in support of the motion.—Rule 178 provides that on the signing of the registrar's certificate he shall at once issue an order of the court for payment within seven days; there is no limitation of time in the rule, and even if the Statute of Limitations (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 8) applied, the twelve years there required has not expired. All we want is the order under rule 178 in order that we may serve it under, and as required by, rule 179, when, if not paid within the seven days, a writ of execution must be issued under that rule. In the Queen's Bench and Chancery Divisions before execution can issue after a lapse of six years the leave of a judge must be obtained (ord. 42, r. 23).

JEUNE, P.—You may have the order for service on the solicitor; but I think, considering the lapse of time and the residence abroad of the co-respondent, it is only reasonable that execution should not issue for three months.

Motion allowed.

Solicitors for the petitioner, Freeman & Bothamley.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } Feb. 22.

In the Petition of TUCKER. (a.)

Divorce—Restitution of conjugal rights—Written demand for cohabitation—Substituted service—Rule 175.

Where a wife posted a written demand for restitution of conjugal rights to the husband addressed to him at his business and private address, and both letters were returned unopened through his solicitors, who refused all information about him, but it was believed he had left the country, the court allowed substituted service of the demand on the husband's solicitors.

Motion on behalf of the wife for leave to serve on the husband's solicitors the written demand for cohabitation and restitution of conjugal rights, required by rule 175 to be made on the party cited.

The affidavits showed that the wife had posted two registered letters to the husband, one addressed to his last known place of residence, the other to his place of business. Both letters were returned by the husband's solicitors to the wife's solicitors unopened.

The husband had left the country, and his solicitors refused to give any information about him.

Newsom, in support of the motion, asked the court to follow in In re The Petition of Sheehy, L. R. 1 P. D. 423, 25 W. R. Dig. 123.

He also cited Waters v. Waters, 24 W. R. 190, and McArthur v. McArthur, 58 L. J. P. D. & A. 70, 38 W. R. Dig. 87.

BARNES, J.—You may take the order. It is only a question of its form probably; it should be to dispense with the rule so far as it requires service on the husband.

Order, that personal service on the husband of the demand for restitution of conjugal rights be dispensed with, and that the said demand be personally served on the husband's solicitors.

Solicitors for the applicant, Rose-Innes, Son, & Crick.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) July 21.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. DODINGTON. (a.)

Inland revenue—Estate duty—Exemption—Property settled by will or disposition—Property on which probate duty has been paid—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 21 (1).

By a marriage settlement personal property belonging to the wife was vested in trustees upon trust for the wife for life, and after her death for the husband for life, and after the death of the survivor upon trust for such persons as the wife should by deed or will appoint. The wife died before the commencement of the Finance Act, 1894, having by her will exercised the power of appointment in favour of certain beneficiaries. Probate duty was paid by her executors upon the value of the trust fund after deducting the value of the husband's life estate. On the death of the husband after the commencement of the Finance Act, estate duty was claimed by the Crown on the value of the trust fund.

Held, that the case came within the exemption from estate duty conferred by section 21, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act, and that the Crown was not entitled to estate duty in respect of the value on which probate duty had been paid.

Judgment of Vaughan Williams and Wright, JJ., ante, p. 476, affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court (Vaughan Williams and Wright, JJ.) on an information by the Attorney-General claiming estate duty, ante, p. 476.

The information prayed that it might be declared that upon the death of William Popham estate duty became payable, under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1894, upon the principal value of a certain trust fund which passed on his death.

The fund in question formed part of a fund which was brought into settlement by Mrs. Popham on her marriage with William Popham, and which was vested in trustees upon trust for Mrs. Popham for life, then for William Popham for life, and on the death of the survivor upon trust for such persons as Mrs. Popham should by deed or will appoint.

Mrs. Popham by her will appointed the fund now in question upon trust, subject to the life interest of William Popham, for her children by a former marriage.

Mrs. Popham died on the 10th of August, 1883. William Popham died on the 28th of August, 1894.

The question was whether, on the death of William Popham, the fund was exempt from estate duty by reason of the fact that the executors of Mrs. Popham had paid probate duty on the value of the fund after deducting the value of William Popham's life interest.

The Divisional Court held that the Crown was not entitled to estate duty except in respect of the value on which probate duty had not been paid.

The Crown appealed.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the Crown.

Haldane, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the defendant.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—It seems to me that I can deal with this case by simply construing the language of the statute in its ordinary and grammatical sense and applying it to the case in point. The case in point is this, that Mrs. Popham made a settlement, and that settlement was to be carried into effect for the benefit of particular persons to be determined by an appointment made by will. Does that come within section 21 of the Finance Act? The section says that "estate duty shall not be payable on the death of a deceased person in respect of personal property settled by a will or disposition made by a person dying before the commencement of this part of the Act, in respect of which property" probate duty has been paid. Was the money with which we are now dealing settled by a disposition? I can see no reason, according to the ordinary construction of statutes, to confine the disposition mentioned in this section to any particular disposition, and to say that it applies only to some dispositions, and not to all. It seems to me that this is money settled by a disposition. The settlement is a disposition; but it is a peculiar kind of settlement. It is a settlement by appointment under a will to particular persons, and it is because it is in that peculiar form that probate duty became payable when the will appointing the settled money to those persons came into effect. I can see no sufficient reason for saying that this peculiar disposition is not one of the many dispositions which might bring the case within the section; and this disposition, made by the settlement and the will together, was made by a person who died before the commencement of the Act. And it is a disposition of money in respect of which probate duty has been paid. Therefore it seems to me that the case is brought within the very terms of the section, and that this is an attempt to make the defendant pay estate duty in respect of money after probate duty has already been paid in respect of that money.

I agree with the judgment of the Divisional Court, and I think that the appeal should be dismissed.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Section 21, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act is a saving clause in favour of the subject. It seems to me that counsel for the Crown are attempting to whittle it down till it is made of no effect in favour of the subject. They are attempting to make one and the same property pay probate duty and then estate duty. The express purpose of section 21 is that the same settled property should not bear the burden of first paying probate duty and then paying estate duty. The facts of the case are these: A lady on her marriage brought certain money into settlement. It was settled on herself for life, remainder to her husband for life, and subject thereto as she might appoint by will, and, in default of appointment, remainder to her own separate use. She exercised her power of appointment by will, and she died in 1883, about ten years before the coming into operation of the Finance Act. At her death the trust funds were £3,791. Her husband's life interest was worth £936. Her executors paid probate duty on £2,855. The Crown now claim that they are entitled to estate duty not only on £936, but also on the £2,855 in respect of which probate duty has already been paid. The case came before my brothers, Vaughan Williams and Wright, who held that the Crown were wrong. I also think that the Crown are wrong. The question turns on this, whether section 21, sub-section 1, applies to this case. I agree with my brother Vaughan Williams in thinking that the disposition here consists of the settlement plus the will. I read the word "disposition" in this section as not limited to a testamentary or quasi-testamentary disposition. I read it in the largest possible sense in favour of the subject; and in my opinion if there be personal property settled by a disposition made by a person dying before the commencement of the Act, in respect of which property —that is the property settled by the disposition—probate duty has been paid, such property is exempt from estate duty. I think that this case falls within the words of the section, and that the appeal must be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The scheme of the Finance Act, as appears from sections 1 and 2, is to sweep in almost everything that can in any sense be said to pass on a person's death. But that is made expressly subject to exemptions. Here the defendant claims to be exempt under section 21. This section does not deal with property in general, but with property that is settled. "Settled property" means, according to the interpretation clause, and to my mind necessarily means the same thing as property comprised in a settlement. The section provides that if it shall so chance that, in respect of property settled by a will or disposition made by any person dying before the commencement of the Act, probate duty or account duty has been paid or is payable, in that state of things either payment of such duty or the fact that it remains payable, is to exclude the Crown from claiming estate duty. It appears to me that the only words in this section requiring an interpretation are the words "settled by a will or disposition." Counsel for the Crown seek to cut down the meaning of these words. They leave the word "will" to stand by itself, and say, as indeed is true, that in this case there is no settlement made by the will standing alone, and they want to deal with the word "disposition" separately, which they say in effect means such a disposition as would make account duty payable under section 38 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881. What right have we so to cut down the meaning of the word "disposition"? It is suggested that its association with the word "will" is a reason for doing so, but I think that the fact that the word "will" includes probably the great majority of the cases that will arise where probate duty is payable is a sufficient explanation why that word is used, and that its use does not afford a ground for cutting down the very general word "disposition" which follows. In the present case I think there cannot be any doubt that taking the settlement and the testamentary appointment together there is a disposition made by the lady who was the settlor, and by virtue of that disposition probate duty became payable, and was paid to the Crown. That which became subject to probate duty was the settled property, not a part of it only, but the whole of it. As a matter of fact probate duty was not paid on the whole of the property, for the simple reason that it was a reversionary interest which did not fall into possession at once. But this is plainly not a case in which a partial interest under the settlement has been charged with duty; everything that was in settlement was so charged. My conclusion is that the defendant brings himself plainly within the words of the section, and also within the intention of it. That intention broadly is that, where there is a settlement, and probate duty has been paid in respect of the interest of the settlor in the settled property, that shall exempt the settled property from estate duty just as, under section 5, sub-section 2, one payment of estate duty exempts from liability to make a second payment of estate duty. It follows that in my opinion estate duty is not payable on any part of this property; but as there is no cross-appeal we cannot deal with that point.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the Crown, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the defendant, Flower, Missey, & Fellowes.

From Q. B. Div. (Lindley and Chitty, L.JJ.) — June 29.

STEVENS v. GRIFFIN. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Taxation—Taxation in district registry—Jurisdiction of judge—Order for retaxation before taxing-master in London—Grounds for making such an order—Question of principle.

Where costs have been taxed in a district registry, a judge in chambers, if satisfied that the registrar, whether or not he has gone wrong on any question of principle, has taken an exaggerated or erroneous view of the case, has jurisdiction to order that the bill, or part of it, be referred for retaxation to some other person of greater skill and experience (e.g., to one of the taxing masters in London).

Appeal from Bruce, J., in chambers.

The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant in the Chancery Division in respect of a nuisance. The action was afterwards transferred to the Queen's Bench Division and was tried at Birmingham. Judgment was given for the defendant with costs, and thereupon the defendant's costs were taxed, in ordinary course in the district registry. The plaintiff carried in objections in writing to the registrar's certificate. The registrar considered the objections and answered them. The plaintiff then appealed to Bruce, J., in chambers, contending that the registrar's allowance was so excessive that, though not wrong in any matter of principle, the certificate must be varied.

The learned judge ordered that the items objected to in the defendant's bill of costs should be referred to Master Butler for re-taxation, and that the costs of the application should be reserved.

The defendant appealed.

Willoughby Williams (Jelf, Q.C., with him), for the appeal.—There can be no retaxation except before the district registrar.

He referred to R. S. C., ord 25, r. 4; ord 65, r. 27, sub-rules 39, 40, 41, 42; and Shrapnel v. Laing, 36 W. R. 297, 20 Q. B. D. 334.

Crump, Q.C., and C. Montague Lush, for the plaintiff.—The district registrar took an unreasonable view, and allowed a plainly excessive amount. Bruce, J., was therefore justified, in the exercise of his discretion, in directing a retaxation. The words of ord. 35, r. 4, and of ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rule 41, are clearly wide enough to authorize the order which has been made.

They cited Smith v. Buller, 23 W. R. 332, L. R. 19 Eq. 473, and Worsley v. Labouchere, 28 L. J. Notes of Cases, 879.

Willoughby Williams, in reply.—The discretion which the judge has assumed to exercise really belongs to the taxing officer: ord. 65, r. 27 (38).

LINDLEY, L.J., stated the facts and continued: Thereupon the defendant appeals, upon the ground that the judge had no jurisdiction to make that order. It appears to me that we cannot go the length of saying that the judge had no jurisdiction to do what he has done; and of course, if it is a matter of discretion, we should not interfere with the exercise of his discretion. There are only two rules to which I think it is necessary for me to refer. The first is ord. 35, r. 4, which says: "Where final judgment is entered in the district registry, costs shall be taxed in such registry unless the court or a judge shall otherwise order." Therefore an order may be made to tax elsewhere even those costs which as a rule will be taxed in a district registry. Mr. Willoughby Williams contends that that rule must be construed rather narrowly, and that we cannot uphold an order for a retaxation of part of the costs where the whole has already been taxed in a district registry. I am not disposed to put so narrow a construction upon the words I have read: and I do not see why under that rule, even if there were nothing else, the learned judge had not jurisdiction to do what he has done. He has "otherwise ordered" as to the costs objected to. But then there is another rule even wider in its terms. That is ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rule 41: "Any party who may be dissatisfied with the certificate or allocatur of the taxing officer as to any item or part of an item which may have been objected to as aforesaid, may, within fourteen days from the date of the certificate or allocatur, or such other time as the court or a judge or taxing officer, at the time he signs his certificate or allocatur, may allow, apply to a judge at chambers for an order to review the taxation as to the same item or part of an item, and the judge may thereupon make such order as the judge may think just." Well now, looking at that rule I cannot have any doubt that Bruce, J., was justified in saying that, having regard to what he saw of the taxation by the district registrar, he was not satisfied with it; and that he was not disposed to send the matter back to the same taxing officer. He was quite justified in saying that, in the exercise of his discretion, he should refer the taxation to a person whom he considered to have greater experience and greater skill in such business. We should not be warranted in saying that a judge cannot do that.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It appears to me, therefore, that under either of those two rules, or at any rate, certainly under ord. 65, r. 27 (41), the learned judge had ample discretion to make the order he has made. That being so, I am not disposed to examine the mode in which he has exercised his discretion. We ought not to tie the learned judge's hands too tightly, though no doubt the general rule is that he should not interfere except on questions of principle. But if he sees that the taxing-master has taken an exaggerated and erroneous view of the case, without being able to put his finger on any matter of principle in which he has gone wrong, that may be a case for exercising his discretion and making the order which will do justice. We must not tie him too tight. Here he says he is not satisfied with the taxation, and he therefore refers certain items for retaxation to a person of more skill and more experience. The jurisdiction being in the learned judge, it is impossible for us to review the mode in which he has exercised it. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

CHITTY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think, in view of rule 4, of order 35, that the learned judge had jurisdiction to make this order. I do not read the words at the end of that rule to mean that the order must be made at the trial, or before any taxation has taken place. I think the order may be made subsequently. Therefore, in such a case as the present, the order may be made after judgment and after the taxation has commenced, because I do not agree with the argument that the taxation which has taken place is final. Final it is as to certain items; but as to the items referred to Master Butler, the matter is still sub judice. Then I turn to ord. 65, r. 27, clause 41. We should not be justified in cutting down the meaning of clear words. On the face of the rule, does not clause 41 enable a judge to make such an order as the judge may think just? I conceive it would be a misreading of that rule to say that the judge had not jurisdiction to make such an order as this. One reason for making such an order is that it is a matter of taxation, and though judges may be learned in the law, they are not highly skilled in questions of taxation. I could conceive the learned judge saying: "I cannot decide as to some of these items. I see they are more than ought to be allowed, but I cannot say how much more. I will send for a taxing-master, and have him to sit in chambers with me." In that way a very long time would be occupied. Or, again, the judge might say that he would give some of his private time to the business, and ask the taxing-master to come and sit with him after four o'clock.

All this seems to show that we must read the words as they stand. The learned judge has made, after careful consideration, such an order as he thinks just. I agree the general rule is that the objections brought before the judge must be objections on principle, but I conceive we ought not to bind the hands of the judge by saying that he cannot entertain any other kind of objection. It is an ordinary rule of convenience that the judge should not interfere except on a question of principle; but, where there are grounds —and I think there are here—for saying that the allowance of the taxation is excessive, the judge may either take the taxation into his own hands or do what Bruce, J., has done, to get such assistance as he would derive from a skilful and experienced taxing officer. The taxation will, of course, proceed with regard only to the objections already raised.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Frith Needham, for James Clark, West Bromwich; Charles Robinson & Co., for William Waldron, Brierley Hill.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) June 28.

HOPE v. BRASH AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Practice—Discovery—Production of documents—Libel in newspaper—Original manuscript—Ord. 31, r. 18.

In an action for libel in a newspaper the defendants in their defence admitted the publication, and pleaded an apology, and paid a sum of money into court. In their affidavit of documents the defendants stated that they had in their possession certain documents relating to the matters in question in the suit, among them being a manuscript which they objected to produce on the ground that it was the original contribution to them, and was that which was published by them.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to production of the manuscript.

Hennessy v. Wright, 36 W. R. 879, 24 Q. B. D. 445, followed.

Appeal from an order made at chambers.

The action was for libel, the alleged libel having appeared in the Christmas number of a newspaper called the West Cumberland Times, belonging to the defendants.

The defendants, in their statement of defence, admitted the publication, and pleaded that the alleged libel was inserted in the newspaper without actual malice and without gross negligence, and that before the commencement of the action they inserted in the newspaper a full apology for the libel according to the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 2; and they brought into court a sum of money and said that the same was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiffs' claim.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendants made an affidavit of documents in which they said that they had in their possession or power the documents relating to the matters in question in this suit set forth in the schedule, among which was "a manuscript of the story published in the Christmas number of the West Cumberland Times," but they objected to produce this document on the ground that it was the original contribution to them, and was that which was published by them as admitted in the first paragraph of the statement of defence and as to which they admitted responsibility.

The plaintiff gave the defendants notice to produce the manuscript, which the defendants refused to do.

Bruce, J., ordered the manuscript to be produced.

The defendants appealed.

J. E. Bankes (Norman Craig with him), for the defendants.—The defendants have admitted the publication of the libel, and the settled practice at common law is not to order the name of the writer to be given or the manuscript to be produced: Hennessey v. Wright, 36 W. R. 879, 24 Q. B. D. 445; Parnell v. Walter, 38 W. R. 270, 24 Q. B. D. 441. The court, therefore, will not order this manuscript to be produced, as it is not relevant to any issue in the action.

Montague Lush, for the plaintiff.—In Hennessey v. Wright the document was not set out in the affidavit of documents. In the present case the defendants have set out the manuscript as a document "relating to the matters in question in this suit." The defendants have admitted that the document is relevant, and the plaintiff is entitled to have it produced: Bustros v. White, 24 W. R. 721, 1 Q. B. D. 423. If ord. 31, r. 18, gives a discretion in the matter, the judge has exercised his discretion, and this court will not interfere.

J. E. Bankes, in reply.—The decision in Bustros v. White was upon the old rule 11 of order 31 (now rule 14). The present application is under rule 18 (1), and the last clause (which was added in November, 1893) of that rule now gives the court a discretion as to ordering production.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In my opinion it is a matter within our discretion as to whether we shall order production of this document. This is an action for a libel published in a newspaper. The defendants admit the publication and do not deny that the matter is libellous, but put in a statutory plea which, if proved, is an answer to the action, and verdict and judgment will be entered for them. The plaintiff has asked for an order for production of a document which is not the document which contains the libel complained of. The document containing the libel is the newspaper. He has asked for production of the manuscript which was contributed to the newspaper for publication. As regards the plea, I cannot have a doubt that the burden of proving it lies on the defendants, and if they cannot prove it the jury must consider the case as if that plea were not on the record. The question before us is whether the plaintiff can have the manuscript produced for inspection. I take it that in Hennessey v. Wright the question was whether the defendant in an action for libel is bound to disclose the name of the person who gave him the materials upon which the libel was written, or to produce the manuscript. The judgment which I delivered in that case stated that the common law judges had always refused to compel a defendant to say who gave him the information or to produce the manuscript. Lindley, L.J., upon that statement of the common law practice said that he adopted that rule. Therefore this court recognized the rule that this information should not be given to a plaintiff in an action of libel. The court did not say that they would never do so. But unless there is something special in the case the court will not make the order. The objection which the defendants take to the production of the manuscript in this case is founded upon the ruling in Hennessey v. Wright. In exercising his discretion the judge ought to have exercised it in accordance with the rule so laid down, there being no special circumstances in the case. We must now act upon that rule and say that the plaintiff is not entitled to production of this manuscript. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The action is for libel, and the defendants admit the publication and set up what I may call a statutory defence. There cannot be a doubt that the plaintiff has nothing to do with the proof of that defence. The defendants stated in their affidavit of documents that they had in their possession the manuscript of the story from which the libel was published, and objected to produce it. It is argued that, as the defendants have admitted the relevancy of the document, the court is bound in accordance with the decision in Bustros v. White to order its production. That case, however, was decided under rule 11 (now r. 14) of order 31. Therefore I say nothing about it, for since that decision an addition has been made to the rules for the express purpose of rendering it not obligatory on the court to order production and inspection of documents under rules 12 and 18. In my opinion it is not obligatory upon the court to order inspection of this document, and according to the rule laid down in Hennessey v. Wright, and especially the judgment of Lindley, L.J., in that case, the plaintiff will not get production of such a document as this in an action of libel. There must be something special in a case to take it out of that rule. For these reasons I think that the order of Bruce, J., was wrong.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. In Bustros v. White the document in question was plainly relevant, and it was held that the document must be produced. But that case is not applicable here, because in Hennessey v. Wright an exception to the rule was made in the case of libel actions. I also think that the alterations made in the rules since Bustros v. White was decided show that discovery is not a matter of right, but a matter of discretion. The court is not bound ex debito justitiæ to grant discovery. Where the contents of a document are known, as in this case, it is not a sufficient ground for ordering production and inspection that the applicant wishes to see it upon the chance that it may contain something favourable to his case.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Harrison & Powell, for Brown & Auld, Whitehaven.

Solicitors for the defendants, Speechly, Mumford, Landon, & Rodgers.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } May 25, 27.

In re LAMBERT.
MOORE v. MIDDLETON. (a.)

Will—Hotchpot clause—Advanced child—Period of distribution—Interest on advance—Rate of interest.

A testator bequeathed £30,000 to his trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his wife during her life, and after her death to transfer one-fourth to his son and permit the remaining three-fourths to fall into residue; and he bequeathed the residue (comprising all his real estate and his residuary personalty) to his trustees upon trusts for conversion and division among his three daughters. There was a provision that any advance made to any daughter should go towards satisfying the portion under the residuary gift, and it was expressly directed that this provision should apply to a sum of £6,000 payable under a covenant by the testator to the trustees of the marriage settlement of one of the daughters. The testator died in 1878, leaving personalty to the amount of £3,700 and real estate valued at £62,000. The trustees, in the exercise of their discretion, did not realize the real estate at once, but sold portions from time to time. The testator's debts, including the £6,000, amounted to £13,000, and of this sum a considerable portion (including the £6,000) was raised on mortgage. Interest on the £30,000 legacy was paid by the trustees to the widow out of the income of the real estate till 1894, when a sufficient amount of real estate had been sold to answer the legacy. After payment of all interest on the mortgage and the legacy there remained a surplus income of £200 a year, which was divided between the two unadvanced daughters. On the death of the widow in 1895 the £30,000 became divisible.

Held, that the advanced daughter must bring the £6,000 into hotchpot and also pay the interest thereon at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum from the date on which the payment of the £6,000 was actually made, but that the period of distribution was the death of the testator.

In re Rees, Rees v. George, 29 W. R. 301, 17 Ch. D. 701, followed.

In re Dallmeyer, 44 W. R. 375, [1896] 1 Ch. 372, discussed.

This was a summons raising the question whether on an adjustment of accounts interest was to be charged on a sum of £6,000 advanced to one of the testator's daughters in pursuance of a covenant made by the testator in his lifetime.

The will of the testator was this: He gave to his trustees, therein named, a sum of £30,000, with interest thereon at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum to be computed from his death, in trust to invest the money and to pay the income to his wife for her life, "and from and after the decease of my said wife shall divide the said legacy and the investments thereof into four equal parts, and shall pay or transfer one of such fourth parts to my said son John Wilmot Lambert for his own absolute use and benefit, and shall permit the three remaining fourth parts thereof to sink into my residuary estate." Then he devised his real estate and his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell, call in, and convert, and to stand possessed of the proceeds of such sale and conversion upon trust "to pay my funeral and testamentary expenses and debts (including debts owing by me upon mortgage, for payment whereof it is my will that my residuary estate shall be the proper and primary fund in exoneration of the respective mortgaged estates) and the legacies other than specific legacies bequeathed by this my will or any codicil hereto, and to divide the residue of the said moneys, but subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, into three equal shares, and shall stand possessed of one of such shares in trust for each of my three daughters, Edith Moore, Helen Marion Lambert, and Beatrice Lambert respectively." Then the shares so appropriated to each of such daughters were to be held in trust to invest, and during the life of each daughter to pay the income of the appropriated share to his daughters for their separate use without power of anticipation, and after death to stand possessed thereof in trust for the children. Then followed this proviso, on which the question turned: "Provided also, and I hereby declare that if I shall in my lifetime advance, or give or covenant or agree to advance or give to or with any of my said children any sum or sums of money on his or her marriage or otherwise, then (unless I shall in writing direct the contrary) any such sum shall be taken in or towards satisfaction (pro tanto) of the provision intended to be hereby made in favour of the child to or with whom such sum shall be advanced or given or covenanted or agreed to be advanced or given, or in favour of his or her issue, and I expressly declare that this provision shall extend and be applicable to a sum of £6,000 which in and by the settlement executed on the marriage of my said daughter Edith Moore I covenanted to pay to the trustees of the same settlement as a marriage portion for my last-named daughter."

The testator died in 1878. At the time of his death he was only entitled to a comparatively small amount of personalty—namely, £3,700. He was entitled to real estate of considerable value, which was valued at the time of his death at £62,000. It consisted of building land near Banstead, and the trustees in exercise of their discretion postponed realization and only sold parts of it from time to time. They had at the date of the summons sold a considerable part producing as much as the value of the whole real estate at the time of the testator's death, while a portion was left unsold which was likely to produce a large additional sum. The debts and funeral and testamentary expenses of the testator, including the £6,000 which had been covenanted to be paid to the trustees of Mrs. Moore's marriage settlement, amounted to £13,000, and of that sum a considerable portion was raised by mortgage. The £30,000 legacy was not at first raised, but the trustees paid interest on it to the widow out of the income of the real estate till in 1894 they had realized enough of the real estate to provide for that sum by means of investing a sufficient amount to answer it. After keeping down the interest on the mortgage and providing interest on the legacy, there remained a surplus income of £200 a year, and that was divided equally between the testator's two other daughters—Mrs. Hopgood and Miss Lambert. Recently Mrs. Lambert, the widow, died, and the £30,000, as well as other sums, became divisible.

G. Henderson, for the trustees.

A. áB. Terrell, for the legal personal representatives of the widow.

Rowden, for Mrs. Moore.—I contend that no interest is payable here at all; but in any case it is payable only from the period of distribution, which in this case is the death of the widow: In re Dallmeyer, 44 W. R. 375, [1896] 1 Ch. 372; In re Rees, Rees v. George, 29 W. R. 301, 17 Ch. D. 701.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Paice, for Mrs. Moore's children.—The principle is that the share of the advanced child of the income actually earned shall bear the same ratio to his share of the whole income as does his share of the actual capital to the whole capital: In re Dallmeyer.

Cartmell, for Mrs. Hopgood and Miss Lambert.—In re Dallmeyer really decides that no interest is payable after the period of distribution, but that interest is payable till the period. Each of the two unadvanced daughters should receive out of the residue a sum equal to the interest on the £6,000. The balance of the income should be paid to my clients till they have received what Mrs. Moore received. The proper period of distribution is the death of the testator. In re Dallmeyer did not overrule In re Rees.

He also referred to Hilton v. Hilton, L. R. 14 Eq. 468, 21 W. R. Dig. 281; Andrewes v. George, 3 Sim. 393.

STIRLING, J., stated the facts, and continued: The question is whether Mrs. Moore and her children are, on the adjustment of accounts in the division of what is now divisible, to be charged with any and what interest on the £6,000 for the purpose of equalizing the various residuary legatees, and how the adjustment is to be effected? Now, the case on behalf of Mrs. Moore was opened with a reference to the recent case of In re Dallmeyer, and it was contended that, as there was no express mention of interest in the will, Mrs. Moore ought not to be charged with interest at all. I observe, however, that that case relates only to interest which was chargeable before the period of distribution of the estate. In that case accumulation for a certain time was directed, and the estate did not become distributable till the period of accumulation had expired. The testator gave a power to his trustees to make advances during the period of accumulation. The trustees exercised the power, and the question arose when the period of accumulation expired, whether the children to whom advances had been made were to be charged with any and what interest in respect of those advances. It was held by Kekewich, J., and a majority of the Court of Appeal, consisting of Lord Herschell and Smith, L.J., Rigby, L.J., dissenting, that no interest was to be charged, but it is to be observed that that case is no authority with reference to what is to be done after the period of distribution, for this reason, that (I suppose by inadvertence) the decision in the court below was that no interest at all should be charged; but it appears from the judgment of Rigby, L.J., though it does not appear very clearly from the statement of facts in the report, that to that extent the order made in the court below was varied. The lord justice says this: "It was conceded on the appeal that interest on all the sums must be brought into account as from the date when the residuary estate ought to have been distributed—that is to say, from the date of the youngest child attaining twenty-one, and that the order appealed against must to that extent be varied." So In re Dallmeyer is an authority that interest is chargeable after the period of distribution whenever that may be. The leading case prior to In re Dallmeyer is In re Rees, before Jessel, M.R. It is to be observed that in the judgment of Lord Herschell and Smith, L.J., there is not a word about overruling In re Rees, and in fact Lord Hershell distinguishes In re Rees from the case before him and says: [His lordship read the judgment, [1896] 1 Ch., at p. 385: "No case was cited in which any rule was laid down governing the present case . . . supports the appellants contention," and continued:] So that he in no way departed from what was laid down by the Master of the Rolls in In re Rees.

That being so, before deciding what the period of distribution is—which, no doubt, is the important question—I have to consider what was laid down in In re Rees, and the grounds on which that decision was based. In that case the testator gave his residuary estate to his widow for life with remainder to his children equally, with a proviso in the common form for bringing into hotchpot all sums advanced to any of them by him during his life. He did make advances to some of them, and it was held: "In distributing the residuary estate among the children after the death of the widow, the advanced children must bring their advances into hotchpot with interest at 4 per cent. per annum up to the distribution of the estate, such interest to be computed from the death of the widow and not from the date of the respective advances or from the death of the testator." It appears from the report that an action had been brought for administration and the estate had been to some extent paid into court because it was on a petition for payment out that the question arose from what date the advanced children were to be charged with interest. It was contended no doubt, there that the period from which interest was to be charged was the date from which the advances were made, but the Master of the Rolls deals with it in this way: [His lordship read the judgment (17 Ch. D., at p. 704): "In this case several of the children had received large advances in the testator's lifetime . . . in calculating the interest in that way the children get the same shares as if there had been no advances," and continued:] Then I should point out also this: the Master of the Rolls deals with the case of Field v. Seward, 5 Ch. D. 538, 25 W. R. Dig. 311, which came before Bacon, V.C. He says: [His lordship read the judgment (17 Ch. D., at p. 706): "There the question was whether interest on a sum of £2,550 . . . you must in the account charge interest on the advance from the time when it would have produced interest as part of the common fund," and continued:] It is clear that the Master of the Rolls approved the reasoning of Bacon, V.C., in that case. Now, the rule adopted down to In re Rees was that for securing equality in the account as between the persons interested in the estate—because of course there is no question of any absolute payment being made by the advanced party—you charged the person advanced with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. on the advance. That is the mode which has been adopted in every case which has come before the court so far as those cases have been brought to my attention and so far as I know.

In In re Dallmeyer Rigby, L.J., threw out what is said to be a suggestion for a new mode of dealing with the case. It is to be observed, as I have already pointed out, that in that case the period of distribution did not arise till the close of the period of accumulation. The advances were made at various times, and, indeed, were made to each child from time to time, and not all at the same time. In dealing with the mode in which the advances were to be treated as satisfying the shares of the various children who had been advanced, the lord justice says: [His lordship read the judgment ([1897] 1 Ch., at pp. 395-6): "The strict rights of the children in this view of the will . . . as the accumulations of residue have still continued, 4 per cent. interest might be charged."] There, no doubt, in working out what the lord justice considered the rights of the parties, he made a suggestion that accounts should be taken with yearly rests, but it is observable that he says that after the time of distribution a charge of interest on the advances will have to be taken, showing that his lordship was of opinion that primâ facie, at all events, after the period of distribution whatever it might be, the ordinary mode would be to charge interest on the advances.

Now we come to the question, What is the period of distribution here? What is the will? The will says that the estate is to be converted, and directs payment of the debts and legacies and division of the residue amongst the three residuary legatees. The period of distribution therefore is, primâ facie, the death of the testator, but I can understand a state of circumstances in which the period of distribution would not really be that period. If, for example, after paying debts and legacies, there had been only enough to pay the £30,000 in which the widow had a life interest, no real division could take place till the death of the widow, when the £30,000, or at any rate three-quarters of it, fell into the residue; and if the state of the testator's assets had been such as not to leave a surplus beyond what was required for payment of debts and legacies, I should have been prepared to hold that the period of distribution did not arise till the death of the widow. But the facts do not bear this out.

It is agreed that after paying debts and legacies there was a clear surplus of £22,000, which left an ample margin for division amongst the parties, after, in the first instance, paying the sum of £6,000 each to Mrs. Hopgood and Miss Lambert, so as to put them on the same footing as Mrs. Moore. What Mrs. Moore suggested is based on the judgment of Rigby, L.J., in In re Dallmeyer, namely, that the proper way to deal with the case is to treat each party as having an interest in the estate to the extent of this sum in the first instance, Mrs. Moore bringing her £6,000 into hotchpot, then divide the rest between them equally, and ascertain from this point of view the interest of each in the corpus, and divide the income between them in proportion to this interest. For example (I put the case for simplicity of calculation), if the net surplus after paying the debts and legacies, including the sum of £6,000, was £18,000, in distributing that, this £6,000 would be brought into hotchpot, and you would have, before you distributed anything else, to pay this amount both to Mrs. Hopgood and to Miss Lambert; then there would remain, after deducting £12,000 paid away in this way, £6,000, payable among the three, giving £2,000 to each. Therefore the distribution of this balance of £18,000 would be that Mrs. Hopgood and Miss Lambert would take £8,000 each and Mrs. Moore £2,000. It was said that the real estate ought to be treated as representing those sums of £8,000, £8,000, and £2,000, and the income ought to be divided between them in the proportion of those sums, that is to say, in the proportion of 8, 8, and 2, or 4, 4, and 1; or, putting it shortly, Mrs. Hopgood and Miss Lambert take four-ninths each, and Mrs. Moore takes one-ninth of the income, whatever it was which was produced. I confess I was struck with this argument; but on consideration it seems to me that this course does not produce equality in the sense in which that term is used in the judgment in In re Rees. What you should do is to provide that all the children shall, at the widow's death, take the same shares as they would have taken if no advance had been made. Now, in this case, if no advance had been made, the sum which it was necessary to raise by mortgage would have been less by £6,000. Therefore so much of the income of the real estate as was necessary for the payment of interest on the mortgage would have been available for division among the three residuary legatees, and to the extent that that income was applied in payment of the interest on the mortgage the other residuary legatees, Mrs. Hopgood and Mrs. Lambert, were in a less favourable position than Mrs. Moore. It seems to me, therefore, it would not be right to divide the income in the ratios which I have supposed of 4, 4, and 1; but it is necessary to bring in something additional which would represent the income which would have been available for equal distribution among the three if the £6,000 had not been raised and paid out of the estate.

Having had the opportunity since the case was discussed before me of thinking it over, I have come to the conclusion that that is not a fair mode of producing equality according to the rule laid down in In re Rees, and I think, having regard to what Rigby, L.J., says in the latter part of his judgment, to which I have called attention, I must adhere to the rule laid down in all cases till In re Dallmeyer. I only depart from it to this extent: In re Rees the rate of interest charged was at 4 per cent. Now, at the time of the decision of In re Rees that rate of interest had been at all events adopted by the Court of Chancery as representing the average rate of interest payable in respect of investments such as trustees were authorized by the court to invest in; it is also the rate of interest which is charged according to the rules of court on debts which are provable in administrations, and as to which there is no special provision as to their bearing interest. The rule as to the rate of interest payable on debts has not yet been altered, and that remains the rate at which interest is charged on debts; but as regards other applications of the rule charging 4 per cent., it has in recent times been thought that that rate is excessive inasmuch as in these days trust investments do not yield anything like 4 per cent. and several judges, I think North and Kekewich, JJ., particularly in the number, have under circumstances such as these, been in the habit of saying or have said that only 3 per cent. is to be charged. I understand on the present occasion the other residuary legatees, for whom Mr. Cartmell appears, do not desire that anything more should be charged, and I think, therefore, in the present case the rate which ought to be charged in respect of the advances ought to be 3 per cent. and not 4 per cent. In this case there was no advance during the testator's lifetime and the date at which interest would begin to be charged would be that at which the advance was actually made.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors, Bird & Hamer; Paice & Cross; Fladgate & Co.

Q. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams and Wright, JJ.) — March 31; April 5; May 27.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WOOD AND OTHERS. (a.)

Inland revenue—Estate duty—Settlement—Contingent life interest—Subsequent subsisting limitations—Property passing on death—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2, 5.

By a marriage settlement the share of the wife in a certain trust fund, created by the will of her deceased father, was brought into settlement upon trusts to pay the income to the wife during the joint lives of herself and her husband, and after the death of either of them, then to pay the income to the survivor for life, and if the wife should survive her husband, and there should be no issue of the marriage, then upon trust for the wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns. There was no issue of the marriage, and the wife survived her husband, who died in 1895.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that on the death of the husband no estate duty was payable under sections 1 and 2 of the Finance Act, 1894, for that "subsequent limitations under the settlement continued to subsist" within section 5, sub-section 3, and therefore no property passed on the husband's death.

Information by the Attorney-General. By a deed of settlement dated the 8th day of January, 1877, on the marriage of the Rev. Charles Lyndhurst Vaughan and Henrietta Barbara Goschen, a fund representing a trust legacy of £85,000 to which the said Henrietta B. Goschen had become absolutely entitled under the will, dated the 12th of July, 1865, of her father, William Henry Goschen, deceased, was brought into settlement and assigned unto the defendants Robert Wood, Charles H. Goschen, and Alexander H. Goschen, in trust to pay the income thereof to the said Henrietta Barbara Goschen, for her sole and separate use during the joint lives of herself and her intended husband, and after the death of such one of them as should first die, to the survivor of them for life, and after the death of such survivor, to the issue of the marriage. There then followed a declaration that if there should be no issue, the defendants, the trustees of the settlement, should stand possessed of the trust fund, if the wife should survive the husband in trust for the said wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns.

The said marriage was duly solemnized shortly after the execution of the said indenture. The Rev. Charles L. Vaughan died on the 8th of August, 1895. There was no issue of the marriage, and the said Henrietta Barbara Vaughan consequently became absolutely entitled on his death to the property settled by her.

The Crown thereupon claimed a declaration that upon the death of the said Charles L. Vaughan estate duty became payable under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1894, upon the capital value of the trust fund comprised in the said settlement of the 8th of January, 1877, less the value at the time of his death of the life interest of the said Henrietta Barbara Vaughan in such funds.

Sir Richard Webster, A.G. (Sir R. T. Reid. S.G., and Vaughan Hawkins with him) for the Crown.

Sir Robert Reid, Q.C., and Austen Cartmell for the defendants.

The arguments of counsel appear in the following written judgments.

Cur. adv. vult.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—In my opinion our judgment in this case should be for the defendants.

The material facts of the case are that by the settlement made on the marriage of Mr. Charles Lyndhurst Vaughan and Miss Henrietta Barbara Goschen, a fund representing a trust legacy of £85,000 under the will of her father to which she had become absolutely entitled was brought into settlement in trust to pay the income to Mrs. Vaughan for her sole and separate use during the joint lives of herself and her husband, and after the death of such one of them as should first die to the survivor for life. Then follows a trust in favour of the issue of the marriage, and then a declaration that after the death of the husband, and in default of appointment or on failure of children the trustees should stand possessed of the trust fund if Mrs. Vaughan should survive her husband, in trust for Mrs. Vaughan, her executors, administrators, and assigns. So in popular language and in the events which have happened, that is to say failure of issue and death of Mr. Vaughan in his wife's lifetime, and the death of all other persons entitled to any interest under the will of Mrs. Vaughan's father, Mrs. Vaughan has now become the absolute owner of the trust fund in possession. The Crown contends that in this state of circumstances estate duty has become payable under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1894, upon the capital value of the trust fund comprised in the said settlement, less the value at the time of Mr. Vaughan's death of the life interest of Mrs. Vaughan in the trust fund. The estate duty, if leviable at all, must be so leviable under the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the Finance Act, 1894. Section 1 enacts as follows: In the case of every person dying after the commencement of this part of this Act there shall, save as hereinafter expressly provided, be levied and paid, upon the principal value ascertained as hereinafter provided of all property, real or personal, settled or not settled, which passes on the death of such person a duty, called "estate duty," at the graduated rates hereinafter mentioned, and the existing duties mentioned in the first schedule to this Act shall not be levied in respect of property chargeable with such estate duty. Section 2, sub-section 1: "Property passing on the death of the deceased shall be deemed to include the property following—that is to say, (a) property of which the deceased was at the time of his death competent to dispose; (b) property in which the deceased or any other person had an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased, to the extent to which a benefit accrues or arises by the cesser of such interest; but exclusive of property the interest in which of the deceased or other person was only an interest as holder of an office, or recipient of the benefits of a charity, or as a corporation sole." The other two clauses are not material.

Now, the first question is whether any property passed to Mrs. Vaughan on the death of her husband. It is clear that no property passed within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (a)—that is to say, no property passed of which the deceased at the time of his death was competent to dispose. If property passed at all it must be by virtue of the definition in section 2 (1) (b)—that is to say, property in which the deceased, Mr. Vaughan, had an interest ceasing on his death to the extent to which a benefit accrues or arises by cesser of such interest.

Now, if the words at the beginning of section 2, sub-section 1 (b), are taken alone, they seem clearly wide enough to include the present case, because the £85,000 fund was property in which the deceased, Mr. Vaughan, had an interest (it is true not an interest in possession) which ceased on his death, and that a benefit (it is true not a benefit in income) accrued by the cesser of such interest—that is to say, a benefit accrued by the cesser of the husband's contingent interest to Mrs. Vaughan; for upon the cesser of her husband's interest she would have been able to get a larger price if she had sold her own interest, and from a pecuniary point of view her husband's interest would, during his lifetime, have been worth something to her if she had desired to purchase it.

Now, this being so, it remains to be seen whether there is anything, either in the residue of the section or in the other sections of the Act, to cut down "the interest of the deceased" to mean "an interest of the deceased in possession," or to cut down the meaning of "benefit accruing" to "benefit accruing in income."

Now, it is said that the words at the end of section 2, sub-section 1 (b), "as holder of an office or recipient of the benefits of a charity or corporation sole," indicates that clause (b) only applies to interests in possession, because the words "holder," "recipient," and "corporation sole" are inapplicable except to an interest in possession. It is very difficult to conceive a concrete case in which there should be a contingent right to receive the benefits of a charity, but it would certainly seem as if the death of such person, and the consequent cesser of the contingent interest might cause a benefit to someone taking an absolute interest in remainder, and that such a case would be outside the words of this exception, and that consequently estate duty would be payable unless "interest" in this section is construed to mean "interest in possession," and it is, of course, inconceivable that the Legislature intended estate duty to be paid in a case where the deceased was not a recipient through the interest not having fallen into possession, and not to be payable in the case where the deceased was a recipient and had an interest in possession. But I do not think that these considerations are sufficient by themselves to cut down the natural meaning of the words in the earlier part of the section; I think the more proper view is to regard these words as a piece of imperfect drafting.

Now, the next ground upon which it is said that the words of section 2 (1) (b) ought to be limited in the way suggested is that section 7, sub-section 7 (1), which prescribes the measure of the value of the benefit accruing from the cesser of an interest ceasing on the death of the deceased, prescribes a measure based upon the assumption that the interest ceasing is an interest in possession, because it speaks of the interest extending to the whole income of the property, or to less than the whole income of the property, and deals only with those two cases, and it is said that "income" is a term applicable only to an estate in possession, and that the deceased, who was not in possession, had no interest in the income, and that, even if it is said that he had a contingent interest in the prospective income, the prospective income is not necessarily the same as the income at the time of his death, but might after the interest fell into possession, be greater or less than the income produced by the property at the time of his death. It is to be observed on this argument that although estate duty under section 2 (1) (b) is only leviable in respect of property in which the deceased had an interest ceasing on death, to the extent to which benefit accrues by the cesser, and although section 7, sub-section 7, purports to prescribe a measure of the value of that benefit, the measure actually prescribed seems to be the value of the property out of which the income flows, and not the value of the benefit. I wish here to say with reference to any observations that follow upon the meaning of section 7 that it is not necessary for the judgment which I have arrived at to construe section 7, and I must not be taken by this judgment to be construing section 7. I am only taking a hypothetical construction of that section and showing how that hypothetical construction upon which certain arguments were based would operate upon the conclusions that we have arrived at.

The suggested departure of section 7, sub-section 7, from section (2) (1) (b) by the substitution as the subject of taxation of the property in which the deceased had an interest for the interest which he had to the extent to which benefit accrues by the cesser of that interest, and the apparent injustice and inconsistency of this substitution properly lead to such a construction of the Act as might minimise its operation; but I cannot bring myself to the conclusion that it was intended by the Legislature to limit section 2 (1) (b), to interests in possession, and exclude from taxation benefits arising from cesser of a contingent life estate which had not fallen into possession. It is obvious that the benefit arising from such cesser might be of most substantial pecuniary value, and it seems to me that the scheme of the Act is intended to include not only every case of property passing by death, but that section (2) (1) (b) shows that the scheme also includes every benefit accruing by death even although the property from which the benefit is derived does not itself pass. No one, I think, would hesitate to come to this conclusion if the Legislature had limited the duty by the value of the benefit accruing, and I do not think that we are entitled to refrain from coming to that conclusion because the Legislature has adopted what seems to be an irrational measure of that benefit. I am quite aware that those who argued on behalf of the Crown attempted to avoid the inconsistency between section 7, sub-section 7, and section 2 (1) (b) by saying that the words "extent of the benefit" means "extent in proportion of the income or profit of the property receivable by the deceased in respect of his interest." I do not agree in this view; but, even supposing that the apparent inconsistency between section 2 (1) (b) and section 7, sub-section 7, can be avoided by this construction, another difficulty remains which the Crown itself has recognized in the information, and that is, that if the construction of the Crown is right and the inconsistency between the two sections is thus got rid of, it is difficult to understand why the Crown has deducted in their claim the value of the life interest of Mrs. Vaughan; for so to do is clearly to recognize that the quantum of estate of the deceased must be taken into consideration.

Holding therefore, as I do, that there was in this case, within the meaning of section 2 (1) (b), a cesser of interest on Mr. Vaughan's death, and a benefit accruing therefrom, it remains to consider what is the value of that benefit, and lastly, whether there is anything in the facts of this case to exempt the defendants from paying duty. Now, first, what is the measure? Can you apply section 7, sub-section 7? To apply the measure given by this section according to the contention of the Crown would seem to be the application of an obviously unjust measure. It is this, no doubt, which accounts for the moderation of the claim of the Crown. The Attorney-General seemed in his argument disposed to get out of the application of the section by accepting the suggestion that it could not apply, and saying that the section was not exhaustive, that is, that the measure was not of universal application. I dissent from this, and I think that in cases where the measure cannot be applied no duty can be levied, and it seems clear that the only ground upon which the section can be held not to apply would be that the words it contains relative to income limit its application to estates not in possession. In my opinion, therefore, section 7, sub-section 7, does supply the measure. If, however, section 7, sub-section 7, does not supply the measure, and interests passing other than those in possession are property taxable with estate duty, I think that the measure would be, not that suggested by the Crown, but the increase in value of the absolute property in reversion having regard to the outstanding life estate of Mrs. Vaughan by the cesser by death of Mr. Vaughan's contingent interest. This is the result which one would expect from the general scheme of the Act, but unfortunately the Legislature has not said so. The mistake seems to have arisen from the desire of the draughtsman for uniformity, leading him in the case of cesser by death of an interest, to make the property and not the benefit the measure of the value for the purposes of taxation, because it happens to be so in the Act generally.

I wish once more to say that nothing I have said here about section 7 must be taken as a judgment on my part as to the meaning of section 7. I have only put a meaning upon it which was suggested in the argument on behalf of the Crown for the purpose of testing that argument.

It remains only to consider the exemptions. Two are suggested—namely, those contained in section 5, sub-section 3, and section 21, sub-section 5. The property in question seems to be settled property within the meaning of section 22, sub-section 1 (h), of the Act. It will be observed that in the case of settled property a further estate duty, called settlement estate duty, on the principal value of the settled property is payable as soon as the property passes, unless the passing be to the wife or husband of the deceased, but the settlement estate duty is only once payable during the continuance of the settlement. These are the exemptions regarding settlement estate duty. Then sub-sections 2 and 3 of section 5 provide exemptions also in the case of estate duty. Sub-section 2 provides that if estate duty has been paid in respect of settled property, estate duty shall not be payable in respect thereof until the death of some person competent to dispose of the property; and then sub-section 3 provides that in the case of settled property, where an interest of a person fails before it becomes an interest in possession, the property shall not be deemed to pass on his death if subsequent limitations (which, I take it, means one or more) under the settlement continue to subsist. Now, did subsequent limitations under the settlement continue to subsist at the death of Mr. Vaughan? I think they did, notwithstanding the fact that Mrs. Vaughan thereupon became absolutely entitled to this property, and could have demanded a transfer of it from the trustees. I think that "subsist" properly describes any estate created by the settlement which has not come to an end. I do not think that such an estate is the less a limitation because there is no estate limited beyond it. In other words, I think that limitations under the settlement continue until the death of a person who was at the time of his death during the continuance of the settlement competent to dispose of such property. It is said that these sub-sections assume that estate duty and settlement estate duty have each of them been paid in respect of this property. I can only say that although no doubt the sub-sections were passed in contemplation of that state of things, the Legislature has not seen fit so to limit them, and no injustice seems to be done, because the death of Mrs. Vaughan will be the first occasion on which the property settled by the marriage settlement will pass by reason of death, except in the case of the death of Mr. Vaughan, on the happening of which, section 5 (1) (a) expressly prevents settlement estate duty from becoming payable, and, so far as regards property passing under the will of Mrs. Vaughan's father, the existing duties at that time seem to have been paid. In my judgment section 5, sub-section 3 prevents either settlement estate duty or estate duty becoming payable. I wish to add that I do not think that the fact that section 14 of the Finance Act of 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28) contains an enactment in the sense of the construction which I am now putting on section 5, sub-section 3 shows that that construction is wrong because, if it were right, the amending Act might be said to be useless. The amending Act may be merely declaratory to clear up doubts, and even if not so intended, the presence of the section in the later Act cannot determine the construction of the earlier Act.

The other exemption suggested is under section 21 (5). I do not think that this exemption has any operation. The words are as follows: "Where a husband or wife is entitled either solely or jointly with the other to the income of any property settled by the other under a disposition which has taken effect before the commencement of this part of this Act, and on his or her death the survivor becomes entitled to the income of the property settled by such survivor, estate duty shall not be payable in respect of that property until the death of the survivor." Mrs. Vaughan did not on Mr. Vaughan's death become entitled to the income of the property settled by herself. That income was already hers in possession at the time of the death; and moreover, Mrs. Vaughan did not, as survivor, become entitled to income of any property settled by her on her husband either solely or jointly. I have only to add that I do not think that The Attorney-General v. Robertson, 41 W. R. 241, [1893] 1 Q. B. 293, which is a decision under the Succession Duty Act, 1853, has any application, nor the observation of Lindley, L.J., to which we were referred. In my opinion our judgment should be for the defendant.

WRIGHT, J.—I agree on the ground that in my opinion section 5, sub-section 3 applies to this case.

As to section 7, sub-section 7, I have no definite idea what it means. I am rather inclined to think that it is not exhaustive nor co-extensive with section 2 (1) (b), but applies only where the deceased has an interest in possession; but I do not express that as any judicial opinion.

Judgment for defendant.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for defendants, Druces & Attlee.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams and Wright, JJ.) — April 6, 29.

In re RAATZ.
Ex parte RAATZ. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Receiving order — Petitioning creditor's debt—Bills of exchange—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 6 (1) (b).

When a creditor has taken bills from a debtor in lieu of payment, and that debtor commits an act of bankruptcy, the creditor is thereupon entitled to treat the bills as dishonoured, and may present a petition in bankruptcy upon the original debt.

Appeal against a receiving order made by the registrar of the county court at Swansea.

Meager, for the debtor.—There are two objections against this order—firstly, the petition was founded on a debt due for goods sold and delivered, for which the debtor has given his acceptances which have not yet matured. The petition might have been founded on the bills on maturity, but could not rightly be founded on a debt for which conditional payment has been given: Ex parte Mathew, Re Mathew, 32 W. R. 813, 12 Q. B. D. 506. Secondly, there was not sufficient evidence that the bills were held by the petitioning creditor at the date of the petition. The petition did not set them forth, nor were they stated to be held by him in the affidavit in support of the petition.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Muir Mackenzie, for the petitioning creditor.—It is true that bills held by the petitioning creditor are usually set forth in the petition as securities, but it is not necessary to set them forth, because they are not securities on the property of the debtor, but merely obligations. Further, in this case they were produced by the petitioning creditor at the hearing. For the purposes of a bankruptcy petition a bill of exchange is the same thing as a bond, and that was held to be a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt in Ex parte Griffith, Re Mostyn, 1 W. R. 236, 3 De G. M. & G. 174.

Meager replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 29.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—In my judgment the decision of the registrar here must be affirmed. Two objections have been taken to it—firstly, that although the bills of exchange accepted by the debtor were produced there was no proof that, at the time of the presentation of the petition, the petitioning creditor was the holder of these acceptances; and it was said rightly that if he was not the holder the debt represented by the acceptances would be pro tanto paid. The affidavit does not in terms state that the petitioning creditor is the holder of the bills, but the bills were produced by him at the hearing, and the affidavit swore to the existence of the original debt, which would have been untrue if the bills had been parted with. I do not think the petition was in proper form here, it ought to have mentioned the existence of the bills, and if any suggestion had been made at the hearing of the petition that the petitioning creditor was not at that date the holder of the bills, the debtor ought to have had an opportunity of going into the matter, but it has hardly been contended, in the face of the fact that the bills were produced, that the petitioning creditor was not the holder at the date of the petition.

Secondly, it was objected that the holding of these acceptances rendered it impossible to petition on goods sold and delivered during the currency of the bills given for such goods. This objection is altogether inconsistent with bankruptcy practice. Section 6 (1)(b) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, enacts that the petitioning creditor's debt must be "a liquidated sum, payable either immediately or at some certain future time." In this case the original debt was for a liquidated sum, but was suspended by the taking of the bills. Such suspension was, however, determined by the commission of an act of bankruptcy by the debtor. I do not say that the creditor could have sued on these bills, I do not think he could; but I do say that the debtor's insolvency determines the period of credit given by implication by the law merchant when bills are taken in lieu of present payment. The credit is given on the assumption of solvency, it ceases on the debtor becoming insolvent, and the creditor is entitled to found a bankruptcy petition on the original debt.

WRIGHT, J.—I agree. I think that where a creditor holds the acceptance of a debtor, and that debtor commits an act of bankruptcy, the creditor can treat the acceptance as dishonoured for the purposes of presenting a petition in bankruptcy, as the debtor has thereby put it into the power of his other creditors to force him to dishonour the bill.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, Ivor Evans, Swansea.

Solicitor for the respondent, A. J. Benjamin.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). April 8.

"THE MECCA." (a.)

Appropriation of payments—Debtor and creditor—Rule in Clayton's case—Right to appropriate.

The rule in Clayton's case, 1 Mer. 572, does not apply where there is no account current between the parties, nor where, from the nature of the transactions or other circumstances, it is clear that the creditor intended that it should not.

Where there has been no appropriation by the debtor the creditor has the right of election up to the last moment.

Decision of the Court of Appeal reversed.

This was an appeal by the plaintiffs in the action from a decision of the Court of Appeal affirming a judgment of Bruce, J.

The facts are taken from the judgments:

The action was brought by Cory & Co. against the owners (Hamidieh Steamship Co.) of the steamship Mecca (formerly called The State of Nevada) for necessaries supplied to that vessel in Alexandria, on two occasions, in March, 1894. The owners of The Mecca were also the owners of a vessel called The Medina (formerly called The State of Pennsylvania) to which necessaries had also been supplied by the plaintiffs. Bills were drawn by the captains of the vessels on the owners and accepted, but dishonoured, and after some correspondence the owners offered to pay £900, which was due to them from some underwriters, if plaintiffs were prepared to hand over the bills to an equivalent amount.

The plaintiffs agreed to give a receipt on account of the bills owing, though they could not hand over the bills themselves, as they were in Egypt, but they gave a receipt in the following form:

"Received from Messrs. H. E. Moss & Co., £900 (nine hundred pounds), on account of moneys owing us by the Hamidieh Steamship Co. of Constantinople. The drafts embodying this amount being in Egypt we cannot now return them, but herewith agree to take no further action in connection therewith during the period agreed upon between us.

"Per pro Cory Brothers & Co., Lim.
W. Ganslandt.

"August 15, 1894."

The correspondence and account raised the question which their lordships were called upon to determine. The Mecca was arrested for the amount alleged to be due, and in this action, if the amount for necessaries supplied to The Mecca had been paid, the plaintiffs must fail, notwithstanding that the amount of £401 2s. 9d. was still due to them. The question accordingly was whether there had been an appropriation of the sum of £900 by the parties, or whether by law there was any rule by which it could be determined in respect of what indebtedness that £900 was paid.

The correspondence and the account, so far as they were material to the case, were as follows:

"June 22, 1894.

"Messrs. Theodoridi & Co., Constantinople.

"Dear Sirs,—In reply to your favour of 15th instant, we now beg to inform you that we have arranged with Messrs. H. E. Moss & Co. to withhold from arresting any of your steamers for the next three months, provided that the full amount due to ourselves and our friends be paid us out of the moneys

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Messrs. H. E. Moss & Co. hope to get from the underwriters.

"Yours truly,
"Cory Brothers & Co., Lim.
W. Ganslandt.
"August 22, 1894.

"C. A. Theodoridi, Esq., Constantinople.

"Dear Mr. Theodoridi,—We were pleased at receiving the £900 from Messrs. H. E. Moss & Co. on account of the money due to us from the Hamidieh Steamship Co., and thank you for your good offices in the matter.

"We hope it is the company's intention to at once remit us the balance due—namely, £401 2s. 9d., as per statement herewith, for I think you will agree with me that when the company is finding some thousands a month for financing The Mecca, paying canal dues, coals in cash, &c., it is absurd to let the above amount be outstanding, and I hope therefore you will at once make a settlement with us, and thus obviate the necessity of our taking further steps to secure it.

"With kind regards, and hoping you have not suffered by the recent earthquake,

"Yours faithfully,
"E. Moxey."

"3, Fenchurch-avenue, London, E.C.,
"August 22, 1894.

"Messrs. The Hamidieh Steamship Co., Constantinople.

"In account with Cory Brothers & Co., Lim.

—	—	Days	Interest at 5 per cent.			—
			£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
April 7	To draft p. ss. State of Pennsylvania, at Genoa, £267 14s. due, and notarial exp. £3	137	5	1	8	270	14	0
,, 26	To draft p. ss. State of Nevada, at Alexandria, £176 5s. due, and notarial exp. 17s.	118	2	17	2	177	2	0
,, 27	To draft p. ss. State of Nevada, at Port Said, £194 8s., and notarial exp. 15s.	117	3	2	6	195	3	0
,, 27	To draft p. ss. State of Pennsylvania, at Port Said, £630, and notarial exp. 15s.	117	10	2	3	650	15	0
Aug. 22	To telegrams to and from Constantinople	—				7	2	5
Aug. 15	To interest to date at 5 per cent	—				20	6	4
		£	21	3	7	1,321	2	9
	By amount received from H. E. Moss & Co.	7		17	3	900	0	0
,, 22	By balance of interest	—	20	6	4
,, 22	By balance	—				401	2	9
		£	21	3	7	1,301	2	9
	To balance					£ 401	2	9

The first item in this account was for The Medina, the second was for The Mecca, the third was for The Mecca, and the fourth for The Medina.

The period of grace having expired, the present action was brought by the appellants against The Mecca, which was found and arrested at Cardiff in the beginning of October, 1894.

Gainsford Bruce, J., held that the payment was by law appropriated to the earlier items in the account, and gave judgment for the defendants. The judgment was affirmed on appeal.

Sir W. Phillimore (Bucknill, Q.C., and Gerard Ince with him), for the appellants.

Pyke, Q.C. (A. E. Nelson, and H. S. Q. Henriques with him), for the respondents.

Bucknill, Q.C., replied.

The House took time for consideration.

Lord HALSBURY, L.C., after stating the facts, continued: It is said that the account last referred to brings the question within the authority of Clayton's case, 1 Mer. 572; and, in order to see whether this is so, it is necessary to consider what Clayton's case was, and the reasons given by Sir William Grant, who decided it. That learned judge says: "Where an account current is kept between parties as a trading account, there is no reason for any other appropriation than that which arises from the order in which the receipts and payments take place and are carried into the account. Presumably, it is the sum first paid in which is first drawn out. It is the first item on the debit side of the account which is discharged or reduced by the first item on the credit side; the appropriation is made by the very fact of setting the two items against each other." This rule so formulated has been adopted in all the courts in Westminster Hall—see Field v. Carr, 5 Bing. 13.

It is to be remembered, however, that on more than one occasion it has been pointed out that this is not an invariable rule of law; the circumstances of a case may afford ground for inferring that transactions of the parties were not so intended as to come under this general rule; and if it were necessary to decide it, I confess I should have great doubt whether the transactions I have described would not themselves negative the application of such a rule. The letter of the 22nd of June shows that the parties intended that the right of arresting the ship should be preserved, and that it was only to be suspended for the three months, and I cannot think that, knowing perfectly well what they were about, either of the parties could have supposed that the payment was to be so appropriated as to release The Mecca from the liability to arrest. But, in truth, I think this case is not within the rule at all. This is not an account current; there is no setting one item against another; credit is given for the £900 at the end of all the items. They are all separate transactions, and, although on one piece of paper, seem to represent only historically the transactions as they occurred.

How the principle of Sir William Grant's decision can apply to two transactions of identically the same date, I cannot understand. There is in respect of these items no earlier date—it is the mere fact that one precedes the other in its place on the paper. I think it would be extremely inconvenient in business to draw inferences from the shape or order of accounts, and I think it would be an altogether novel application of a principle which has been estabilshed so long that I should feel great reluctance to engraft a new application upon it.

In this case it appears to me that the letter and account negative any appropriation of the £900 to any particular part of the indebtedness: and as the plaintiffs were entitled to appropriate, I think they have done so by this action, and I therefore move your lordships that the judgment be reversed, and judgment be entered for the plaintiffs for £401 2s. 9d.

Lord HERSCHELL.—This action was brought in the Admiralty Division in rem by the appellants against the owners of the steamship Mecca as defendants.

The action was brought to recover the amount of certain bills of exchange. The defence was payment. It is admitted that unless and except in so far as this defence can be established, the action is an undefended one. [His lordship then stated the facts, and proceeded:] It is contended on the part of the appellants that, inasmuch as the payment was not appropriated by the debtors, it was open to them to make any appropriation of it they pleased, and that not having, prior to bringing the action, made any other appropriation, they were entitled to treat the payment as made on account of The Medina items and thus to maintain the action against The Mecca.

The case was treated in the Court of Appeal as governed by Clayton's case. No appropriation of the payment having been made at the time, it was held that it must be attributed as a matter of law to the first three items of the account, and that the items relating to the steamship Mecca must therefore be treated as paid. I do not think the present case is governed by Clayton's case. It was there decided that where there is a current account between parties, and payments are made without appropriation of them, they are to be attributed in point of law to the earliest items in the account. In the present case, at the time the payment was made no account had been delivered by the appellants to the respondents. The debts in respect of the two vessels arose from transactions which were entirely distinct; they had never been brought into a common account. An account comprising all the items was for the first time made out and transmitted by the appellants to the respondents after payment was made. In the account thus made out credit was given for the £900 which had been received. At the time of the payment, therefore, there was no account to the items of which the payment could by operation of law be appropriated. The question to be determined is what was the effect of the transmission to the respondents of the statement of account of the 22nd of August. It is clear that if the appellants had merely entered in their own books an account such as was transmitted, it would not have amounted to any appropriation by them, and they would still have been at liberty to appropriate the payment as they pleased. It is equally clear, however, that when once they had made an appropriation and communicated it to their debtors, they would have no right to appropriate it otherwise. What, then, was the effect of bringing the items of debt in to a single account, and transmitting it to their debtors in the manner they did? I have had some doubt whether it might not be regarded as indicating to the debtors an appropriation of the sum paid to the earlier items in the order in which they appear in the account. But upon a consideration of all the circumstances, including the correspondence between the parties, I have come to the conclusion that the appellants did not intend to make any such appropriation, and that the respondents were not entitled so to regard it.

Lord MACNAGHTEN, after stating the facts, said: In addition to other defences which have failed, the respondents pleaded that part of the money paid to the plaintiffs by H. E. Moss & Co. "was in respect of the whole amount sought to be recovered by the plaintiffs" in the action. At the trial the defendants' counsel relied on the statement of account of the 22nd of August, 1894, as an appropriation by the plaintiffs of the £900 towards the payment of the four bills in the order in which they were entered in the account, and contended that by such appropriation The Mecca bills had been paid.

Gainsford Bruce, J., held that the payment was, by law, appropriated to the earlier items in the account, and gave judgment for the defendants. The judgment was affirmed on appeal.

I have some difficulty in following the reasoning of the learned judges in the Court of Appeal. There seems to be an error in the shorthand notes, because the Master of the Rolls is made to say that the account came in the first instance from the company. But, if I understand his meaning aright, he does say that the account passing between the parties did not of itself operate as an appropriation or afford any indication of an intention to appropriate; it was as if each party in turn had said, "Here is the account. I do not appropriate." Kay, L.J., treats the case as governed by Clayton's case, to which the Master of the Rolls also refers. "I cannot see any reason," Kay, L.J., says, "why Clayton's case does not apply to the facts before us." Later on, after stating the facts as they appeared to him: "That is," he observes, "the very case to which Clayton's case would apply." Smith, L.J., seems to take the same view as the Master of the Rolls. "Neither party," he says, "appropriated the payments to anything." Then he adds, "The £900, by the law, goes to the earlier items." If what occurred in August did not amount to an appropriation, it is difficult to see why the appellants were not at liberty to make their election in October when they found The Mecca at Cardiff. And certainly I am at a loss to understand what bearing the doctrine of Clayton's case can have upon the question.

Now, there can be no doubt what the law of England is on this subject. When a debtor is making a payment to his creditor he may appropriate the money as he pleases, and the creditor must apply it accordingly. If the debtor does not make any appropriation at the time when he makes the payment, the right of application devolves on the creditor. In 1816, when Clayton's case was decided, there seems to have been authority for saying that the creditor was bound to make his election at once according to the rule of the civil law, or, at any rate, within a reasonable time, whatever that expression in such connection may be taken to mean. But it has long been held, and is now quite settled, that the creditor has the right of election "up to the very last moment," and he is not bound to declare his election in express terms. He may declare it by bringing an action, or in any other way that makes his meaning and intention plain. Where the election is with the creditor it is always his intention, expressed or implied or presumed, and not any rigid rule of law, that governs the application of the money. The presumed intention of the creditor may no doubt be gathered from a statement of account or anything else which indicates an intention one way or the other, and is communicated to the debtor, provided there are no circumstances pointing in an opposite direction. But so long as the election rests with the creditor, and he has not determined his choice, there is no room, as it seems to me, for the application of rules of law such as the rule of the civil law, reasonable as it is, that if the debts are equal, the payment received is to be attributed to the debt first contracted. Now, Clayton's case was this: Clayton had a current account with a firm of bankers. One of the firm died. Some time afterwards the bank failed. The customer's account was kept from first to last as one unbroken account. At the date of the death of the deceased partner the customer had a large balance to his credit. Afterwards he drew out sums which in the aggregate exceeded that balance. On the other hand, moneys were paid in from time to time to his credit, and at the date of the failure the balance in his favour was rather larger than it was at the date of the death. He claimed to attribute his drawings after the death to subsequent payments in. But Sir W. Grant said No. He distinguished the case from authorities which had been cited in favour of the claimant by saying, "They were all cases of distinct isolated debts between which a plain line of separation could be drawn, but this is the case of a banking account where all the sums paid in form one blended fund, parts of which have no longer any distinct existence; neither banker nor customer ever thinks of saying this draft is to be placed to the account of the £500 paid in on Monday, and this other to the account of £500 paid in on Tuesday. There is a fund of £1,000 to draw upon, and that is enough. In such a case there is no room for any other appropriation than that which arises from the order in which the receipts and payments take place and are carried into the account. Presumably it is the sum first paid in that is first drawn out. It is the first item on the debit side of the account that is discharged or reduced by the first item on the credit side. The appropriation is made by the very act of setting the two items against each other. Upon that principle all accounts current are settled, and particularly cash accounts." The facts of the present case are very different. There is no current account between the parties here. There was no account between them at all until the bills were dishonoured. The debts were distinct. But it is, I think, important to observe that even in cases primâ facie falling within the doctrine of Clayton's case, the account between the parties, however it may be kept and rendered, is not conclusive on the question of appropriation. In a case in the Exchequer Chamber in 1874—City Discount Co. v. M'Lean, L. R. 9 C. P. 692, 22 W. R. Dig. 114, where there was a current and unbroken account between the parties, Clayton's case was pressed upon the court. "I quite agree," said Baron Bramwell, "with the principle of the cases cited, such as Clayton's case and Bodenham v. Purchas, 2 B. & Ald. 39, and I think we ought to follow them where applicable. . . . But we must decide every case according to its own circumstances." "The true rule," added Blackburn, J., "is that laid down in Henniker v. Wigg, 4 Q. B. 792, which is that accounts rendered are evidence of the appropriation of payments to the earlier items, but that may be rebuttted by evidence to the contrary." The rule in Clayton's case was very much considered in Hallett's case, (1880) 28 W. R. 732, 13 Ch. D. 696, by the Court of Appeal, consisting of Jessel, M.R., and Baggallay, L.J., and Thesiger, L.J. It is "a very convenient rule," said the Master of the Rolls, "and I have nothing to say against it, unless there is evidence either of agreement to the contrary or of circumstances from which a contrary intention must be presumed, and then of course that which is a mere presumption of law gives way to those other considerations." "Clayton's case," observed Baggallay, L.J., "was decided upon the principle that in the absence of any express intention to the contrary, or of special circumstances from which such an intention could be implied, the appropriation of drawings out to the payments in, as adopted in that case, represented what must be presumed to have been the intention of the parties concerned; and so viewed, the decision is quite consistent with the like presumption being rebutted or modified in another case in which the circumstances were such as to negative any intention to make such an appropriation of the drawings out to the payments in."

Now, if the rule in Clayton's case, which certainly at one time was considered to be a rule of such force and stringency as to interfere even with the equity of following trust moneys into the bank account of a fraudulent trustee, is to be accepted with this qualification, and if an account stated between the parties is only evidence of appropriation of payments, it seems to me that, in order to determine the question at issue on this appeal, it is necessary to consider the circumstances of the case more closely than they were considered in the courts below. If you look at the position of the parties when the payment of £900 was made, and the purpose for which the statement of account of the 22nd of August, 1894, was sent, and examine the terms of the account itself and the letter which accompanied it, it is, I think, impossible to suppose that the appellants could have intended to appropriate the £900 in a manner inconsistent with the rights which they asserted when they arrested the Mecca. It is, I think, equally impossible to suppose that they could have intended to renounce or waive their privilege of election. It is quite clear that when the bills were dishonoured the appellants were alive to their rights. They intimated very distinctly that they were prepared to seize both the vessels which were then lying at Suez. It was this threat that brought the company to terms. For some time the appellants could not obtain any satisfactory assurance from H. E. Moss & Co. The Hamidieh Co. put them off with empty promises. But at last the company got frightened, and on the 15th of June, 1894, they wrote to H. E. Moss & Co., referring to the steamers, and saying, "As Messrs. Cory Bros. & Co. threaten to take proceedings against both the above-named steamers if they will not promptly receive from us a satisfactory assurance that they will soon be paid, we beg you will not delay to give them such an assurance, otherwise the results will be very detrimental to the Hamidieh Co., and to our Mr. Constantine A. Theodoridi." So on the 22nd of June, Messrs. H. E. Moss & Co. gave the required assurance, on an undertaking by the appellants that they would not, for three months from that date, arrest any of the property of the Hamidieh Co., either in this country or abroad, unless, meantime, the amounts to be received from the salvage claims on underwriters should fall short of the amount of the bills held by them. Now, after that I rather doubt whether it would have been right for the company to try and steal a march upon their creditors by attempting to appropriate the money so as to release any part of their property. However that may be, the receipt which was given on the 15th of August seems to show that the intention of the parties was that at the expiration of the period of grace the appellants should be remitted to their original rights, giving credit on general account for any sums received.

Again, it seems to me that the letter of the 22nd of August conveyed a distinct intimation that the appellants would exercise their rights unless the balance were paid. It was for the purpose of showing what the balance was, and for no other purpose whatever, that the account was made up. It is impossible to suppose that the appellants, while looking forward to exercising their rights in case of default, would have made up an account with the intention of releasing one of the two vessels, when they could not tell upon which of the two they might be able to lay their hands. Then it seems to me that the very frame of the account affords some indication that it was not intended to apply the payment in discharge of the first three bills, for the interest on those bills is the very last item in the account. If the intention had been to discharge bills which carried interest, it surely would have been intended at the same time to discharge the accrued interest on which no interest would be payable. If the company thought that the appellants intended to discharge The Mecca bills, why did they not, when they received the account, ask for their return? I cannot help thinking that if they had made such a request they would have received a very indignant reply. The result might have been the return of the cheque and immediate seizure of the two vessels, which would hardly have answered the company's purposes.

In the result, I am of opinion that it was competent for the appellants to arrest The Mecca in October, 1894, and at that time to appropriate the money which they had received from H. E. Moss & Co. to The Medina bills.

I think that the appeal ought to be allowed.

Lord MORRIS concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Ince, Colt, & Ince.

Solicitors for the respondents, Lowless & Co.

From C. A. (England). March 19.

KENNEDY v. DE TRAFFORD. (a.)

Mortgage—Power of sale—Mortgage by tenants in common—Purchase by one co-tenant—Private tender—Validity of sale.

No fiduciary relationship exists between tenants in common of real estate; and should one collect the rents of the whole, he does so as owner.

Where a mortgagee sells under a power of sale, in compliance with the terms of the power and in good faith, the sale cannot be impeached.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 454, [1896] 1 Ch. 762, affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal (Lindley, L.J., Kay, and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) reported 44 W. R. 454 [1896] 1 Ch. 762, which reversed an order of the Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The facts are given at length in the court below, and are shortly stated by Lord Herschell.

Farwell, Q.C., and A. C. Maberly, for the appellant.—Tenants in common stand to each other in a fiduciary relation: Van Horne v. Fonda, 1 Johns. Ch. Rep. (N. Y.) 388, 406; Palmer v. Young, 1 Vern. 276; Hamilton v. Denny, (1809) 1 Ball & B. 199. Dodson acted as agent.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They referred to Ex parte Lacey, 6 Ves. 625; Eyre v. M'Donnell, 15 Ir. Ch. Rep. 534, 548; Orme v. Wright, 3 Jur. 972; Martinson v. Clowes, 30 W. R. 795, 21 Ch. D. 857; Keech v. Sandford, 1 White and Tudor L. C., 6th ed., p. 53; Farrar v. Farrars (Limited), 37 W. R. 196, 40 Ch. D. 395; and as to mere lapse of time, Rochefoucald v. Bousted, ante, 272, [1897] 1 Ch. 196.

Warmington, Q.C., and T. Clarkson, for the respondent De Trafford, and Astbury, Q.C., and G. Dodson, for the respondent Dodson, were not heard.

Lord HERSCHELL.—I confess I think this as hopeless an appeal as has ever been presented to your lordships.

The action is brought against the mortgagees of some property in Manchester to set aside a sale made by them under the power of sale contained in their mortgage-deed. The property mortgaged was held by two persons, the defendant Dodson and a Mr. Carswell, as tenants in common. They were co-owners, each possessing an undivided moiety. The mortgage was for a sum of £60,000 to Sir. H. de Trafford, who is represented—he being dead—by the respondent De Trafford. It appears that the mortgagees became uneasy about their security (it matters not why), and gave notice calling in the money and pressing for payment. Payment was not made. Various proposals from time to time were made, none of which came to any effect. At the time to which I am referring Carswell had transferred his interest by a voluntary settlement to Brown, and he afterwards became bankrupt; and on the occasion of his bankruptcy Dr. Kennedy, the appellant, was appointed trustee. The rents, no doubt, were collected from time to time by Dodson, one of the defendants in this action, and one of the co-owners. I will come in a moment to the circumstances under which they were collected, but I will deal first with the questions raised with regard to the circumstances of the sale. Having, as I have said, called in their money, and payment not having been made, as they desired to reduce the mortgage debt, the mortgagees, then represented by their solicitor, Mr. Taylor, stated that they must be paid the rents of the property as received instead of their being held by the co-owners for their own benefit subject to the payment of the interest. Accordingly, from a date in the year 1887, the rents were paid over from time to time by Mr. Dodson, who received them, to the mortgagees. But they were not satisfied to let that state of things continue indefinitely; they kept pressing for payment and insisting upon payment. Ultimately they gave notice that they would take proceedings to foreclose. It was suggested that there should be a conveyance of the equity of redemption to save the trouble of foreclosing. Then they gave to Dr. Kennedy, the trustee in the bankruptcy who represented one moiety, this notice: "Our clients' instructions are to realize this security if they can obtain principal, interest, and costs. Is Mr. Carswell's trustee" (that is Kennedy) "prepared to pay them off? If not, we shall forthwith endeavour to effect a sale by private treaty. We are writing a similar letter to Mr. Dodson." There was a similar letter written to Mr. Dodson. Now, the mortgagees having given that distinct notice that, unless the parties came forward and paid off the mortgage, they were prepared to sell at a price which would realize principal, interest, and costs, it seems that at a somewhat later period Mr. Dodson entered into negotiations to become himself the purchaser of the property, and ultimately an arrangement was come to in December, 1888, according to which the mortgagees were willing to sell to Dodson for the amount of principal, interest, and costs, and they were willing to leave £54,000 of the money on mortgage after the sale was completed. Mr. Dodson wished for some delay in order to be able to be in a position to carry out that arrangement, and it was agreed that the matter should be completed in the following April. In the month of February, 1889, a communication was made to Dr. Kennedy, or to his solicitors (it matters not which), that the mortgagees were negotiating a sale on the basis of payment of an amount equal to principal, interest, and costs; so that that was known to Dr. Kennedy in February, 1889. In May the transaction was completed by a conveyance. In the autumn of 1891 Dr. Kennedy took his first step in the way of making inquiries as to what the mortgagees had done, with a view to this action, which was afterwards brought.

The appellant seeks to set aside the mortgage on the ground that the mortgagees have been guilty of a breach of duty in relation to this sale. First of all, it is said that they have sold at an undervalue, and that that sale at an undervalue has arisen from their not discharging the duties incumbent upon them as mortgagees. Now, it is not disputed that they sold in good faith. They did not intend to do anything else but properly exercise the power of sale vested in them under their mortgage. But it is alleged that they did not put up the premises for sale by auction, that they only inserted two advertisements inviting a sale by tender, and that they ultimately sold for the amount of principal, interest, and costs to Mr. Dodson. I am myself disposed to think that if a mortgagee in exercising his power of sale exercises it in good faith, without any intention of dealing unfairly by his mortgagor, it would be very difficult indeed, if not impossible, to establish that he had been guilty of any breach of duty towards the mortgagor. Lindley, L.J., in the court below, says that "it is not right or proper or legal for him either fraudulently or wilfully or recklessly to sacrifice the property of the mortgagor." Well, I think that is all covered really by his exercising the power committed to him in good faith. It is very difficult to define all that would be included in the words "good faith" or to give an exhaustive definition of them, but I think it would be unreasonable to require the mortgagee to do more than exercise his power of sale in that fashion. Of course, if he wilfully and recklessly deals with the property in such a manner that the interests of the mortgagor are sacrificed, I should say that he had not been exercising his power of sale in good faith.

It is not necessary in this case to give an exhaustive definition of the duties of a mortgagee to a mortgagor, because it appears to me that if you were to accept the definition of them for which the appellant contends—namely, that the mortgagee is bound to take reasonable precautions in the exercise of his power of sale, as well as to act in good faith—I think in this case he did take reasonable precautions. Of course, all the circumstances of the case must be looked at. To sell in the manner in which the sale here took place might, let us assume for the moment, to be under some circumstances improper. What we have to deal with are the existing circumstances. Now here there are the two co-owners, who are not acting in all respects harmoniously together. The mortgagee communicates what he is about to do to each of these co-owners. He tells each of them that he is preparing to sell, and that he is willing to take principal, interest, and costs. To that he has received from the present appellant no remonstrance, no answer. Why is he to suppose for a moment that he would receive no answer or remonstrance if Dr. Kennedy thought that selling on such terms would be an improper sale as being at an undervalue, because it must be certain that more than that sum could easily be obtained! It is obvious that where such a communication is made, and no answer is received and no objection put forward, the mortgagee may very reasonably suppose that no objection can be taken, and that nobody considers that he will be selling at an undervalue if he sells for principal, interest, and costs. Having regard to the notice given under those circumstances to Dr. Kennedy, and to the fact that he had heard in February, 1889, that the property was being sold for principal, interest, and costs, and then took no objection to it, it seems to me preposterous for him to come forward at this time of day and allege that he has a right on that ground to insist that the sale is invalid on the ground that the mortgagee has not taken proper precautions in making the sale.

But then it is said that the sale was made to a person who was incapable of buying, because he was in a fiduciary relation, and that that fiduciary relation was known to the mortgagees who sold. I do not think it is established here at all that there was a fiduciary relation between the defendant Dodson and Kennedy. What are the facts? The mortgagors are co-owners; and no doubt one co-owner, Mr. Dodson, had been left by Carswell, in the first instance, I daresay, to collect the rents. Afterwards an arrangement was come to between him and Mr. Brown, who then represented Carswell's interest, that Dodson should collect the rents and pay the money into a bank, and that each of them should draw on that account for the expenses and for the division of the money which thus belonged to them. But it is a fallacy altogether to say that Dodson only got his right to collect the rents by virtue of that arrangement. Dodson was an owner of this property—the owner of an undivided moiety, it is true, but each owner of an undivided moiety is none the less truly an owner—and Dodson in collecting those rents and profits collected them in the right which he possessed as a co-owner of the property. He did not need agency or the appointment of agent to justify him in collecting those rents. If nothing had ever passed between the two co-owners which constituted an authority from the one to act for the other, his right to collect those rents would not have been one jot or one tittle less than it was. No doubt an arrangement was come to that these rents when collected were to be paid into a bank upon which both the co-owners were to draw, but that was an arrangement that might have been put an end to at any time. It was merely an arrangement which was come to by voluntary agreement between the two co-owners. Each co-owner would have an obligation to account to the other in respect of any rents he collected or moneys he received under it.

So much for the relation between Dodson and Brown prior to the bankruptcy, or prior to the date of the setting aside of the voluntary agreement; but after that date Dr. Kennedy became a co-owner, and there was no arrangement between Dr. Kennedy and Mr. Dodson at all. What happened was this—that the mortgagees had said to Dodson, "Now you must pay over the rents to us in reduction of our mortgage debt and payment of interest. You must no longer keep them or pay them to your co-owner." They were in a position to insist upon that. Accordingly, they insisting upon that, Dodson did deal in that way with the rents which he collected. That was the state of things during the time that Kennedy was the co-owner. I do not understand it to be suggested that during Kennedy's time Dodson was agent for Kennedy. He not only never received any authority from Kennedy to collect these rents, but he never did collect them for Kennedy otherwise than as paying them over to the mortgagees to whom he was bound to pay them over. At all events, it is enough to say that there is not a shadow of ground for suggesting that during that time he was the agent of Kennedy.

But then it is said that during that period he was the agent of the mortgagees, because they, having insisted that he was to collect these rents and pay them over to them, he became their agent in that respect. It seems to me to be clear that he was not their agent to collect these rents. He collected these rents in his own right—the right he had as owner. He was collecting his own rents. No doubt they had insisted that those rents should be paid to them; but how the fact that the mortgagees have said, "When you have got your rents, pay them to us," made Dodson their agent to collect them, I am at a loss to see. Therefore I take it to be abundantly clear that he was not the agent of the mortgagees in collecting the rents any more than he was the agent of Dr. Kennedy, or than he had been the agent of Brown.

But then it is said, if you look at the evidence of Dodson you will find that he said he was an agent. I confess I do not think it is of any importance to look at any particular words of that sort used in evidence, especially when the words originated from the counsel and did not originate with the witness. No word is more commonly and constantly abused than the word "agent." A person is spoken of as an "agent," and no doubt in the popular sense of the word he may be said to be an "agent," although, when it is attempted to suggest that he is an "agent" under such circumstances as to create the legal obligations attaching to agency, that use of the word is only misleading. Therefore, whatever expressions Dodson may have used calling himself an agent, and however true and applicable they may have been in a popular sense, in point of law and in their legal sense they are meaningless. Dodson was not the agent of Kennedy, and he was not the agent of the mortgagees. If that be so, there is an end of the fiduciary relationship which is supposed to prevent his being a purchaser.

It is said in the present case—and I think it is the only other point that was urged—that it was concealed by the vendors, the mortgagees, from Kennedy that Dodson was the person who was purchasing, although they informed Kennedy that the purchase was being made. It seems to me to be utterly unimportant. If there was no fiduciary relation there was no obligation to reveal the name; there was no right in the other party to know it; there was no duty upon them to communicate it.

Therefore, it seems to me that all the grounds upon which the right to set aside this sale has rested utterly and entirely fail.

Another point has been raised—whether it arises upon the pleadings or not seems very doubtful—namely, that, whether the sale is to be set aside or not, Kennedy is entitled to claim as against Dodson that, under the circumstances under which Dodson bought, he should be declared trustee of the one moiety for Kennedy. That depends, in the first place, upon the question of the fiduciary relationship between them arising out of what has been said to be the management of the property and the collection of the rents. I have already, I think, sufficiently dealt with that part of the case. It is quite clear that in all the transactions for some time prior to this sale Dodson was not in any sort of way acting for his co-owner; the two were acting each for himself. The communications from the mortgagees were made to both of them, and so far from Dodson acting as Dr. Kennedy's agent, there was a certain amount of hostility between them—at any rate, there was a want of harmonious action.

But then it is said the mere fact that Kennedy was co-owner with Dodson of this property creates such a relationship between them that the one co-owner could not take this property and hold it for himself, but that the co-owner is entitled on equitable grounds to have it declared that the benefit of one part of that purchase should be his. No authority has been cited in support of such a proposition. Cases have been referred to of a very different description, where the owner of an estate under a settlement, a tenant for life for example, has been held incapable of obtaining an enlargement of that estate for himself alone. It has been said that whatever benefit he gets must ensure to the benefit of all taking under the settlement. That is a totally different case from this case. The only authority, if it can be so called, which has been cited is the American case before Kent, C.; but he commences his observations by saying that he is not going to lay down a general rule which would be applicable to such a case as this. He deals with that case, the circumstances of which were peculiar and of immense complication, and he certainly does not lay down any rule or doctrine of law which supports the argument which has been addressed to your lordships. It is not necessary to enter into the details of that case. It is enough to say that, even if it is to be taken as enunciating a rule of law which would be as applicable in this country as in America, it does not enunciate any rule of law which would be sufficient for the appellant in the present case.

I think I have now covered the whole of the ground, and it only remains for me to move, your lordships, that this judgment be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion. I must say that in the whole course of my experience I have never met with so bold and so hopeless an appeal. Certainly I never expected to find a proposition which was thought by a great judge to be so unreasonable and so absurd that of itself it made a complete answer to a case which had some show and appearance of justice, put forward as the foundation and the starting-point of a serious argument in this House. I find that in the case of M'Mahon v. Burchell, 2 Ph. 127, 134, before Lord Cottenham, one tenant in common claimed rent from another tenant in common who had been in occupation of the property. The Lord Chancellor says: "I must therefore take it that he (the defendant) means to raise this proposition, that the fact of the plaintiff having occupied the house not in entirety, but as a tenant in common, makes him liable to his co-tenants. A case has been referred to in which the Vice-Chancellor of England is represented to have so decided; but I cannot think that the Vice-Chancellor can have laid down any such doctrine; for the effect would be that one tenant in common, by keeping out of the actual occupation of the premises, might convert the other into his bailiff." And then he goes on to say that there is no foundation for any such doctrine as that. That is exactly the ground on which this case was opened before your lordships. It was said that Dr. Kennedy took no part in the management of the property, that he left the dealing with the property entirely to Dodson, and that, therefore, Dodson was his bailiff. That was the exact position which counsel for the appellant said in the opening of their case Mr. Dodson occupied. There is no foundation for such a proposition that I can find in any of the books or in any of the authorities that have been cited.

Nor is there anything in the other ground on which this case was attempted to be rested, the doctrine of principal and agent. In the whole of the bulky volume of evidence I cannot find a single word, or a single scrap of evidence, to show that Mr. Dodson ever accepted the position of agent in regard to Dr. Kennedy as his principal. On both these grounds it appears to me that the case entirely fails.

But I must say that I rather think that Dr. Kennedy did himself injustice, and did injustice to his clients, in saying that he left everything to Mr. Dodson, because I find a bill of costs of Dr. Kennedy's solicitors, which shows that they exerted themselves as they were bound to do; they exerted themselves very thoroughly for several months, making inquiries here, and making inquiries there, and doing everything that could be expected from persons in their position. That bill begins on the 29th of May, 1888, and goes down to August. They get all the documents, they write to all sorts of people, and they receive several answers, and they have several attendances on them; they write letters to parties requiring particulars of the property, and so on. That bill goes down to the 3rd of August, and then, on the 10th of August, there comes this letter from Taylor & Co. to these gentlemen saying, "As we have had no communication from you in this matter since your client's moiety was put up to auction, we presume he has abandoned the idea of purchasing, and we shall now deal with the property as we think best in the interests of our clients without any further notice to your client." That letter does not seem to have been answered; and it appears to me that when they received no answer to that letter they were justified in supposing that Dr. Kennedy had done his best to see if he could make any profitable use of this property, whether he could find a purchaser for it, and being satisfied that he could not do so had abandoned the property; and thereupon they sold the property, as I think they were entitled to do, to Dodson. I think they did everything that could reasonably be expected of them; but I entirely agree with what has fallen from Lord Herschell that, if a mortgagee selling under a power of sale in his mortgage takes pains to comply with the provisions of that power and acts in good faith, I do not think his conduct in regard to the sale can be impeached.

I entirely agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Lord MORRIS.—I concur. There is nothing that I can add with advantage.

Lord SHAND.—This case has formed the subject of very full opinions in the Court of Appeal. After what your lordships have said I have nothing to add, except that I entirely concur in what was said by the learned judges in the court below, and what has fallen from your lordships.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Chester, Mayhew, Broome, & Griffiths, for Crofton, Craven, & Worthington, Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondent De Trafford, L. W. Byrne, for Taylor, Kirkman, & Colley, Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondent Dodson, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., for Boote & Edgar, Manchester.

From C. A. (Scotland.) Feb. 18.

LORD ADVOCATE v. ROBERTSON. (a.)

Inland revenue—Succession duty—Account duty—Insurance—Life policy—Assignment—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss. 2 and 17—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (52 Vict. c. 7), s. 11.

Some years before his death a father made a voluntary assignment of a policy of insurance on his own life to his daughter, and she afterwards paid the premiums; previously to the assignment the premiums were paid by the father. In 1890, on the death of the father, the daughter received the money due under the policy.

Held, that the assignee was neither liable to succession duty nor account duty.

This was an appeal by the Crown from a judgment of the First Division of the Court of Session in Scotland. The Crown claimed account stamp duty or succession duty in respect of sums received under certain policies of life assurance, under the following circumstances:

James Fleming on the 21st of February, 1840, effected a policy on his life for £300 with the Scottish Equitable Life Assurance Society; and on the 9th of April, 1860, he acquired right by assignment to a policy for £250 effected on his life with the same society on the 4th of December, 1840. He kept up these policies, and regularly paid the premiums as they fell due, until the 29th of September, 1883. He then assigned both policies gratuitously to his daughter the respondent, Mrs. Robertson, who from that date paid the premiums. James Fleming died in 1890.

Graham Murray (Lord Advocate), and Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G., for the appeal.

Shaw, Q.C., and H. Anderson (both of the Scotch Bar), appeared for the respondent.

Lord HALSBURY, C.—It appears to me that in this case there is a plain interpretation to be put upon plain words. I am only reiterating what has been said over and over again in dealing with taxing Acts, when I say that we have no governing principle of the Act to look at; we have simply to go on the Act itself to see whether the duty claimed under it is that which the Legislature has enacted. This claim has been put in two ways. It appears to me that it is susceptible of a very simple answer in respect of either of them. The first question is, whether it comes under the 2nd section of the Succession Duty Act, 1853: "Every past or future disposition of property by reason whereof any person has or shall become beneficially entitled to any property, or the income thereof, upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act, either immediately or after any interval." This policy of insurance has been in existence a considerable number of years, I think. The person entitled ultimately to this money, herself in one sense created the property; that is, she continued the contract under which, if she continued to pay premiums, certain money would be payable upon the death. She continued that for a period of seven years; and therefore, reading simply the words as they stand, I do not think that she has "become beneficially entitled" "upon the death of any person;" because she has become entitled by reason—among other things—of her own payments during the period of seven years; and it appears to me, under that section, that in order to make this a "succession" we must introduce some words of this kind: "Disposition of property by reason whereof either partly or wholly a person has become entitled." If those words were introduced, in a certain sense it is true that she did partly become entitled by reason of premiums previously paid, the policy effected, and the assignment then made, supposing she continued to pay the premiums. But I find no such words in the statute, and I decline to do anything else than construe the words which I find there. I therefore am of opinion that under that statute it is impossible to maintain the claim of the Crown on this first ground. I then turn to the alternative claim, which is for account duty; and it appears to me that it is susceptible of an equally plain answer. I do not know that I can state it more plainly than Lord Adam has done. He says: "I confess I have never been able to understand in this case how a policy of insurance could be kept up for the benefit of a donee when no donee was in existence." Here, again, in order to apply the tax to the particular case in dispute, one must introduce words into the statute such as: "For the benefit of any existing or future donee, or person who may become a donee." I find no such words. Unless you introduce by construction those words into the statute it is impossible, as Lord Adam says, to understand how it could be kept up for the benefit of a donee, when no donee was in existence. I agree with him. The Lord Ordinary's view seems to have been that, the moment a policy of insurance is taken out, the person who takes out the policy keeps it up not only for his own benefit, but for the benefit of some possible donee at a future time. That really is an essential condition of the construction contended for by the Crown; and I am unable to agree with that construction. Under these circumstances I think that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, and the interlocutors affirmed; and I move your lordships accordingly.

(a.) Reported by C H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord HERSCHELL.—I am entirely of the same opinion. The first question is, whether the money payable under the policies was property to which the lady became entitled on the death of her father by reason of the disposition which he made when he assigned the policies to her. I do not intend to lay down any principle, or to say anything applicable to any case but the one with which we are dealing, I shall solely consider whether that comes within the words of the enactment or not. In my opinion it does not. I do not think that it is accurate to say that the sum payable by the insurance company became hers by reason of the disposition which her father made. It is admitted that the entire sum cannot be said to have become hers by reason of that disposition; she would never have got it but for the fact that the premiums continued to be paid upon the policy. Therefore the suggestion is that it must be split up into two portions—the one to be attributed to the payment of premiums by her father before the donation; the other to be attributed to the payment of premiums by her afterwards; and that, being so divided, upon the former of those sums the duty would be payable. I can find nothing in the words of the Act to warrant and give support to such a contention. For these reasons I think that the appeal entirely fails, so far as the Succession Duty Act is concerned.

Then it is said that account duty is payable by virtue of the Act of 1881, and the 11th section of the Act of 1889. In order to bring the case within those statutes, it is necessary to show that the policy, the duty on the proceeds of which is in question, has been either "wholly kept up" "for the benefit of the donee"—which, of course, is not the case here—or has been partially kept up for the benefit of the donee. In my opinion it would be really an abuse of words to say that the policy was "kept up for the benefit of the donee" at the time when payments were being made by the father of the lady, not for her benefit, as far as appears, or for anybody's benefit but his own. The contention is that, because he afterwards creates a donee, the payment of premiums which he made when for aught that appears he had no donee at all in his mind—I do not mean merely any individual donee, but no notion of creating a donee—must be regarded, if he creates a donee, as having been made for her benefit. I do not think that it is reasonable to treat the language of the Act of Parliament in that way. I think that it would really be not using the words of the statute, but abusing them, if we put such a construction upon them.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion.

Lord MORRIS.—I concur.

Lord SHAND.—I am of the same opinion, and while quite concurring in what has fallen from your lordships, I think that the grounds of judgment have been very clearly and accurately stated by the learned Lord President and Lord Adam in the Court of Session.

Interlocutors appealed from affirmed. Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for the appellant, F. C. Gore, for P. J. Hamilton-Grierson (Solicitor of Inland Revenue for Scotland).

Solicitors for the respondent, Keeping & Gloag, for William Gunn, Edinburgh.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Chitty, L.JJ.) — July 12, 13, 14, 15, 26.

WILDING v. SANDERSON. (a)

Practice—Consent judgment—Setting aside—Common mistake—Mistake of one party induced by the other—Approbating and reprobating.

Where a consent order does not correctly express the agreement come to between the parties it may be set aside on the same grounds and in the same circumstances as a contract in similar terms between the parties.

The party complaining of mistake is not disentitled to succeed because he has previously taken proceedings (unsuccessfully) to enforce the order in the sense in which he understood it.

A consent order set aside on the ground of mistake common to both the parties, or induced by one of them.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 462), affirmed.

Appeal from the decision of Byrne, J. (reported ante, p. 462).

The facts are very fully stated in the judgment of Lindley, L.J.

Eve, Q.C., and O. L. Clare, for the appellants, cited Powell v. Smith, 20 W. R. 602, L. R. 14 Eq. 85; Stewart v. Kennedy, 15 App. Cas. 108, 38 W. R. Dig.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

179; Ormrod v. Huth, 14 M. & W. 651; and Walford v. Adie, 5 Hare, 112, 117.

Macnaghten, Q.C., for a subsequent mortgagee.

Astbury, Q.C., and Butcher, Q.C., for the respondents, cited Thompson v. Hudson, 18 W. R. 1081, L. R. 10 Eq. 497; Paget v. Marshall, 33 W. R. 608, 28 Ch. D. 255; Harris v. Pepperell, 16 W. R. 68, L. R. 5 Eq. 1; and Scarf v. Jardine, 30 W. R. 893, 7 App. Cas. 345.

Clare, in reply, referred to Clough v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 20 W. R. 189, L. R. 7 Ex. 26, 34; Kennedy v. Panama, &c., Mail Co., 15 W. R. 1039, L. R. 2 Q. B. 580, 587; Fry on Specific Performance, 3rd ed., paragraph 747; and In re Arbib & Class's Contract, 39 W. R. 305, [1891] 1 Ch. 601.

Our. adv. vult.

July 26.—LINDLEY, L.J.—In 1874 Smith, who was a builder and quarry-owner, was indebted to two persons named Wilding, who were his solicitors and agents, in considerable sums for money borrowed, and for these sums the Wildings held some equitable securities. The Wildings not only lent Smith money, but received rents and other moneys from him, and on the 7th of October, 1877, Smith gave the Wildings a mortgage for £12,500 with interest at 5 per cent. This mortgage was not to secure further advances, but was for £12,500 which, according to the Wildings, was the amount then due to them from Smith. Smith, however, was not satisfied that he owed so much, and in January, 1878, Smith brought an action against the Wildings for an account of what was due on their mortgage, and for redemption. Ainsworth was Smith's solicitor in this action until the summer of 1879, when a change of solicitors took place. In March, 1878, Smith obtained a judgment declaring that the mortgage of the 7th of October, 1877, ought to stand as a security for what was due at that date from Smith to the Wildings on the balance of account of the dealings and transactions between them with interest at 5 per cent. from the 7th of October, 1877. The decree went on to direct an account of what was due to the Wildings for principal and interest on their security, having regard to the above declaration, and the judgment then proceeded to decree redemption in the ordinary way. Under this decree accounts were carried in; and it is obvious that the accounts which had to be taken included the cash accounts between the parties, and that interest would have to be calculated, not only on what Smith owed the Wildings, but on what the Wildings owed Smith for moneys received for him as his agents. There was much disputing over the accounts, but ultimately—viz., on the 4th of August, 1879, after Ainsworth had ceased to act for Smith, the accounts were agreed to, and Smith signed a memorandum stating that on the 7th of October, 1877, he owed Wildings on their security £11,805 3s. 1d., and that on the 22nd of January, 1878, he owed £11,053 12s. 7d., and that on the 1st of May, 1878, he owed £11,203 10s. 8d. on the same security, and he agreed to settle the action on those terms, and to pay his own costs and £100 towards the defendants' costs. An order staying proceedings was afterwards drawn up. As between Smith and the Wildings this ended the disputes between them. Unfortunately, however, there was a second mortgagee—viz., Ainsworth, who was not made a party to the action of Smith v. Wilding as he ought to have been, and who consequently was not bound by the proceedings in that action. Ainsworth's second mortgage was dated the 8th of February, 1879, and on the 22nd of August, 1890, Ainsworth commenced an action against the Wildings, Smith's trustee in bankruptcy, and a third mortgagee, Sir William Brookes, for an account of what was due on the security of the 7th of October, 1877. In this action Ainsworth sought an account against the Wildings as mortgagees in possession, and he further sought to charge them with losses sustained by sales by them at undervalues. Before this action came on for hearing Ainsworth died, and Sanderson and another, as his executors, revived the action, and a long correspondence took place between the solicitors of the plaintiffs and the solicitors for the Wildings with reference to the rights and liabilities of their respective clients. Before the letter of the 14th of March, 1894, hereafter referred to, all claim against Wildings for sales at an undervalue was abandoned; their liability to account as mortgagees in possession was admitted, and the only question which was left open for argument and for decision was for what sum the mortgage of the 7th of October, 1877, was to stand as a security. The Wildings had from time to time sold portions of the property comprised in that mortgage, and of course they would have to account for the sums so received in the ordinary way—i.e., by applying the net proceeds of sale, first to arrears of interest and then to the principal due on the mortgage (see Thompson v. Hudson). But it was never suggested that the Wildings were to be charged with interest at 5 per cent. on the sums so received; and not only was this never suggested, but the correspondence clearly shows that all that the plaintiffs wanted was an account in the ordinary form against mortgagees in possession, and an account of what was due to the Wildings on their security of the 7th of October, 1877. It is unnecessary to go through the correspondence to make this plain; but the letters of the 12th of March and the 3rd of May, 1894, from the solicitors of Ainsworth's executors to the solicitors of the Wildings are so clear and definite as to leave no doubt whatever on the subject. It is all important to bear in mind that after the mortgage of the 7th of October, 1877, was executed, all dealings and transactions between Smith and the Wildings ceased. After that date the Wildings did not act for him; they made him no advances; they ceased to be his agent; they were mortgagees, and mortgagees in possession who had made sales, but they were nothing more. This explains how it is that no reference was ever made as to the mode of taking any account against them from that date, beyond requiring the "usual redemption order against a mortgagee in possession who has sold part of the mortgaged property." The proposed minutes which passed between the parties, and the interview on the 28th of June, 1894, between Mr. Burchell, who represented Ainsworth's executors, and Mr. Robbins, who represented the Wildings, carry the case no further. The parties had agreed on every point but one, which was whether the mortgage of the 7th of October, 1877, was to stand as a security for the sum settled between Smith and Wildings in August, 1879, or for some other sum, and how such sum was to be ascertained. This question was submitted to Romer, J., on the 23rd of November, 1894, and he then decided that the account settled between Smith and the Wildings in August, 1879, ought to be taken as primâ facie correct; but that the plaintiffs—i.e., Ainsworth's executors—should be at liberty to surcharge and falsify any of the items except those agreed to before the 23rd of May, 1879. No other point was in controversy, and all parties were contented, and I see no grounds whatever for supposing that there was at that time any mistake or misunderstanding between the parties or their legal advisers. The judgment, however, as drawn up, is so worded as to go far beyond what was agreed and decided when judgment was given. [The Lord Justice read the order of the 23rd of November, 1894, and proceeded:] Under this order as drawn up, this court has decided that "on the footing of" means "on the same principle as." This involves, as a consequence, that the sums realized by the mortgagees by sales of the mortgaged property are not to be treated as is usual in taking mortgagees' accounts, but are to be treated as sums in the hands of the mortgagees, and bearing interest at 5 per cent. The order as drawn up certainly does not express the agreement come to between the parties, as gathered from the correspondence and from what took place before Romer, J. The order as it stands was drafted by counsel for the plaintiffs, and was assented to by counsel for the Wildings. The words, therefore, were agreed to. But it is not suggested that the agreement to which the parties had come, at an earlier stage of the proceedings, was ever departed from or modified in any way. The words were assented to by Wildings' counsel in the belief that they carried out the agreement previously arrived at and nothing else. No departure from this agreement ever having been suggested, he was justified in treating his opponent as submitting the form of words proposed with the same view. In my opinion the case stands thus: Either there was a mutual mistake, or the one party has fallen into a mistake into which he has been led by the other side. Whichever view is right, the order as drawn up and passed and entered does not express the real agreement between the parties. The Wildings did not discover that they and the plaintiffs understood the order differently until March, 1895, when Wildings carried in their account, and the plaintiffs objected to it. Wildings contended that the order as drawn up ought to be construed in the sense they attributed to it, and in which they had always understood it, and Stirling, J., held that they were right; he considered that "on the footing of" was, in the order of the 23rd of November, 1894, equivalent to "from the foot of." On appeal, however, this court was unable to adopt this construction of the order, and on the 4th of December, 1895, the court reversed Stirling, J.'s decision. The mistake which had been made in drawing up the order then became apparent, and it cannot be truly said to have been discovered by the Wildings at any earlier date. As soon as they discovered it they set to work to have it corrected. Their first attempt was wrong in form, and was unsuccessful (see Ainsworth v. Wilding, 44 W. R. 540 [1896] 1 Ch. 673.) But on the 19th of March, 1896, they commenced the present action to have the order of the 23rd of November, 1894, rectified or set aside on the ground of mistake. On the 25th of March, 1897, Byrne, J., set it aside, and from this decision Ainsworth's executors have appealed. The third mortgagee, Sir Wm. Brooks, whose interest in this matter is the same as theirs, has appealed also, but it was admitted by his counsel, and indeed it is plain that if Ainsworth's executor's appeal fails the appeal of Sir Wm. Brooks must fail also. This court was not asked by either party to vary Byrne, J.'s judgment by rectifying the order of the 23rd of November, 1894; the plaintiffs are content to have that order set aside, and it is unnecessary, therefore, for us to consider whether that order might have been rectified or not.

The only question we have to consider is whether Byrne, J.'s judgment, setting aside the order of the 23rd of November, 1894, can or cannot be supported. I am clearly of opinion that it can, and that there are no grounds for reversing it. It was conceded, and in my opinion it is clear, that the order of the 23rd of November, 1894, being a consent order based on and intended to carry out an agreement come to between the parties, ought to be treated as an agreement which could be properly set aside on any ground on which an agreement in the terms of the order could be set aside. Mistake is one of such grounds. But it was strongly contended that a mistake in the meaning of the words used in drawing up the agreement is not enough, and in support of this contention reliance was placed on Powell v. Smith and Stewart v. Kennedy. These cases decide that a written contract cannot be impeached simply because one of the parties to it put an erroneous construction on the words in which the contract is expressed. This is a sound principle, and as pointed out in Stewart v. Kennedy if it were not adhered to, the security of written engagements would be destroyed. But a mistake by one of the parties as to the meaning of words used may be induced by the other party, and if so induced, the above principle ceases to be applicable. Stewart v. Kennedy is an authority for this qualification. Again, a mistake as to the meaning of the words used may be accompanied by another mistake as to the subject-matter dealt with by the contract; and if the parties are not ad idem as to the subject-matter about which they were negotiating there is no real agreement between them. Hickman v. Berens [1895] 2 Ch. 638, 44 W. R. Dig. 41, is a recent illustration of that principle. In my opinion the order of the 23rd of November, 1894, is open to both of these objections. I have already stated the grounds on which I come to the conclusion that Wildings' advisers assented to the words of the order in reliance on what they knew from the letters of their opponents was all that they wanted and had bargained for. Wildings' advisers were induced by those letters, and by all that passed in court, to assent to the words adopted in the belief that they were understood by their opponents in the sense in which they themselves understood them, and not in a sense wholly inconsistent with those letters and with what passed in court. But further, Burchell's evidence shows that, although he never told his opponents that he was thinking of charging them with interest on the proceeds of the sales of the mortgaged property, he was all along intent on getting an order which would enable him to do so; and whilst the attention of Wildings' advisers was directed only to the mode of taking the account down to the 7th of October, 1877, being told that the subsequent accounts would be ordinary mortgagees' accounts, the executor's solicitor was bent on getting a subsequent account of a very different nature. The order as drawn up gives effect to his views, but it was assented to by Wildings' advisers, because their minds were addressed to a different matter altogether. Under these circumstances it is impossible in my judgment to hold Wildings bound by the order of the 23rd of November, 1894, as finally settled.

One other point requires notice. It was urged by the appellants that it was too late for Wildings to impeach the order of the 23rd of November, 1894, after their attempt to enforce it in the sense in which they understood it, and that if they wished to impeach it they should have done so as soon as they found that their opponents understood it differently from themselves. The answer to this contention is that they did not know that there was any mistake to rectify until their construction of the order was held to be erroneous; and that as soon as they found out their mistake they set to work to have it put right. The case in this respect also is like Stewart v. Kennedy, as will be seen by comparing the reports of the two appeals in 15 App. Cas., pp. 75 and 108.

Both appeals must be dismissed with costs.

LOPES, L.J., concurred.

CHITTY, L.J.—I have arrived at the conclusion that there was an actual agreement come to in court between the parties, but that the order was incorrectly drawn, and did not embody the true agreement. The language of the order was no doubt accepted by all parties, but without any intention of departing from the meaning of the agreement come to in court. Consequently there was common error and a case is made for putting the order right or setting it aside. But the respondent does not ask for rectification, and is content with the order being set aside simply. No one asks for rectification; but further I agree with Byrne, J., as to the two grounds on which he set aside the order. Assuming that the error as to the meaning of the agreement was on the side of the Wildings only, I have no hesitation in saying that the error on their part was induced by the letters of Burchell and by the language inadvertently used in court by counsel for Ainsworth's representatives. That an error so induced is ground for setting aside a contract is established by the decision of the House of Lords in Stewart v. Kennedy. I also think that if the appellants' view of the facts ought (contrary to my opinion) to be accepted, the parties' minds were not addressed to the same subject-matter. The Wildings and their advisers were bargaining about one matter and one matter only—viz., for what principal sum the Wildings' security ought to stand; while, according to the appellants' contention, Ainsworth's representatives and their advisers were negotiating not only about this point but about the principle on which the subsequent accounts were to be taken. Certainly the Wildings and their advisers had no thought of negotiating about any such subject as that they were to be charged with interest at 5 per cent. on the moneys received from the sales, a charge which would result in throwing on him some three or four thousand pounds. A consent order can be set aside on any ground that would invalidate an agreement contained in an order: Huddersfield Banking Co. v. Lister, 43 W. R. 567, [1895] 2 Ch. 273.

There is one point remaining. It is said by the appellants that by reason of their subsequent conduct the Wildings cannot now complain of the order. It is urged that they have affirmed the contract as it stands expressed on the face of the order, and in the sense in which it was construed by the Court of Appeal. This argument in my opinion is urged in vain. The Wildings have throughout maintained that the agreement ought to be construed in the sense in which they interpreted it. Stirling, J., thought the Wildings were right, but the Court of Appeal held that they were wrong. Wilding then applied by motion to Romer, J., to have the order set right; but he failed on the technical ground that this could not be done on motion. Thereupon he at once instituted the present action. The order of November, 1894, has not been acted upon in the meanwhile, and the position of the parties has not been changed. A comparison of the two cases of Stewart v. Kennedy shows that, after failing in an attempt to obtain a decision in his favour on a point of construction, it is competent for a man to institute an action to have the contract set aside.

For these reasons I think the appeals ought to be dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

Solicitors, Bower, Cotton, & Bower, for Ainsworth, Sanderson, & Howson, Blackburn; Robbins, Billing, & Co.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Chitty, L.JJ.) — June 28.

In re RUMNEY AND SMITH'S CONTRACT (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Building society—Mortgage—Power of sale—Sale by transferee.

A power of sale can only be exercised by the person designated for the purpose in the instrument which creates the power. Accordingly, in the case of a mortgage by a member of a building society to the trustees of the society which contained a power of sale limited to the trustees of the society,

Held, that the power in question could not be exercised by a transferee of the mortgage.

Whether a mortgage by a member to the trustees of a building society can be validly transferred by them to a stranger without the consent of the mortgagor, quære.

This was an appeal from a decision of Stirling, J., declaring that a vendor had not shown a good title to the premises comprised in a certain contract for sale.

The appeal raised two questions: First, whether a mortgage to a building society was transferable at all; and secondly, whether, assuming that such a mortgage was transferable, the power of sale could be exercised by the transferee.

By a mortgage dated the 2nd of October, 1877, Wm. Dawson, a member of the Wilts and Western Benefit Building Society, mortgaged to the trustees of the society certain houses to secure the sum of £200. The £200 was payable by instalments in the usual way, and the period of repayment was spread over about twenty-one years. The covenant to pay was to pay to the trustees or trustee for the time being of the society or to such other person or persons as should according to the rules of the society from time to time be authorized to receive the same. Then came a conveyance of the houses in question "to the trustees, their heirs and assigns, to hold unto and to the use of the trustees, their heirs and assigns." This was the only place in the deed where the word "assigns" occurred.

The conveyance was subject to a proviso for redemption on payment to the trustees or trustee for the time being of the said society or other the person or persons who, according to the rules of the society, should from time to time be authorized to receive the same.

Then came the power of sale, which was in the following terms: "Provided nevertheless that in case default shall be made in payment in manner hereinbefore provided and covenanted in that behalf of the said instalments or any of them or any part thereof respectively, or in case the mortgagor, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns shall fail to pay all or any of the fines or other moneys which shall become due or payable by him or them or to observe and keep all or any of the rules and regulations of the said society (of which several defaults or any of them the certificate of the chairman for the time being of the directors of the said society shall at all times be conclusive evidence), then at any time or times thereafter and whether any previous default shall have been waived or not it shall be lawful for the trustees or trustee for the time being of the said society without any further or other consent or authority from and notwithstanding the dissent of the mortgagor, his heirs or assigns absolutely to sell the mortgaged premises with their appurtenances or any part or parts thereof." And the receipt in writing of the trustees or trustee for the time being of the society or of the persons or person who for the time being should assume to act as such trustees or trustee was to be an effectual discharge to any purchaser.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In 1896 the society in whom the securities had become vested assigned the mortgage debt and securities to Mr. Rumney, the present appellant.

The mortgagor was no party to the assignment.

This assignment was never actually executed, but was treated as valid and subsisting.

At a sale by auction on the 26th of August, 1896, the appellant Rumney, on the assumption that he was the assignee of the mortgage debt and had the power to sell the property incidental to the security, contracted to sell the mortgaged premises to the respondent Smith.

An objection was taken that the power of sale was exercisable only by the trustees or trustee of the building society, and the matter having been brought before the court by a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, Stirling, J., without deciding anything as to the validity of the transfer, held that the objection was good on the ground that it was settled law that powers or trusts for sale could only be exercised by the person designated for the purpose in the instrument which created such trust or power.

The vendor appealed.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and E. Ford, for the appellant.—The case of the Ulster Building Society v. Glenton, 21 L. R. (Ir.) 124, 36 W. R. Dig. 27, is a direct decision in our favour. [LINDLEY, L.J.—I have been looking at the Ulster case, and there the mortgagor consented to the transfer.] There is nothing in the relationship between the mortgagor and the society to prevent the security being transferred, and it is convenient that it should be possible to transfer it. The only case at all against us is Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264, and no titles depend on that case. There is no case of a mortgage where it has been held that the assigns of the mortgagee cannot sell because they have not been named in the power of sale.

They also referred to Lord Cranworth's Act.

Buckley, Q.C., and Jolly, for the respondent, were not called on.

LINDLEY, L.J., stated the facts and continued: Now, two questions arise of some importance. The first question is, whether such an assignment as was made, or is to be treated as having been made, by this deed of 1896, without the consent of the mortgagor, is a valid assignment. I will not express a concluded opinion upon that question. It appears to me to be one which, when it arises, will deserve a great deal of consideration, because one cannot help seeing that the machinery of the Building Societies Act is not adapted to such an assignment at all; it will not work without a great deal of friction. As to the Irish case, to which Mr. Graham Hastings referred, Ulster Permanent Building Society v. Glenton, which appears to be an authority that an assignment is valid, I am struck by the observations of the learned judge, who treated the mortgagor as consenting and as bringing the whole thing about. Of course if the mortgagor consents there is no difficulty. I do not go so far as to say without further consideration that a mortgage debt owing to a building society cannot be assigned without the consent of the mortgagor. All I say is that it is a matter which appears to be fraught with difficulty, and will require a great deal of consideration before it is held that it can be assigned—of course I mean to a stranger who has nothing to do with the rules of the society, and cannot give the mortgagor the benefit which the building society can. I will do what Stirling, J., did, pass that by.

We have then to consider whether, if the debt was validly assigned, Mr. Rumney, the assignee, had power to sell. It appears from the authorities, which are plain, that he had not. It appears on the true construction of the mortgage deed that power of sale was only given to the trustees of the building society. I do not mean only the trustees who happened to be trustees at the date of the mortgage, because, no doubt, new trustees could have the security assigned to them and exercise the power of sale, but I do not think this power could be exercised by a person who has no connection with this society at all. In the case of Bradford v. Belfield, and others which followed and approved that case, it is shown that a power of this kind cannot be assigned, and it would be stretching the authorities, and, I think, making new law, if we held that a transferee of this debt could exercise the power. That is the short point on which Stirling, J., relied, and I think he was right.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the opinion that the decision of Stirling, J., is perfectly right. I have little to say after what has been said, and, indeed, I have little to say at all, because the point, in my mind, is a clear one and very short. The first thing one has to do is to look at the power as given in the deed. Now, the power given in the mortgage deed is to the trustees or trustee for the time being of the society, and there is no mention of assigns at all to be found. It appears, therefore, to me that the transferee of the mortgage, who is the plaintiff, cannot exercise any power of sale. With regard to the second point, which I understand to be this: whether if he was an assign under a valid transfer he could or could not sell—that is a point of great difficulty, and one upon which I do not desire to express any opinion on the present occasion. I think the decision of the learned judge was perfectly right.

CHITTY, L.J.—I think the decision of the learned judge was right. It is not necessary to decide whether such a mortgage as this is capable of being transferred at all. There are, as appeared during the course of the argument, many objections which, however, might on further consideration be got over. The principal ground of the objection is the greater burthen which a transfer of this security would impose upon the mortgagor with regard, for instance, to the payment of costs of transfers and other matters of that kind; and, indeed, reading the written deed through carefully, there are other objections which I do not stay to point out. I have not formed any concluded opinion, and it is not necessary that I should do so. With regard to the question whether this power of sale was transferable it has already been pointed out that the power is limited to the trustees or trustee for the time being of the society. It is quite plain that new trustees of the society could exercise the power, but there is no mention of assigns in this part of the deed itself. That, of course, is not fatal, because the rest of the deed might show with sufficient clearness that it was intended it should be transferable. Primâ facie a debt is transferable, but the power is not primâ facie transferable. On the contrary, the old cases show that there must be some words of limitation which on a fair and proper construction of the whole instrument show the intention that the power should be exercised by some other person than the person mentioned.

We have now become so accustomed by virtue of improved conveyancing and by reason of the statutes to find a power of sale accompanying a mortgage debt that there is a danger of assuming that as part of the general law. No doubt the statutes made it quite plain, and all the conveyances in years past have made it perfectly plain. But the power for one man to sell another's estate is primâ facie power given to that man and that man only. So much so that even his survivors have been held not to be entitled to sell. With regard to this as a whole—and I express my opinion not simply by reason of the omission of the words "assignment of the power," but, reading the whole deed—I think it was not intended that this power of sale should be exercised by any person other than the person specifically designated in the power of sale.

LINDLEY, L.J.—The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, Howard Rumney, for Mann & Rodway; Moon, Gilks, & Moon.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) June 2.

HARRIS v. SLEEP. (a.)

Receiver and manager—Salary—Allowances—Services rendered for benefit of estate outside the duty of a receiver.

On a dissolution of partnership one of the partners was appointed by the court receiver and manager without salary. He carried on the business successfully, and ultimately purchased it under an order of the court. He, during the continuance of the business, being a skilled mechanic, did work as an ordinary workman and included in his accounts an item of £2 per week for services rendered by himself as a workman.

Held (reversing Kekewich, J.), that though the receiver and manager had committed a technical irregularity in not asking for wages at the time of his appointment, yet he was entitled to be paid for work done by him for the benefit of the estate, to do which was no part of his duty. The allowance of £2 per week was therefore allowed.

Appeal of the defendant from a decision of Kekewich, J. (reported on another point, ante, p. 536).

The defendant in an action for dissolution of partnership was appointed receiver and manager of the business, he being a partner, without salary. He carried on the business very successfully, and ultimately purchased it at a valuation pursuant to an order of the 26th of October, 1893. At the time the defendant took over the management of the business it was heavily in debt, and at the time of the purchase there was more than enough money to pay all the debts. The defendant in his accounts included in the workmen's wages a sum of £2 per week for work done by himself as an ordinary workman.

Kekewich, J., disallowed this claim on the ground that the defendant was in a fiduciary position and could not employ himself.

The defendant appealed.

Warmington, Q.C., and M. L. Romer, for the appellant.—Potts v. Leighton, 15 Ves. 273, and Malcolm v. O'Callaghan, 3 My. & Cr. 52, show the principle on which the court acts. It was no part of the receiver's duty to work as a common workman, and if he did so he is entitled to remuneration for it. Bristowe v. Needham, 2 Ph. 190, decided that if a receiver takes proceedings on behalf of the estate and is successful he is entitled to his expenses, but not otherwise.

Renshaw, Q.C., and F. Thompson, for the respondents.—In any case the allowance of £2 per week is too great. The defendant was in a fiduciary position, and his duty and his interest would clash. They referred to In re Ormsby, 1 Ball & B. 189, and Burden v. Burden, 1 V. & B. 170.

LINDLEY, L.J.—The appellant committed a technial irregularity in not asking, when he was appointed receiver and manager, that wages might be allowed him for services rendered by him as a workman. There were two partners in the business. Each of them received £2 a week for his services, their departments being different. The partnership has been dissolved by the court. The appellant was appointed receiver and manager without salary. He was a practical man skilled in vicework and forgework. He has acted as receiver and manager, and has throughout worked with his own hands at forgework and vicework, which he was accustomed to do during the continuance of the partnership; and for this extra work, which it was no part of his duty as receiver and manager to perform, he now asks to be paid. He has carried on the business successfully, and, though it was in an unsound state at the time of the order for dissolution, it has been sold for a sum more than sufficient to pay all the creditors in full, and it is now said that he ought not to be remunerated for his services as a workman; for that it is without precedent that a receiver and manager should be allowed any remuneration for services rendered by him unless he asks for it at the time of his appointment. If he does not ask for it then he runs a great risk of not getting it; but the court, when the circumstances are brought before it, will see that what is right is done. I think that this appeal should be allowed, but as the appellant is technically in fault, the costs will come out of the estate.

LOPES, L.J.—The appellant has done valuable work, which he was not bound to do, and which has resulted in benefit to the business. I think that he ought to be allowed some remuneration for his services, and ought not to be deprived of it because he did not ask for it on his appointment. In my opinion the appeal ought to be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I cannot agree that the position of a trustee is the same as that of a receiver and manager. As a general rule, a trustee, with very few exceptions, will not be allowed a commission for work which he is not bound to do. Here a business was carried on by two partners, one of whom attended to the book-keeping, and the other superintended and assisted in the manual part of the business. The partnership was dissolved by the court. One partner is appointed receiver and manager and agrees to act without salary; but I doubt whether it occurred to anyone that if he worked as a mechanic in the workshop he should not be paid for the actual work done. Of course, technically he ought to have asked, when he was appointed receiver and manager, that his weekly wages might be allowed him, and he thereby ran a great risk of not getting anything. A receiver in the ordinary course has a commission by way of poundage; but it is the practice of the court to make allowances for extraordinary services. In Potts v. Leighton a receiver, who was by his own default deprived of his salary, was held not to be thereby disentitled to an allowance for services rendered. That furnishes a better guide than the strict rule as to trustees.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Robbins, Billing, & Co.; Law & Worsam.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Chitty, L.JJ.) — May 24.

MACAULAY v. POLLEY. (a.)

Solicitor—Authority—Compromising claim before action brought.

A solicitor, who is instructed by a client to make a claim on a third person for compensation for personal injuries, has no authority, in the absence of express directions, to effect a compromise before action brought, so as to preclude his client from bringing an action.

Appeal from an order of Grantham, J., at chambers.

The plaintiff, having sustained personal injuries through the default of the defendant, instructed a solicitor to make a claim on the defendant for compensation.

The solicitor, before action brought, agreed with the defendant to accept the sum of fifteen guineas in settlement of the claim. This sum was accordingly paid by the defendant to the solicitor, but without the plaintiff's consent.

The plaintiff then brought this action, and the defendant thereupon applied for a stay of proceedings on the ground that the plaintiff's claim had been satisfied.

The learned judge dismissed the application, and the defendant appealed.

Lynch, for the defendant, referred to Fray v. Voules, 7 W. R. 446, 1 E. & E. 839; and Chowne v. Parratt, 11 W. R. 668, 14 C. B. N. S. 74.

C. E. Jones, for the plaintiff.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case before action brought the plaintiff's solicitor arranged a compromise with the defendant and accepted a sum of money from him. There is no evidence that the plaintiff instructed the solicitor to do this. It was held by Willes, J., in Duffy v. Hanson, 16 L. T. Rep. 332, that under such circumstances a solicitor was not authorised to make a compromise. I adopt that view, and I think that this compromise was not binding on the plaintiff. The appeal must be dismissed.

A. L. SMITH and CHITTY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, James Gray.

Solicitors for the defendant, Hillearys.

From Q. B. Div. (Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — May 18, 19, 20.

IMRAY v. OAKSHETTE. (b.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Breach of covenant not to sub-let—Forfeiture—Relief—Protection of under-lessee—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 4.

The court has jurisdiction under section 4 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892, to grant relief to an under-lessee on forfeiture of the superior lease by the lessee, even where the forfeiture has been incurred by reason of the breach of a covenant not to assign without licence, against which breach no relief could have been obtained under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. But such relief will only be granted where the under-lessee can prove that he is blameless and has exercised all precautions which a reasonable, cautious, and careful person would use.

L. became assignee of a sub-lease of a term of twenty-one years less twelve days; the original lease contained a covenant not to assign or sub-let without consent. The sub-lease was made without consent, but L. had no actual notice of the covenant, and his contract did not give him a right to call for the title of the original lessee. L. laid out a large sum of money on the property.

Held, that L. was guilty of negligence in precluding himself from investigating his lessor's title, and was not entitled to relief against forfeiture incurred by the lessee through breach of covenant.

Appeal of a defendant, Lyons, from Day, J., at chambers, who refused relief against a forfeiture of a lease.

By indenture dated the 23rd of May, 1894, the plaintiffs demised certain premises in Walworth to the defendant Mrs. Oakshette for a term of twenty-one years from the 29th of September, 1893, at a yearly rent of £160. The lease contained a covenent by the lessee not to assign or sub-let the premises or any part thereof for more than three years without the consent in writing of the lessors, with a forfeiture clause on non-compliance with the covenant.

By various under-leases, the original one by Mrs. Oakshette being without licence, the underlease of one messuage became vested in the defendant Lyons, who entered into possession and spent a large sum of money on the house. He had no right to call for Mrs. Oakshette's lease, and said he always regarded her as the superior landlord.

By indenture dated the 3rd of September, 1896, Mrs. Oakshette assigned all her interest in her original lease to the defendant Hurlock.

In March, 1897, the plaintiffs commenced this action against Mrs. Oakshette, Hurlock, Lyons, and another to recover possession of all the property alleged to be forfeited through the under-leases granted without licence.

Lyons then took out a summons asking to be relieved from the forfeiture so far as it affected the subject-matter of his under-lease, and that the property might be vested in him for the residue of the term freed from the covenants contained in the original lease of May, 1894, but subject to the rent of £80 which he had agreed to pay.

Day, J., dismissed the summons, being of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to make the order, but gave leave to appeal.

The defendant Lyons appealed.

Buckmaster, for the appellant.—Under section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, where a lessor is endeavouring to enforce a right of re-entry or forfeiture under any covenant in a lease, the court may on the application of any under-lessee make an order vesting for the whole term of the lease or any less term the property comprised in the lease or any part thereof in such under-lessee on such conditions as the court shall think fit. There is nothing in these words to except from the operation of the section forfeiture for breach of covenant not to assign. Cholmeley School

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(b.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

v. Sewell, [1894] 2 Q. B. 906, shews that sub-section 6 of section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, applies only to head-leases, and under-leases are excepted. In this case the under-lessee was quite ignorant of any breach having been committed.

Duke, for the respondent.—The two Conveyancing Acts must be read together, and neither lessee nor under-lessee can get any relief from forfeiture incurred through breach of covenant not to assign without licence. Were it otherwise, the under-lessee would be in a better position than the lessee.

T. W. Chitty and Morten, for Hurlock. [By the COURT.—You have no locus standi.]

Buckmaster, in reply.—Lyons is willing to take an assignment of the whole property, which he can do under section 4 of the Act of 1892. If the plaintiffs do not agree to this, they will take the benefit of the money which Lyons has expended on the property without repaying him. Lyons had constructive notice of the defect, but that will not disentitle him to relief.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 20.—LOPES, L.J.—This is a case of some importance involving the question of the jurisdiction of the court to grant relief against forfeiture to an under-lessee where the breach of covenant is assigning without consent, and the terms upon which such relief should be granted, if there is jurisdiction to grant it. Lewis Lyons, an under-lessee, applied to be relieved from a forfeiture incurred by the original lessee in consequence of a breach of a covenant not to assign without the consent of the superior lessor. That the lessee had forfeited his lease was not disputed, but it was contended that the court could grant no relief to an under-lessee where the breach of covenant creating the forfeiture was the breach of a covenant not to assign.

The question of jurisdiction depends on the construction to be placed on section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and the fourth section of the Amending Act, 1892. The relief given against forfeiture by section 14 of the Act of 1881 does not extend (sub-section 6) "to a covenant or condition against the assigning under-letting parting with the possession or disposing of the land leased." The lessee, therefore, can obtain no relief in such a case. The case of an under-lessee is not provided for by the Act of 1881 at all, and the under-lessee, so far as the Act of 1881 is concerned, can obtain no relief. It was, I presume, considered a hardship on the under-lessee, when he is not a party to any breach of covenant by the lessee (his lessor), and, if under-lessee of a part of the property, when he has done all that his lessor ought to have done, that he should be deprived of his property by reason of a forfeiture incurred by his lessor. Accordingly, section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, gave power to the court to protect under-lessees on forfeiture by their lessors. [His lordship read that section, and proceeded:] Section 1 of this Act said the Act was to be read as one with the Conveyancing Acts, 1881 and 1882. Mr. Duke's contention is that the effect of this is that the exclusion from section 14 of the Act of 1881 of breach of covenant from assigning without consent is incorporated with section 4 of the Act of 1892, and that the under-lessee in respect of such covenants is in the same position as the lessee—that, in effect, all the Act of 1892 does is to place the under-lessee in the same position as the lessee, and that neither can get any relief in respect of such covenants. I was at first very much attracted by this argument, but on consideration I do not think that the Acts of Parliament in question can be so construed, when the very general words of section 4 are carefully regarded. Sub-section 6 of section 14 of the Act of 1881 applies to lessees and lessees only. Section 4 of the Act of 1892 is dealing with under-lessees, different persons with different interests; and unless there are clear words indicating that the same restriction was to be imposed upon them as upon lessees under the earlier Act, I should be unwilling to imply it. Indeed, it seems to me that there are grounds for different treatment. There is a privity between lessor and lessee which does not in ordinary cases exist between lessor and an under-lessee; the one would have express notice, while the other might have no notice of the covenant not to assign, which he was breaking. If we were to read into the Act of 1881 section 4 of the Act of 1892, it would be convenient to place section 4 of the later Act after section 14 of the former Act, and I do not see how the restrictions contained in sub-section 6 of section 14 could be carried on to and imported into section 4 placed as I have suggested. In direct antithesis to the limitation contained in sub-section 6 of section 14 we are met by the very general words "where a lessor is proceeding by action or otherwise to enforce a right of re-entry or forfeiture under any covenant, proviso, or stipulation in a lease."

It was urged by Mr. Duke that in thus construing the Act we were placing the under-lessee in a better position than the lessee. This matter is so well dealt with by Charles, J., in The Wardens of Cholmeley School v. Sewell, [1894] 2 Q. B. 906, at p. 911), that I shall venture to read from his judgment. [His lordship read that page, and continued:] I come, therefore, to the conclusion that the court has clearly jurisdiction.

Assuming the jurisdiction, ought relief to be granted to the under-lessee in this case? It is a relief which ought to be given with caution and sparingly. It is exceptional. It could not be given to the lessee. It materially affects the interests of lessor and lessee. Before asking for it the under-lessee ought to be in a position to prove that he is blameless and exercised all those precautions which a reasonable, cautious, and careful person would use. Here the under-lessee became assignee of a term of twenty-one years, less twelve days, with a covenant not to assign without consent, and he was about to spend £500 on the property. This ought to have put him on inquiry: Patman v. Harland, 29 W. R. 707, 17 Ch. D. 353. Mr. Buckmaster admits that the under-lessee had constructive notice of a defect in the title. If the under-lessee had investigated the title he would have found the restrictive covenant, and then would not have spent his money without obtaining the necessary consent. What has happened arises from the neglect of the under-lessee; and in these circumstances I do not think we ought to grant him grant him the relief he asks. The granting this relief is a matter of discretion.

The appeal is dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Two main questions have to be decided. First of all, the true construction of the Conveyancing Acts, treating the Act of 1892 as one with that of 1881. That may be said to be the main question. Upon that I have arrived at a clear conclusion on the lines of the judgment of Charles, J., already referred to. I will say a few words from my own point of view on the different sections. There is no important question of construction raised here for the first time on the Act of 1881. It is a question, mainly, as to the meaning of section 4 of the Act of 1892 read as part of the Act of 1881.

Now, Mr. Duke urged everything that possibly could be said on that side, that we ought to treat section 4 as a section amending section 14. I think there was an insurmountable difficulty in the way of the success of that argument. Look at the Act of 1892. It is dealing, of course, in this part of it, with under-leases and forfeiture; and there are different clauses, and the sub-section in section 2 is an obvious amendment of section 14. Sub-section 2 of that section 2 says: "Sub-section 6 of section 14 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, is to apply to a condition for forfeiture, on bankruptcy of the lessee or on taking in execution of the lessee's interest, only after the expiration of one year from the date of the bankruptcy, or taking in execution, and provided the lessee's interest be not sold within such one year, but in case the lessee's interest be sold within such one year, sub-section 6 shall cease to be applicable thereto." The precise meaning of that it is not necessary to go into here, because it is not involved in this case; but it obviously intended to change the law as between an original lessor and original lessee, and is therefore appropriately treated as amending section 14 of the Act of 1881. Then there is a further amendment which I do not need to notice, and then we leave, as it seems to me, section 14 altogether.

The Legislature having introduced by section 2 some such amendment as was thought necessary for section 14, goes on to enact in section 3, "In all leases containing a covenant, condition, or agreement against assigning, underletting, or parting with the possession, or disposing of the land or property leased without licence or consent, such covenant, condition, or agreement shall, unless the lease contains an expressed provision to the contrary, be deemed to be subject to a proviso to the effect that no fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine shall be payable for or in respect of such licence or consent; but this proviso shall not preclude the right to require the payment of a reasonable sum in respect of any legal or other expense incurred in relation to such licence or consent." That is something going outside and beyond anything that was contained in section 14. It could not, by any reasonable intendment, be treated as an amendment of section 14. Then we come to the critical section—section 4. It would have been perfectly easy, if it had been intended, to have included that provision in the earlier section 2. The fact that it was not introduced there seems to me rather a strong argument for treating it, in point of verbal construction (which is all that I am talking about now), as an independent section, just as section 3 is an independent section. That is very much confirmed when we find this clause introduced by exactly the same sort of language as that which introduced sub-section 2 of section 14: "Where a lessor is proceeding by action or otherwise to enforce a right of re-entry or forfeiture under any covenant, proviso, or stipulation," and so on. That looks as though it was a parallel section and not an amending section. When we consider the nature of it I think that comes out clearly. There may be cases, no doubt, in which an under-lessee ought, for all purposes, to be considered as in the same position as the original lessee; but there may be cases even with regard to a covenant not to assign, as to which there is no jurisdiction to give relief to the original lessee, in which it would be reasonable to give relief to the under-lessee. I will take as an instance in support of the argument a possible, but not very probable case, where a covenant against assigning without consent was contained in a separate deed, and not referred to in the original lease. As between original lessor and original lessee it would not make the slightest difference; but the under-lessee would not have constructive notice of the covenant at all. If he looked at the original lease itself (I am assuming there is no reference in that to the collateral covenant) he would have no notice at all. So by the act or omission of the original lessor, the under-lessee is placed in a position of difficulty, for he could not by any means get at that collateral deed. I think that is a case which the Legislature contemplated, and there may be other cases where it would be hard upon the under-lessee to treat him as though he were a party to the covenant which he would not have the chance of even ascertaining the existence of if he examined the title ever so closely. I think it is reasonable to suppose, to provide for cases of that kind, the Legislature chose to give the High Court of Justice the very wide discretion which is contained in section 4. I come to the conclusion that section 4 was deliberately intended to be a parallel section, and that the discretion given to the court does involve a power (in very exceptional cases, I agree) to give relief to an under-lessee, even though it might be a case of a breach of a covenant not to assign. But how is that discretion given to the court to be exercised? Not as though by express language the courts were told by the Legislature not to take any notice of the previous legislation. I think it is the duty of the court to consider that previous legislation most carefully, and to take care that they do not indirectly, by the exercise of the discretion given to them, do away with that which was a clear intention in the case of the Act of 1881, to withdraw from the court all discretion as between original lessor and original lessee when the forfeiture arose from breach of covenant not to assign without consent. We have, therefore, to consider that one of the cardinal features of the Act of 1881 was that the lessee shall not have relief against breach of the covenant not to assign. What was the intention of the Legislature in so enacting, I cannot say; it might be suggested to be owing to the wilful nature of the act. That will not do. There are other cases of wilful breach of covenant against which the court has discretion as to granting relief. It may be, and possibly is, partly because of the irreparable nature of the act. In the other cases you would place the lessor and lessee in precisely the same position in all respects as they were. In the case of a breach of covenant not to assign, that cannot be done. If you give relief to the lessee there, you cannot place the parties in precisely the same position. You may place them in as good a position—that is for the consideration of the court. At any rate, the Acts of Parliament exclude that question as between lessor and lessee. For my part I see great difficulty in imagining any case under section 4 where it would be right to give relief unless it was founded upon some act or omission of the lessee; but I do not lay that down as a rule. When a wide discretion is given to the court, it certainly ought not to be the business of the court immediately to begin to lay down rules to regulate it.

Now, coming to this case, what is the position of the under-lessee? He buys according to the form of contract which is prescribed by the Conveyancing Act of 1881. That was a continuance of the policy of the Vendor and Purchaser Act. It only comes to this: Where there is no provision to the contrary, where the parties do not choose to make a different bargain, they shall be presumed to have bargained on the terms mentioned in the Act. It does not say, and it was impossible to suppose that the Legislature ever intended that an under-lessee should not be affected by any defect of title of the original owner, because the original lessor might have never had any interest in the property. It was only intended to form a model for a contract when the parties did not think fit to depart from it. And in the ordinary case of a lease for occupation purposes the probability is that they would not depart from it. It was intended to remedy a mischief that arose when a man had agreed to take an under-lease and he wanted to get off his bargain, and therefore began to harass his lessor by requiring him to give information as to title which he could not give. But, as pointed out by the late Master of the Rolls in the case already referred to, Patman v. Harland, that is reasonable where a man is merely taking an occupation lease; but if he is intending to spend money on the premises—for instance, a building lease for 1,000 years, would it be rational or reasonable in him to adopt that statutory form of contract? The answer is, No. He ought to say, "Notwithstanding that statute, I must have a reasonable production of the documents relating to the whole title." Now in this case the statutory form of contract was adopted; that is just the same as though the under-lessee had said, "I will not ask about the title"; but of course he has constructive notice of everything he could have arrived at in the proper way by consulting the title, if he had acted reasonably. A man cannot say by shutting his eyes, "I did not see, and therefore I am not to be bound by such-and-such a defect." Constructive notice differs, no doubt, from express notice in the way in which it arises. But what is the meaning of it? You have constructive notice when you ought to be treated as though you had express notice. If there is constructive notice, it is exactly the same thing as express notice for any purpose we have to deal with. Here is a gentleman proposing to take an under-lease and bargaining that he would not investigate the title, and saying, "I am content to run the risk; and although I am going to spend money I will not inquire into the superior title; I will take my chance of that." I think I might stop there and say there is no case.

But many other things have been referred to here. The first thing that this lessee would know of the title would be that Mrs. Oakshette granted a lease for twenty-one years, less ten days, to Adams. Adams assigned or underlet to Muspratt, and Muspratt to the present applicant. Everyone acquainted with conveyancing knows that that would point strongly to the fact that Mrs. Oakshette, the lessor, was not the freeholder. People do not create terms for twenty-one years, less ten days, unless there be a superior lease. Mr. Buckmaster pointed out that the rent was to be paid to the heirs. That might be, as far as it went, likely to throw off the under-lessee from inquiry; but something in the opposite direction was pointed out by the length of the term itself. I do not go into this carefully because I think no representation made by the lessee could bind the original lessor unless he was to blame in some way for allowing it to be made. The conclusion which ought to have been arrived at, would be that it was a very carelessly drawn lease, and not much reliance could be placed upon the precise terms of it. At any rate it was by reason of the trustfulness of this under-lessee that he did not find out the terms of the original lease. I can see no conceivable reason here for giving him the relief he asks for.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Harris & Chetham; Gush, Phillips, Walters, & Williams; Morten, Outler, & Co.

From Q. B. Div. (Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — May 19.

SOUTHPORT TRAMWAYS CO. v. GANDY. (a.)

Practice—Writ—Specially-indorsed writ—Recovery of land and mesne profits—Ord. 3, r. 6—Ord. 14, r. 1—Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 214.

The plaintiffs issued a specially-indorsed writ under ord. 3, r. 6, claiming possession of certain lands held over by the defendant, who had been tenant to the plaintiffs, after the termination of his tenancy, and £80 for mesne profits. On an application under ord. 14, r. 1, for leave to sign final judgment for £80 and for possession, the accompanying affidavit stated that the £80 was claimed as double value for six months in consequence of the defendant having refused to deliver up possession.

Kennedy, J., gave the requisite leave and directed mesne profits "to be calculated up to the date of the plaintiffs obtaining possession."

Held (affirming Kennedy, J.), that, notwithstanding the terms of the affidavit, the writ was specially-indorsed so as to bring it within order 14, and that the learned judge had jurisdiction to make the order giving mesne profits up to the time of possession being obtained.

A specially-indorsed writ was issued claiming possession of certain premises at Southport. The particulars described the property and stated that the defendant had been tenant to the plaintiffs and that his tenancy had expired by notice on the 23rd of March, 1897. The plaintiffs claimed "possession and £80 mesne profits."

The affidavit in support of an application to sign final judgment under ord. 14, r. 1, stated that £80 was claimed for mesne profits in respect of the premises in consequence of the defendant having refused to quit and deliver up possession, such sum being six months' rent at double value from the 23rd of March, 1897.

Kennedy, J., gave leave to sign final judgment for possession of the premises "and for mesne profits, to be calculated up to the date of the plaintiffs obtaining possession." He also gave leave to appeal.

The defendant appealed and asked that the order might be set aside, or part of it, and that he might have unconditional leave to defend.

Scrutton, for the appellant.—The double value here claimed is a penalty and ord. 3, r. 6 (c) does not authorize a specially-indorsed writ for such a purpose. The action is brought under 4 Geo. II. c. 28. Ord 14, r. 1 (b), describes the proper procedure which the judge should have followed. A second action should have been brought to recover the mesne profits.

T. Shepherd Little, for the plaintiffs.—Ord. 3, r. 6, is divided into two parts, (1) liquidated demands; (2) unliquidated damages in the nature of mesne profits. Appendix C., s. 7, gives a form of claim for possession of land and mesne profits, and that was the form adopted here. It is not the judge's duty to put the plaintiffs to the expense of a second action for the recovery of mesne profits.

Scrutton replied.

LOPES, L.J.—In my opinion the order appealed from is perfectly good. The first objection taken to it is that the writ is not a specially-indorsed writ so as to bring it within order 14. I have not the slightest doubt that it is a perfectly good writ for the recovery of the land and mesne profits. That is perfectly correct. The plaintiffs might have put in a claim for any amount they thought fit for mesne profits. They might have said £10,000, and the claim, although exorbitant, would not have effected the validity of the writ. It is said that the plaintiffs have filed an affidavit from which it appears that their claim was not made for mesne profits, but for a penalty—viz., double value for holding over, and so was not within ord. 3, r. 6; but that affidavit in no way invalidates the writ, and the order which the learned judge has made is perfectly within the terms of the writ, being an order for possession and mesne profits up to the time of the plaintiffs obtaining possession.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Then it is urged that he had no jurisdiction to give mesne profits up to that time, and that he could only give them up to the date of his order. But the defendant had written a letter to say that he would not go out of possession, and that possession was nine points of the law. The learned judge saw that it was impossible to tell when the defendant would give up possession, and that it would be useless to give mesne profits only up to the time of his order. The learned judge in my opinion was quite right in giving mesne profits up to the time of possession being obtained.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The only difficulty which I felt on the first point was owing to my want of knowledge of the practice in these cases. I did not know whether it was not incumbent on the plaintiffs to state in the writ the amount they were prepared to stand by. But it was admitted that there was no rule or practice to that effect, and I take it that even if an exaggerated amount is claimed, it will not make the writ bad. The writ, then, is perfectly good. I give no opinion upon the question whether double value for six months might have been recovered in this form of proceeding; it was not claimed by the writ, and therefore does not come in question. In these days no judge is bound to go back and trace out the origin of his jurisdiction. He finds that he has jurisdiction to make an order for recovery of the land and payment of mesne profits, and he was quite right in making an order for the payment of mesne profits till the time when the plaintiffs obtain possession. It would have been wrong to drive the plaintiffs to bring a second action.

The appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, F. A. Rudall; Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) } May 24, 25, 27; June 3.

DALTON v. FITZGERALD. (a.)

Estoppel—Settlement of land by grantor having no title—Acquisition of possessory title by tenant for life—Rights of remaindermen—Statute of Limitations—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 34.

A. obtained in 1867 possession of land under a settlement made in 1842 whereby an estate was limited to him for life, with remainder over. The settlor had no title to the land in question.

Held, that A., and those claiming through A., were estopped from setting up as against the remaindermen any title adverse to the deed of settlement—e.g., a title by possession under the Statutes of Limitation.

Hawksbee v. Hawksbee, 11 Hare. 230, and Board v. Board, 22 W. R. 206, L. R. 9 Q. B. 48, approved and adopted.

Appeal of the defendants from a decision of Stirling, J. (reported [1897] 1 Ch. 440).

The facts sufficiently appear from the written judgment of Lindley, L.J.

Elton, Q.C., Buckley, Q.C., and Carson, for the appellants.—These lands can under no circumstances fall within the settlement of 1842. It conferred no beneficial interest on anybody other than what the will of John Dalton gave, and there was obviously a mistake. John Dalton at the date of his death left two co-heiresses, his daughters Elizabeth and Lucy. Lucy, who was a married woman, executed the deed, but it was never acknowledged, and was therefore inoperative. Elizabeth could only deal with her own moiety; she intended the trustees to grant the lands in ignorance of her rights, and this cannot operate as an estoppel: Carpenter v. Buller, 8 M. & W. 209; Shelford's Real Property Statutes, 9th ed., p. 258. There are two classes of cases: (1) where a testator without title makes an effective devise assuming a good title: Board v. Board, 22 W. R. 206, L. R. 9 Q. B. 48; Hawksbee v. Hawksbee, 11 Hare, 230; (2) where a testator having a good title makes an ineffective devise: Paine v. Jones, 22 W. R. 837, L. R. 18 Eq. 320, and In re Stringer's Estate, 25 W. R. 815, 6 Ch. D. 1. This case falls within the second class. [They also referred to Kernaghan v. M'Nally, 12 Ir. Ch. Rep. 89; Scott v. Nixon, 3 Dru. & Warr. 388.] Kernaghan v. M'Nally was supposed to apply the principles of other cases, but it was a misapplication of principles, and the arguments which showed them to be right showed that case to be wrong.

Hastings, Q.C., and Prior, for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 3.—LINDLEY, L.J.—The question raised by this appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to eject the defendants from certain lands in Bulk in the county of Lancaster. In 1894 Sir Gerald Fitzgerald died, seised and in possession of the lands in question. The plaintiff says that Sir Gerald was tenant for life only under a deed of 1842, and the plaintiff claims as entitled in remainder under the same deed. The defendants say that, although Sir Gerald entered upon and enjoyed the lands as tenant for life only, and believed himself to be so, yet that this was a mistake, and that when he died he was really tenant in fee, and that he devised the lands to the defendants on certain trusts. On his death they entered on the lands, claiming to be entitled to do so as the trustees of his will, and in that character and under that title they defend this action. The defendants, however, further contend that, even if they have no title, they are in possession, and that the plaintiff has no title, and cannot therefore eject them. Stirling, J., decided in favour of the plaintiff. I will first examine the question of title. The right of the plaintiff to eject the defendants will then be easily disposed of.

Under John Dalton's will of 1828 the lands in question, if comprised in it, would in 1842 have been vested in trustees upon trust to convey them to the persons then equitably entitled to them under the limitations contained in the will. It was contended by the defendants, and I will assume correctly, that the lands in question did not pass by this will. It is tolerably plain that everyone interested in the will thought that the lands were comprised therein. In 1842 the trustees of the will, acting, as they and everyone else supposed, in conformity therewith, conveyed the legal estate in the lands comprised in the will, and also, in express terms, the lands in Bulk which are now in question, to the persons who would have been equitably entitled to them if they had passed by the will. The daughters and co-heiresses of the testator, to whom, according to the defendants, these lands had descended, were parties to this conveyance, but they were not conveying parties, nor did the daughter who was then married acknowledge the deed under the Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Under the deed of 1842 the lands in question were conveyed so that, in the events which have happened, they legally vested according to the deed (1) in the testator's two daughters and co-heiresses for their lives; (2) in the testator's nephew, Sir James Fitzgerald, for life; (3) in Sir Gerald Fitzgerald for life; (4) in the plaintiff for life. The surviving daughter and co-heiress died in 1861, and Sir James Fitzgerald then entered into possession as tenant for life. He died in 1867, and then Sir Gerald Fitzgerald took possession as tenant for life, and he died in February, 1894. Shortly before his death, however, he seems to have been advised that the lands in question had not passed under the will of 1828, and that the deed of 1842 was inoperative as to them, and on the 3rd of January, 1894, he procured himself to be registered under the Land Transfer Act of 1875 as owner in fee in possession. He did this without notice to anyone interested in disputing his claim. He left a will or codicil devising these lands to the defendants upon certain trusts, and they claim the lands accordingly. The fact that Sir James Fitzgerald, and after him Sir Gerald Fitzgerald, took and held possession as tenants for life under the deed of 1842, and not otherwise, is conclusively proved by the numerous dealings with those estates by them in their lifetimes. It is not necessary to refer to them at length.

Now, it is contended by the defendants that, if the lands in question were not comprised in the will of 1828, the deed of 1842 was inoperative as a conveyance of them, and that Sir Gerald Fitzgerald acquired a good title to these lands by the Statute of Limitations, and that he was entitled, and that the defendants as his devisees are entitled to set up the title so acquired against the plaintiff, who claims the lands in remainder under the deed of 1842. This contention is really based on a misconception of section 34 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, which extinguishes the right and title of the person against whom the statute has run. That section does not confer a statutory title against everybody upon the person in whose favour the statute has run, although it does as against those persons whose rights are barred by the statute. This was pointed out by Martin, B., in Anstee v. Nelms, 4 W. R. 612, 1 H. & N. 225, at p. 232, when he said that "the Statute of Limitations can never be so construed that a person claiming a life estate under a will shall enter, and then say that such possession was unlawful, so as to give his heir a right against the remainderman." This was approved as good sense and good law in Board v. Board. The misconception as to the effect of the statute is extremely well put in the following passage in Pollock and Wright on Possession, at p. 95: "It would be possible at first sight to suppose that, as between a succession of independent occupiers who were all wrongdoers as against the true owner, the law must be indifferent, with the result of conferring an absolute title upon the person who happens to be in possession when the time of limitation expires. Reflection, however, shows this to be contrary to the reason and principles of the law. Possession being once admitted to be a root of title, every possession must create a title which, as against all subsequent intruders, has all the incidents and advantages of a true title. William is the possessor and apparent owner of a house; in that house he dies; we will suppose him to die intestate. John, wrongly supposing himself to be entitled as the heir of William, enters and occupies the house. Peter is really William's heir, but ignorant of the facts; in course of time, having obtained information and advice, he sues John. It turns out that William had disseised Giles the true owner, by mere encroachment or in some other way, and would have had no answer to an action brought by Giles or his assigns to recover the land. But since William's death the period of limitation has expired, and the right of Giles is extinguished. Can John use this as a defence against Peter? No; for the statute has nothing to say, for better or worse, about the person in actual possession, or the relative worth of the qualified rights to possess which may have arisen while time was running against the true owner. It says that Giles, and those who have, or would have had, his estate, shall not from henceforth sue any one; it does not say that Peter shall not sue John. Whether some one has a higher title or not, Peter has a better title than John, as he would have had though the true owner's claim were still enforceable. In the language of the modern authorities, 'possession is good title'—nothing less—'against all but the true owner.'"

When the authorities are examined they are all in favour of the plaintiff; none really support the defendants' contention. Board v. Board is, in my opinion, clearly in point, and clearly right. Whether Kernaghan v. M'Nally did not go too far it is not necessary to consider. I have great difficulty in reconciling it with Sir E. Sugden's previous decision in Scott v. Nixon. Paine v. Jones is intelligible having regard to the facts of that case. The widow, who had entered as tenant for life under a will which did not pass the lands in question, was allowed by the court (under circumstances which do not appear) to exclude them from a conveyance to new trustees, and she was allowed to keep possession of them after it had been ascertained that she had no right to them. But I am not satisfied of the soundness of the distinction drawn by Malins, V.C., between cases of persons having no title under a will because it does not purport to include the lands they claim, although they believe that it does, and persons claiming under a will which purports to deal with land to which the testator has no title, although he thought he had. No doubt a person may by mistake treat himself as tenant for life of property of which he is himself the owner, and such a mistake can be set right unless he has so acted as to render a rectification of the mistake unjust to others. But the distinction drawn by the Vice-Chancellor, although it would include such a case, goes much further, and unless restricted it seems to me likely to lead to error. That case, which is the one principally relied upon by the defendants, is not really an authority for them, owing to its peculiar facts. Nor is the passage read from Sir G. Jessel's judgment in In re Stringer. What he was objecting to (6 Ch. D., p. 10) was the extension of the doctrine of estoppel to tenants for life who do not dispute their testator's title, but who do dispute the legal validity of their dispositions of property which was their own. It appears to me clear that Sir Gerald Fitzgerald never acquired a legal title to these lands by the Statute of Limitations as against the plaintiff, and that as between them the deed of 1842 regulates their rights. The defendants, as Sir Gerald's devisees, are in no better position than he was, and, so far as title is concerned, the plaintiff is entitled to the lands in question for life under the above deed. I pass now to the defendant's contention that, being in possession it matters not by what title, and that it is sufficient to show that the lands did not vest in the trustees of the will of 1828, and were therefore unaffected by the deed of 1842, and do not therefore belong to the plaintiff. If the defendants had entered, claiming no title under Gerald Fitzgerald, this point would require attention, but in truth it does not arise. The defendants are trustees of his will, and as such they defend this action. We need not consider whether as squatters, claiming no title themselves, there would be any difficulty in ejecting them. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

LOPES, L.J.—I do not propose to re-state the facts of this case so fully stated in the court below, but will content myself by enunciating the principles of law applicable to those facts. When certain facts in the case are rightly understood, it does not appear to me to be a case of difficulty, and is covered by authority. It is to be assumed that the lands of Bulk did not pass under the will, and were subsequently erroneously settled with other lands by the deed of 1842, which deed gave Sir Gerald Fitzgerald a life interest in the property so settled. He really had no title to the lands of Bulk, but entered into possession of them under the deed of 1842, exercising powers conferred by that deed, such as the powers of jointuring and charging portions for younger children. He also paid succession duty as tenant for life. The effect of the deed was to confer a legal title on the beneficiaries under the deed, of whom the plaintiff was one. Sir Gerald Fitzgerald remained in possession of the lands of Bulk sufficiently long to entitle him to the property under the Statute of Limitations, if he is not estopped. The defendants are devisees of Sir Gerald Fitzgerald, and "are his privies." Estoppel binds not only the parties but the privies. The defendants, therefore, are in no better position than Sir Gerald Fitzgerald, and if he was estopped, they are estopped. If a person obtains possession of land, claiming under a will or a deed, he cannot afterwards set up another title to the land against the will or deed, though the deed or will did not operate to pass the land in question. It is said the property passed by the will, and not by the deed. But how can this be said about the lands of Bulk? They were not included in the will, but were settled, or, at any rate, were purported to be settled, by the deed. A person having no title to land settles it on A. for life with remainder to B. A. enters and takes possession and deals with the property as tenant for life; that person is estopped from telling the truth; his month is shut—he has availed himself of the settlement for the purpose of obtaining possession of the land, and he cannot afterwards seek to invalidate that which enabled him to obtain possession, and this though subsequently he may have acquired a good title. If a man obtains possession of land, claiming under a deed or will, he cannot afterwards set up another title to the land against the will or deed, though it did not operate to pass the land in question; and if he remain in possession till twelve years have elapsed and the title of the testator's heir is extinguished, he cannot claim by possession an interest in the property different from that which he would have taken if the property had passed by the will or deed. If the interest devised to him by the will is a life estate the devisees or grantees in remainder will be entitled to enter when that estate determines—and not only is a person who enters under a will or a deed estopped from setting up a title adverse to the will or deed, but anyone who gains possession through a person interested in the land under the will or deed is bound by the same principle of estoppel: Hawksbee v. Hawksbee; Board v. Board, which latter case in my judgment governs the case now under consideration. I am of opinion that the doctrine of estoppel applies to this case, and that Sir Gerald Fitzgerald and all persons claiming under him are precluded from denying that the settlement was effectual. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

RIGBY, L.J.—I do not think it necessary to re-state the terms of the settlement of 1842. Possession was held under the terms of it from 1842 to 1867. The plaintiff, claiming possession as tenant for life under the settlement of 1842, among other contentions, set up the contention that the defendants, as deriving title under Sir Gerald Fitzgerald, were estopped (whatever the real title might have been) from disputing the right of the plaintiff under the settlement of 1842. Assuming in favour of the defendants that no estate in the lands in question passed by the settlement, I am of opinion that this contention on the part of the plaintiff must succeed, and therefore that it is not necessary to go into any other point argued. It was indeed argued that, on the face of the settlement, the want of title of the grantors sufficiently appeared to prevent an estoppel; but on this point I agree with Stirling, J. I am quite unable to distinguish the present case from that of Board v. Board, the authority of which has not been questioned and cannot in my judgment be successfully questioned. This case arises under a deed, and not under a will, but the doctrine of Board v. Board is no part of the law of wills, and depends only upon an estate being taken under an instrument, whatever it may be. It follows that it would be useless to inquire further into the validity of the settlement of 1842, the very principle of the decision being that no inquiry into the title is permissible on the part of a person who himself entered by virtue of the settlement or of persons claiming through him. I abstain therefore from commenting upon any other part of the case on the ground of the irrelevancy of all other considerations set up. I will add that for my part I do not desire to express any doubt as to the cases of Paine v. Jones and In re Stringer. I consider them irrelevant to the present case. I feel the same difficulty in reconciling the decision in Kernaghan v. M'Nally with Lord St. Leonards' decision in Scott v. Nixon that has been expressed by my brother Lindley.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Carlisle, Unna, Rider, & Heaton; H. B. Bell.

High Court of Justice.

Q. B. Div.
(Hawkins and Wright, JJ.) June 19; July 3.

THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY (Appellants) v. DAVIES (Respondent). (a.)

Water—Rating—Annual value—House and garden—Supply of water for domestic purposes—Basis of assessment—Justices—Exclusion of part of premises—Grand Junction Waterworks Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii.), s. 46—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 68.

Section 68 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, provides that the water rate shall be payable according to the annual value of the "tenement supplied with water," and if any dispute arise as to such value, the same shall be determined by two justices.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the justices, in determining under this section the annual value of premises consisting of a dwelling-house and garden occupied as one residence, cannot exclude the garden or any part of the premises, but must take into consideration the whole premises as being the "tenement supplied with water."

Case stated by justices of the peace sitting at the police court, Brentford, in the county of Middlesex.

The appellants and respondent appeared before the justices, upon an application to the justices by the respondent under section 68 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), which provides: "The water rates, except as hereinafter and in the special Act mentioned, shall be paid by and be recoverable from the person requiring, receiving, or using the supply of water, and shall be payable according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water, and if any dispute arise as to such value the same shall be determined by two justices."

The application was to determine the value of a certain tenement known as No. 1, Grange-road, Ealing, supplied with water by the appellants, and owned and occupied by the respondent, a dispute having arisen as to such annual value between the appellants and the respondent. The tenement is outside the area to which the Water Rate Definition Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 34), applies.

By section 46 of the Grand Junction Waterworks Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii.), it is enacted that the appellant company "shall, at the request of the owner or occupier of any house in any street within the limits of this Act in which any pipe of the company shall be laid, furnish a supply of water for domestic purposes where the annual value of the dwelling-house or other place supplied shall not exceed £200 at a rate per centum per annum on such value not exceeding £4," &c.

By section 48 it is enacted that "a supply of water for domestic purposes shall not include a supply of water . . . for gardens, fountains, or ornamental purposes."

By section 49 it is enacted that "the company may supply any person or body within their limits with water to be used within such limits for other than domestic purposes at such rate and upon such terms and conditions as shall be agreed upon," &c.

The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (except the provisions with respect to the communication pipes to be laid by the undertakers and section 35) was incorporated with this private Act.

The premises in question consisted of a dwelling-house with a gravelled approach in front and garden at the back, consisting in part of lawn and in part of kitchen-garden, with greenhouse and tool-shed. The whole of the premises were occupied by the respondent as a residence, and the garden and the other appurtenances formed part of the curtilage of the house. The total area of the premises was a little over half-an-acre.

The appellants supply the respondent with water for domestic purposes under and in pursuance of section 46 of the private Act, and section 68 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, at a rate according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water. The respondent has also under threat of legal proceedings paid to the appellants for the use of water for garden purposes during the season of 1896 the sum of one guinea, but no agreement under the 49th section of the Act was made between the parties for the supply of water for garden purposes.

The question at issue was as to what was to be taken into account in determining the annual value of the "tenement supplied with water."

For the appellants it was contended that the tenement, the annual value of which was to be determined, was the whole area of the premises occupied by the respondent as one undivided tenement.

For the respondent it was contended that the tenement was the dwelling-house alone, and that the garden ought to be excluded in calculating the annual value of the "tenement supplied with water"; and the respondent's witnesses, in order to show that the garden might have a letting value apart from the house, suggested that by making entrances and dividing off the premises into three separate parts, the part of the garden consisting of lawn might be let as a lawn-tennis ground, the remainder of the garden might be let as a kitchen garden, and the dwelling-house would then stand with only a small piece of ground attached to it. The appellants' witnesses asserted that such suggestion would completely alter the character of the premises and decrease their letting value.

The justices found as facts that the annual value of the whole tenement as occupied by the respondent was £100; but that the annual value of such tenement, if a certain portion of the garden were excluded, was then £80; and that such piece of garden, although occupied by the respondent as part of the premises and not divided or separated in any way, and though desirable for the enjoyment of the premises, might have been separately let.

They were of opinion that neither the respondent's nor the appellants' contention was correct, and that in arriving at the annual value of the tenement supplied with water they had to make a special assessment for water purposes only for the purpose of a domestic supply, and were therefore obliged to determine what quantity of garden should in their opinion reasonably go with the house.

They were further of opinion that to determine the annual value of the tenement they ought to consider (1) that the garden is by the statute expressly excluded from receiving water under the head of domestic purposes, and (2) that under the Bristol Waterworks Co. v. Uren, 15 Q. B. D. 637, 33 W. R. Dig. 239, and the cases there cited, a reasonable amount of garden must be included in the assessment for domestic supply.

It appeared to the justices that a distinct and appreciable area beyond that which was reasonable and necessary for the enjoyment of the dwelling-house (having regard to its character and the locality) —viz., the back or kitchen garden, could be severed and form by itself a defined unit for the purpose of separate assessment for all rating demands, as it was of reasonable size and capable of being divided and let for a building site or for other purposes.

They accordingly held that the annual value of the tenement for the purposes of the said section was £80.

The question for the court was whether the justices were right or wrong in law in holding that they had to make a special assessment only for water purposes for the purpose of a domestic supply, and were therefore entitled to determine what quantity of garden should reasonably go with the house apart from the fact of what was then occupied therewith, and whether they were right or wrong in excluding a portion of the garden in determining the annual value of the tenement supplied with water. If the justices were wrong the assessment was to be raised to £100.

Bosanquet, Q.C. (Ram with him), for the appellants.—Under section 68 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, what has to be assessed is the annual value of the "tenement supplied with water." The tenement supplied with water in this case was the whole residential tenement, the whole premises as they existed at the time and as they were then occupied by the respondent. The justices therefore, in ascertaining the annual value, had no jurisdiction to exclude the garden or any part of the garden or of the premises, but they were bound to take into their consideration the whole premises as they then stood and were occupied by the respondent. It has been said that by making entrances and carrying out other alterations the parts might have been let separately, but the respondent has not chosen to separate these parts, and until he does so what has to be assessed is what is occupied by him as one residence and one tenement: Bristol Waterworks Co. v. Uren, 15 Q. B. D. 637; West Middlesex Waterworks Co. v. Coleman, 33 W. R. 549, 14 Q. B. D. 529; Busby v. Chesterfield Waterworks and Gas Light Co., 6 W. R. 515, 27 L. J. M. C. 174. He also referred to and read the judgment in the unreported case of Lowe v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., decided by Jessel, M.R., in 1875, and referred to in the judgment of A. L. Smith, J., in the Bristol Waterworks Co. v. Uren.

E. Shortt (F. Low with him), for the respondent.—The tenement supplied here was the dwelling-house alone, and not the garden. The supply in this case was a supply for domestic purposes under section 46 of the private Act, and by section 48 a supply for domestic purposes does not include a supply for the garden. The garden is expressly excluded from such supply, and if the garden were to be included the supply would be a supply to the garden for garden purposes, and would be regulated by agreement under section 49 of the private Act. The cases cited are not much in point, as in the private Acts in question these gardens were not excluded, whereas in this private Act gardens are excluded; and these cases merely say what were domestic purposes. That is not material here, as it is regulated by the Act. The Act excludes from domestic purposes certain things, amongst which are gardens. Therefore what was supplied here was the dwelling-house alone, and not the garden, and the garden ought to be excluded from the assessment. If the whole of the garden ought not to be excluded, then it was a pure question of fact for the justices to determine how much garden ought reasonably to go with the house. That is a question for the justices, and it is a question which they have dealt with by including a certain part of the garden and excluding another part. The justices were right in the principle adopted, and their decision ought to stand.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 3.—The judgment of the court was read by

HAWKINS, J.—[The learned judge stated the facts, and proceeded:] The appellants contended that the whole area of the premises occupied by the respondent as one individual tenement ought to be taken into account. The respondent contended that the dwelling-house alone ought to be considered and that the garden ought to be excluded. After hearing evidence the justices found as a fact that the annual value of the whole was £100; but that a portion of the garden, though not in any way divided or separated from the rest of the premises and though occupied as part of the premises and though desirable for the enjoyment of the premises, might, by making entrances, cutting off a great part of the kitchen garden, one greenhouse and a portion of another, fowl houses, and a coach and bicycle house, have been separately let, and that in this view the annual value would be and was reduced to £80. In my opinion the justices had no jurisdiction to exclude such portion of the garden, &c., from their consideration in determining the annual value of the tenement supplied with water. The 68th section of the Waterworks Clauses Act of 1847 confers upon them no authority to curtail the area, or to alter the boundaries of the existing tenement and to reduce the limits of the garden to that extent which they think should reasonably go with the house by making alterations never contemplated by the owner or occupier and which could not be carried out without substantial operations. The section contemplates only a mere valuation of the existing tenement as the owner and occupier up to the present time have chosen to enjoy it. The whole, in my opinion, forms the residential tenement, and that is the tenement supplied with water. If the owner and occupier desire to curtail the area they can do so for themselves, and when—if at all—they have done so they will be entitled as of right to a valuation of the curtailed area. The reported cases mentioned to us in the course of the argument do not throw much light on the question immediately before us. Still they may be usefully referred to. In the West Middlesex Waterworks Co. v. Coleman water was supplied for domestic purposes to a house occupied as a licensed public-house. The company contended that in ascertaining the annual value for the water rate the fact that the premises were licensed should be taken into consideration, and that the rate should not be based on their value for domestic purposes only, but on their value as they stood and as they were occupied, and the court held that this contention was correct. In the Bristol Waterworks Co. v. Uren A. L. Smith, J., intimated the view of himself and Mathew, J., to be that a garden forming part of the amenities of a dwelling-house and occupied with it should be treated as added to the house in assessing the value of the house. In this I entirely agree. In the latter case the case of Lowe v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., decided by Jessel, M.R., in July, 1875, was referred to, but the case does not seem to have been reported in any of the regular reports. We think, therefore, the justices were wrong, and that the assessment must be raised to £100.

Appeal allowed; assessment raised to £100.

Solicitors for the appellants, Bircham & Co.

Solicitor for the respondent, H. P. Davies.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) — July 19.

EDWARDS v. STEEL, YOUNG, & CO. (a.)

Ship—Master—Seaman—Discharge at foreign port—Maintenance and passage home—Deposit of sum with consular officer—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 186, sub-section 2 (d).

The plaintiff's service as a seaman on board a ship of the defendants having terminated at a foreign port, the master attended before the British consul in order to comply with section 186, sub-section 2 (d), of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which enacts that under such circumstances the master may "deposit with the consular officer such a sum of money as is by the officer deemed sufficient to defray the expenses of" the seaman's "maintenance and passage home." The consul fixed a sum, which the master paid, and the consul gave the plaintiff a voucher for his passage home, which, however, did not include his maintenance on board.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the master had complied with the statute, and that no action lay at the suit of the seaman against the shipowners to recover the expenses of his maintenance during his passage home.

Judgment of Collins, J., ante, p. 553, affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of Collins, J., at the trial of the action without a jury (ante, p. 553).

The action was brought to recover expenses incurred by the plaintiff by reason of the master of the defendants' ship, in which the plaintiff was employed as a seaman, having, on the discharge of the plaintiff at a foreign port, wrongfully failed to comply with the provisions of section 186 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

The plaintiff, who was a seaman living at West Hartlepool, signed articles for a voyage on board the defendants' steamship Capenor from West Hartlepool to any port or ports within certain limits for a period not exceeding a year, and back to a final port of discharge in the United Kingdom or on the Continent of Europe between the Elbe and Brest, at the master's discretion.

On the termination of the voyage the crew were discharged at Antwerp, and, together with the master of the ship, they attended before the consul for the purpose of being paid their wages. The consul required the master to give a guarantee for a certain sum to cover the expenses of the crew's passage home, which the master accordingly did; and the consul thereupon arranged with the men to pay their wages and to provide them with a passage home, offering them all a passage to Grimsby, which they all accepted. Their wages were paid up to the date of their discharge, and the consul made out and handed to them vouchers for their passage to Grimsby. The master subsequently paid the consul the guaranteed sum. On the day after their discharge they sailed for Grimsby. The plaintiff had to pay for his food during the passage, as the voucher for his passage did not include maintenance on board, and on arriving at Grimsby he had to pay his railway fare to West Hartlepool.

The plaintiff claimed (1) maintenance and expenses at Antwerp from the time of his discharge till he sailed for Grimsby; (2) maintenance on the voyage from Antwerp to Grimsby; (3) railway fare from Grimsby to West Hartlepool.

Section 186 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, enacts as follows: "(1) In the following cases—namely, . . . (b) where the service of any seaman or apprentice belonging to any British ship terminates at any port out of her Majesty's dominions; . . . (2) the master shall also, besides paying the wages to which the seaman or apprentice is entitled, either (a) provide him with adequate employment on board some other British ship bound to the port in her Majesty's dominions at which he was originally shipped, or to a port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman, or (b) furnish the means of sending him back to some such port, or (c) provide him with a passage home, or (d) deposit with the consular officer . . . such a sum of money as is by the officer . . . deemed sufficient to defray the expenses of his maintenance and passage home; . . . (4) if the master fails, without reasonable cause, to comply with any requirement of this section, the expenses of maintenance or passage home, if defrayed by the seaman or apprentice, shall be recoverable as wages due to him."

Collins, J., gave judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed.

Robson, Q.C., and J. D. A. Johnson, for the plaintiff.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Lewis Noad, for the defendants.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—This is an action by a seaman against shipowners to recover something which he claims to be entitled to over and above his wages. He entered into an agreement of employment with them, and by that agreement he might be discharged at a port in the United Kingdom, or at one of certain ports abroad, of which Antwerp was one. He was discharged at Antwerp, and by the contract he was entitled to be paid his wages up to the time of his discharge and nothing more. But the Merchant Shipping Act provides that he shall receive something else over and above that to which he is entitled under the contract. Section 186 says that "where the service of any seaman terminates at any port out of her Majesty's dominions, the master shall, besides paying the wages to which the seaman is entitled"—that is, in this case, his wages till he was discharged at Antwerp—"either (a) provide him with adequate employment on board some other British ship bound to the port in her Majesty's dominions at which he was originally shipped, or to a port in the United Kingdom agreed to by the seaman." Taking that clause alone, the master would not have to pay the seaman anything; if employment were found for the seaman on board another ship he would receive wages from that other ship. The section goes on, "or (b) furnish the means of sending him back to some such port." The master would do that if he paid some other ship to take the seaman back to such a port; or, though I very much doubt this, he might possibly do it by giving the man himself sufficient money to find his own passage. "Or (c) provide him with a passage home." I think that that does not mean a passage to any port in the United Kingdom. I am inclined to think, though it is not necessary to decide the point, that it means to the port from which the seaman was shipped, or to some other port in the United Kingdom to which he may agree to be sent. "Or (d) deposit with the consular officer such a sum of money as is by the officer deemed sufficient to defray the expenses of his maintenance and passage home." That puts on the consular officer the duty of determining what sum of money is sufficient. I think it makes him the arbitrator of what the amount should be without appeal. If the master deposits with the consular officer the sum so determined, no action can lie against the shipowner at the suit of the seaman; and of course no action can lie against the consular officer.

In my opinion, where the consular officer does undertake to send a seaman home, he ought, in considering the sum to be deposited, to include not only the cost of the passage, but also the maintenance of the seaman during the voyage. But if he fails to do so, there is no remedy against the shipowner. If sub-section (d) is complied with, the seaman is not entitled to anything further. The plaintiff here also claims maintenance while he was at Antwerp, and his train fare from Grimsby to West Hartlepool. As to the first, the Act does not provide for the payment of any such maintenance, and as to the second, the plaintiff cannot claim it, having agreed to be sent to Grimsby. The appeal must be dismissed.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Sub-sections (a), (b), and (c) deal with the seaman and the shipower alone. Sub-section (d) brings in the consular officer, and the meaning is that the consular officer is put above the seaman and the shipowner, and he is to determine what sum the shipowner is to deposit. The shipowner must obey, and there is no appeal. Here the obligation imposed by the sub-section has been performed by the shipowner, and no action lies. But in my opinion when the consular officer comes to determine the amount to be deposited by a master under sub-section (d), he ought to take into account the maintenance of the seaman on board as well as his passage home.

RIGBY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Pattinson & Brewer.

Solicitors for the defendants, W. A. Crump & Son.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Chitty, L.JJ.) } May 6, 7; July 16.

CONSERVATORS OF THE RIVER THAMES v. SMEED, DEAN, & CO. AND ANOTHER. (a.)

River—Thames—Conservators—Right to take sand and gravel—"Bed of the Thames"—Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), ss. 87, 238.

By section 87 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, it is provided that it shall not be lawful for any person other than the conservators, their agents, servants, and workmen to dredge or raise any gravel, sand, ballast, or other substance from the "bed of the Thames" without the license of the conservators.

Held, that the words "bed of the Thames" as applied to the lower and tidal portion of the river mean the soil of the river between ordinary high-water mark on one side of the river and ordinary high-water mark on the other side. The right of the owner or occupier of lands on the banks of the Thames below Staines to take gravel and sand is not preserved by section 238.

Pearce v. Bunting, [1896] 2 Q. B. 360, 44 W. R. Dig. 142, overruled.

This was an appeal by the plaintiffs from the judgment of Bruce, J.

The plaintiffs claimed a declaration that the soil of that portion of the River Thames known as Hadleigh Ray forms part of the bed of the River Thames within the meaning of section 87 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894. They also asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants, their servants, or agents from dredging and raising gravel, sand, ballast, and other substances in that portion of the River Thames known as Hadleigh Ray without the licence of the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs are a body corporate by virtue of section 5 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894.

By section 87 of that Act it is provided that "any person, with and in accordance with the licence of the conservators, and under the hand of the chairman of the conservators or the secretary, may dredge and raise gravel, sand, ballast, and other substances from the bed of the Thames (other than that portion thereof mentioned as reserved to her Majesty in section 59 of the said Act); but subject to the provisions of the said Act it shall not be lawful for any person other than the conservators, their agents, servants, and workmen to dredge or raise any gravel, sand, ballast, or other substance from the bed of the Thames other than that portion thereof mentioned in the said section, except with and in accordance with such licence; and if any person acts in contravention of this enactment, he shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds without prejudice to any other remedy or proceeding against him; provided that nothing in this section shall take away or prejudice or affect the rights, if any, of dredging or raising gravel, sand, ballast, or other substances from the bed of the Thames above the City Stone above Staines, which would have been vested in or exerciseable by owners of the soil of such bed if this Act had not been passed."

On the 28th of September, 1896, the defendant, Thomas Pearce, who was at the time in the employ of the defendants, Smeed, Dean, & Co. (Limited), and was acting with their authority and consent, dug sand at a place called Hadleigh Ray, in the county of Essex, which is between high and low-water mark of the River Thames, while the said place was dry, and placed it in a barge then lying on the said place. The defendants acted thus without any licence of the plaintiffs authorizing them and empowering them to do so.

By their defence the defendants denied that what they had done constituted a dredging or raising of sand within the meaning of section 87 of the said Act, or that Hadleigh Ray is a part of the "bed" of the Thames within the meaning of the said Act.

The defendants further pleaded that they did such acts by virtue of a licence from one William Foster, who had a lease of Hadleigh Ray from one William Booth, the owner thereof; in the alternative the said William Booth and his predecessors in title had taken sand and received payments for licences to take sand from Hadleigh Ray from time immemorial without the licence of the plaintiffs.

Jelf, Q.C., and J. E. Bankes, appeared on behalf of the appellants.

Channell, Q.C., and Scrutton, for the respondents.

The arguments of counsel sufficiently appear in the following written judgments.

July 16.—A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This action is brought by the Conservators of the River Thames, asking for a declaration that a place called Hadleigh Ray, in the county of Essex, is part of the "bed of the Thames" within the meaning of section 87 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), and for an injunction restraining the defendants from dredging and raising gravel, sand, ballast, and other substances therefrom without the licence of the plaintiffs. Had the plaintiffs asked for a declaration that they were entitled under that section to license persons to dredge and raise gravel, sand, and other substances, as they thought fit, from the place in question, irrespective of whether such dredging and raising was for the purpose of preserving and fostering the navigation of the Thames, for reasons hereafter given, I should have said that the plaintiffs would not have been entitled to it. Hadleigh Ray lies adjacent to the left bank of the Lower Thames within the jurisdiction of the conservators, and is situated between the high and low-water marks of the river at ordinary tides—i.e., when the tide is in, it is covered with water, and the navigation of the Thames, whether for profit or pleasure (section 72) passes and repasses over it; and when the tide is out it forms part of the shore of the river. It is the property of Mr. Booth, whom I will call the licensor of the defendants, who have been raising sand therefrom without the licence of the plaintiffs.

The view I take of the Act of 1894 is this: The conservators are a statutory body brought into existence for the purpose of preserving, improving, and maintaining the navigation of the River Thames from Cricklade to Yantlett Creek (and they have some jurisdiction below that creek), but the powers granted to them by the Act of 1894 are all subservient thereto, and except for these purposes no powers are granted to them at all. I omit the powers given to them for keeping the waters of the Thames pure, for these powers have no bearing on the case. Keeping this in mind, I take first of all section 87 to see what powers are thereby granted to the conservators, for it is upon the true construction of this section that the decision of this case depends. The section is as follows: [His lordship read the section.] It must here be noticed that there is no saving clause in this section in favour of owners of the soil of the bed of the Thames below Staines, though it is argued that such a saving clause should be read into this section. I will deal with this hereafter. As I read this section it empowers the conservators to grant licences to persons to dredge and raise gravel and other substances from the bed of the lower Thames, and it prohibits anyone not a licensee (except the conservators by themselves, their agents and servants) from so doing. Now the question is, What do the words "from the bed of the Thames other than that portion of the bed or soil or shores of the Thames reserved to her Majesty" mean? Do they mean the bed of the Thames between ordinary high-water mark on one side and ordinary high-water mark on the other side of the river? or do they mean only that part of the bed of the Thames which is exclusive of the shores? There is certainly no such limitation in the section. Then what is the primâ facie meaning of the words, the "bed of the Thames"? In my judgment they denote that portion of the river which in the ordinary and regular course of nature is covered by the waters of the river. It need not be constantly covered if in the ordinary course of things it is habitually covered. I will cite a passage from the judgment of an American case—namely, that of the State of Alabama v. State of Georgia, 23 Howard's Rep. Sup. Court U.S., p. 505, which I cited in my judgment in Hindson v. Ashby, ante, p. 252, [1896] 2 Ch. 25, for it exactly conveys what I understand by the meaning of the phrase "bed of a river." It is this: "The bed of the river is that portion of its soil which is alternately covered and left bare, as there may be an increase or diminution in the supply of water, and which is adequate to contain it at its average and mean stage during the entire year without reference to the extraordinary freshets of the winter or spring or the extreme droughts of summer and autumn." This, when applied to a tidal river, means, without reference to extraordinary tides at any time of the year. This, in my judgment is the primâ facie meaning of the words "bed of the Thames," and the question is, In the Act of 1894, is there a context which causes the words not to bear their primâ facie and ordinary meaning?

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In the unreported case in 1891 of Goolden v. The Conservators of the Thames, a construction was placed by the House of Lords upon the words "bed of the Thames," as used in section 6 of the Thames Conservancy Act of 1867, which Act, although repealed by the Act of 1894, has, as regards sections 6 and 7 thereof, in substance been re-enacted in the Act of 1894, by sections 83 and 87, with the addition of the saving clause in section 87, in favour of the owners of lands above Staines. This case throws a considerable light upon some of the points raised in the present action, though I notice neither my brother Cave nor my brother Wills, in their judgments in the case of Pearce v. Bunting, [1896] 2 Q. B. 360, 44 W. R. Dig. 142, alluded to it. It is to review their decision in this last case that the present action is brought. Section 6 of the Act of 1867, upon which the House of Lords gave judgment, is as follows: "The conservators may from time to time dredge, dig, raise, take up, and remove any shoals, shelves, or banks in the bed of the Thames, and deepen and otherwise improve the same between the City Stone, near Staines, and Cricklade, and may carry away and sell or otherwise dispose of the gravel, sand, and other substances thereby obtained." Section 7 is this: "It shall not be lawful for any person other than the conservators, their agents, servants, and workmen to dredge, dig, or raise any gravel, sand, or other substance from the bed of the Thames between the City Stone, near Staines, and Cricklade, except with the licence or consent of the conservators under their common seal, . . . and if any person acts in any respect in contravention of this section, he shall for every such offence be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding £20, without prejudice to any other remedy or proceeding against him." These sections, when passed, only applied to the Upper Thames above Staines, but by section 29 of the Thames Navigation Act, 1870, these two sections were made to extend and apply to the Thames below the City Stone, near Staines, to Yantlett Creek. Thus, after the year 1870, these two sections applied to the whole Thames from Crickdale to Yantlett Creek, and did so when Goolden's case was decided in 1891 by the House of Lords. Whatever the "bed of the Thames" meant in section 6 of the Act of 1867, it meant the same in section 7 of that Act, which last section is almost identical with section 87 of the Act of 1894, excepting the proviso saving the rights of owners above Staines, which is expressly inserted in section 87 of the Act of 1894. The House of Lords in Goolden's case held that the words "bed of the Thames" in section 6 of the Act of 1867 meant the soil underneath the waters of the river situated between bank and bank; and that the dredging powers of the conservators conferred by this section extended not only to that part of the Thames above Staines which was navigable, but also to that part of the Thames which was not navigable and which was the private property of a riparian owner. That this section was held to take away and interfere with private rights is beyond dispute, although no compensation was given to the owner of the soil for this deprivation of his rights. The House of Lords also held that the dredging powers of the conservators were limited to improving the bed of the river—that is, to the exercise of the powers conferred upon them by the Acts, and that if dredging were carried on by the conservators for purposes other than that of exercising the powers conferred upon them by the Act, such dredging would not be permissible. I think that what the House of Lords then held has pointed application to the true construction of section 87 of the Act of 1894.

I now turn to the group of sections with the heading, "Dredging and Ballasting" in the Act of 1894—namely, sections 83 to 89 inclusive, of which group section 87 forms a part, to see what are the powers the conservators have had conferred upon them as regards dredging and ballasting by these sections, and to see whether any context can be derived therefrom as to any special meaning to be applied to the term "bed of Thames." Sections 83 to 86 inclusive are sections enabling the conservators to do certain acts. Section 87 is the section which empowers the conservators to prohibit others from doing certain acts. Now section 83 enacts that the conservators may from time to time do all or any of the following things:

(1) For the purpose of maintaining and improving and freeing or keeping free from obstructions the navigation of the Thames:

(a) "Dredge, cleanse, and scour the Thames

This, I should say, embraces the whole of the Thames within the jurisdiction of the conservators, so far as it is material to this case, from high-water mark on the one side of the river to high-water mark on the other below Teddington Lock to Yantlett Creek. It is over this area the navigation of the Thames, whether for profit or pleasure, is entitled to pass and repass (section 72), and over this area the conservators are empowered to dredge, cleanse, and scour the Thames for navigation purposes. Dredging necessarily involves raising the gravel, sand, and other matter dredged, for otherwise what is the use of dredging?

(b) "Alter, deepen, restrict, enlarge, widen, diminish, lengthen, shorten, straighten, and improve the bed and channel of the Thames." It is not necessary for this case to determine whether the context of the sub-section limits the "bed of the Thames" to something which the words would otherwise embrace.

(c) "Reduce or remove shoals, shelves, banks, and other accumulations in the Thames." This, as it seems to me, is the same as sub-section (a), which I have dealt with.

(d) "Abate or remove . . . all impediments, obstructions, and annoyances in the Thames or on the banks or shores thereof." This sub-section appears to have been taken from section 98 of the Thames Conservancy Act of 1857. By section 3 of the Act of 1894 shore means shores of the Thames as far as the tide flows and reflows—i.e., up to Teddington Lock, between high and low-water marks at ordinary tides. It will be noticed that these four sub-clauses to sub-section 1 deal with what the conservators may do for maintaining, improving, and keeping free from obstruction the navigation of the Thames. But they have other powers. By sub-section (2) of section 83 the conservators may dredge and raise gravel, sand, and other substances from the Thames. This phrase appears to me to be equivalent to what I have dealt with under sub-clause (a), but only for the purposes of the towpaths and for filling up creeks, inlets, bends, flats, and slob lands in and adjoining the Thames, and for constructing and altering and repairing such works. There is a proviso to this sub-section in favour of that part of the river above Staines—namely, that gravel, sand, and other substances dredged or raised above Staines for these purposes shall be used for such purposes above Staines. This sub-section also has reference to the matter of the better navigation of the Thames. By sub-section 3 of section 83 the conservators may dredge and raise "from the Thames" below Teddington Lock ballast for supplying the same to vessels in the Thames. This relates to carrying on navigation in the Thames. By sub-section 4 of section 83 the conservators may sell the overplus of the gravel and sand raised for the purposes aforesaid if not wanted for such purposes, but only the overplus. Lord Herschell deals with this power of sale of surplus in the Goolden case. Sub-sections 5 and 6 of section 83 also apply to the ballasting of ships in the Thames. By sections 84 and 85 "in the Thames" and "the course of the Thames" are the words used, and these sections also apply to navigation purposes. By section 86 the conservators are empowered to deposit gravel, sand, and other substances raised by them for the purposes of the preceding sections upon lands belonging to them, or may in or upon the bed of the Thames "place piles and make groynes, retaining walls, and other works, and may sell and dispose of the lands thereby filled up, raised, or reclaimed." In this section "bed of the Thames" appears clearly to include the shore between ordinary and high and low-water marks; for how can a retaining wall be placed in the bed of the river below low-water mark? And if so for what purpose? This section has a proviso in which the words "bed" or "shores" or "afloat in the Thames" are used.

I have dealt thus far with the group of sections, and they, in my judgment, amply suffice to show that no context can be obtained therefrom, showing any peculiar meaning to the words "bed of the Thames," and it will be seen from a judgment about to be delivered by brother Chitty that he sets out with particularity and in detail the many other sections which have in them the words "shores," "bed of the river," and other expressions. These sections I have considered, and the result is that, in my judgment, it is not possible to arrive at any context therefrom, and I can find nothing in the Act which can be relied on as cutting down the ordinary and primâ facie meaning of the words the "bed of the Thames" in section 87.

My judgment upon this peculiarly ill-drawn Act is, that the conservators by themselves, their agents and servants, have power to dredge and raise gravel, sand, ballast, and other substances from all parts of the River Thames within their jurisdiction between ordinary high-water mark on one side of the river and ordinary high-water mark upon the other, if they do so for the purpose of preserving, improving, and maintaining the navigation of the Thames, or for the other navigation purposes mentioned in the Act; and that they are also empowered to grant licences to other persons to dredge and raise gravel, sand, and other substances for like purposes, but for no other; that by the section 87 there is an absolute prohibition imposed against anyone dredging or raising gravel, sand, ballast, or other substances in the Thames between ordinary high-water mark on the one side and ordinary high-water mark on the other, without the licence of the conservators, even although the soil between those limits is private property; and that for doing so without the licence of the conservators the penalty mentioned in the section attaches. My judgment only applies to the Lower Thames.

In the case of Pearce v. Bunting above-mentioned, my brother Cave relied greatly, and my brother Wills also to some extent, upon the fact that as no compensation was given by the statute it was improbable that private rights would be interfered with by the Legislature, and this ordinarily is so; but the case of Goolden v. The Conservators of the Thames in the House of Lords indicates that these dredging powers are given to the conservators for navigation purposes without compensation being also given to private owners for having their rights thus interfered with. I may point out that by section 72 of the Act of 1894 public rights of navigation are given over private waters, and the sole saving clause therein in favour of landowners is that they may prevent the anchoring, mooring, loitering, or delay of any vessel thereon, and no compensation for this deprivation of their rights taken away by the section is given to the landowner. The question, as it seems to me, is not what soil has been vested in the conservators, which my brother Cave held to be the question, but what powers of dredging and raising gravel and other substances, and of granting licences to others to do so, have been granted by the statute to the conservators whereby to preserve, improve, and maintain the navigation of the Thames.

If a private owner were to be allowed to dredge and raise gravel from the bed of the Thames in the tideway at his own will and pleasure, it is manifest that this might so interfere with the flow of the river as in some cases to seriously impede its navigation; and, in my opinion, it is to prevent and guard against this that this plenary and exclusive power of dredging and raising gravel and other substances is given to the conservators over that part of the bed of the Thames where Hadleigh Ray is situated. As to the point taken on behalf of Mr. Booth, that his rights were saved by section 238 of the Act of 1894, it will be seen that this section commences with the words "Except as in this Act expressly provided," and if my construction of section 87 be correct, it has been expressly provided that no one other than the conservators and their licensees may dredge and raise gravel from the bed of the river, and section 238, therefore, does not avail him. As regards the suggestion that the words in section 87 "but subject to the provisions of this Act" apply to section 238 of the Act, I do not agree with it. There are other sections to which these words apply, and one instance will suffice, namely, section 234, sub-section 3, which enacts "nothing in this Act shall prejudice or affect any right of dredging or raising gravel, sand, ballast, or other substances from the the bed of the Thames conferred on the Tilbury Company." The owner of Hadleigh Ray has had no such section inserted in his favour. It is to a provision such as this that the words in section 87 "subject to the provisions of this Act" apply, and, in my opinion, not to section 238, which, for the reasons above, does not refer to section 87. If rights of private owners in the Lower Thames were intended to be preserved as regards dredging and raising gravel, it appears to me inconceivable that the Legislature should not, in section 87, have reserved these rights as they did the rights of private owners in the Upper Thames. This, however, is pointedly, and in my judgment intentionally, omitted. For the reasons above I think that this appeal should be allowed, and that it should be declared that the respondents are not entitled to dredge or raise gravel, sand, and other substances at Hadleigh Ray without the licence of the conservators. In my judgment this appeal should be allowed with costs here and below.

CHITTY, L.J. — The question in this appeal is whether the defendants are entitled to dredge or raise any gravel, sand, ballast, or other substances from the land known as "Hadleigh Ray" between high and low-water marks at ordinary tides of the River Thames without the licence of the conservators. The question is raised as a point of law on the construction of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, and was argued on the assumption, agreed to by the parties, that the soil is owned by the licensors of the defendants. Hadleigh Ray is situate in Essex on the north side of the river, and lies within the jurisdiction of the conservators. It is part of the "shore" of the Thames within the meaning of the definition in the 3rd section of the Act. It is subject at common law to the public right of navigation in a tidal river, including all incidental rights, such as grounding a vessel till the tide serves (see The Mayor of Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339); it falls within the provisions of the 72nd section of the Act, whereby it is enacted that it shall be lawful for all persons, whether for pleasure or profit, to go and be, pass and repass, in vessels over and upon every part of the Thames through which Thames water flows, and whereby certain rights of mooring and the like are conferred on the public. The learned judge before whom the question came on for argument in the court below felt himself bound by the decision of the Divisional Court in Pearce v. Bunting, and accordingly gave judgment for the defendants. The object of the conservators in instituting this civil action and bringing this appeal was to obtain a judgment of this court overruling the decision of the Divisional Court in Pearce v. Bunting, from which no appeal lay.

The more important sections on which the question turns are the 87th and the 238th, but the argument took a wide range and extended to numerous other sections of the Act of 1894, and of the preceding but repealed Acts from 1856 downwards. Three principal points were raised: First, as to the meaning of the term "bed of a river" in its ordinary acceptation, the plaintiffs contending that it includes the shore, and the defendants that it does not; secondly, as to the meaning of the term "bed of the Thames" in the 87th section, regard being had to the context and the rest of the Act; and, thirdly, as to the effect of the 238th section, the defendants contending that it saved all the proprietary rights claimed by them on behalf of their licensors.

The Act which we have to construe is a consolidating and amending Act; the general objects of such Acts is to present the whole body of the statutory law on the subject in a complete form, repealing the former statutes. The principle of interpretation of a codifying Act is laid down by Lord Herschell in the Bank of England v. Vagliano, 39 W. R. at p. 667, [1891] A. C. at pp. 144 and 145; a statute codifying the law is to be interpreted as it stands, and recourse is not to be had to the former law, except upon some special ground—such, for instance, as an ambiguous provision. The same principle applies to such an Act as that which is now before us, but in a less stringent degree. In this Act clauses of the repealed Acts are found repeated, but often in altered form, and with amendments, whereby the sense may be in great measure changed. Speaking generally, I think that the enactments must be dealt with as they now stand, and that a minute critical examination of repealed clauses ought not to be entered upon for the purpose of interpretation, except upon special grounds. So far as relates to the questions raised the Act under consideration is not a specimen of good drafting. It is, on the face of it, not the production of one firm hand; probably many hands took part in the drafting before the Act assumed its final form. Many instances occur of a departure from the cardinal rule that the same word should always be employed to mean the same thing.

The conservators of the Thames are a body originally created by statute, and finally reconstituted by the Act of 1894 with more extensive powers over the Thames. The Act recites that it is expedient that the powers of the conservators for preserving, freeing from obstruction, and improving the navigation of the River Thames, whether for profit or pleasure, should be extended as in the Act appears. The powers of the conservators include the maintenance of the purity of the water and certain other matters not material to the present case. The powers which are relevant are those relating to the maintenance and improving of the Thames as a navigable river. These powers are committed to the conservators for the general benefit of all concerned with the river, as well of the public using the river for navigation as of the owners of the soil, including the shores and the banks; it is for the common benefit of all concerned that these statutory powers are centred in one representative and responsible body (see sections 8 and 9.) Experience had shown that the maintenance of the navigation along this great public way could not be left to the common law and the individual proprietors along the river from its source to the sea; and no substantial improvements could be effected without statutory powers. Dredging in the river has always an effect, more or less according to the extent of the operation, upon the flow of the water and the navigation of the river. There is no substantial difference in the effect whether the dredging takes place above or below the flow of the tide, nor whether it is carried on in the bed, in the narrow sense for which the defendants contend, or in the shores over which the ordinary tides flow. The claim set up by the defendants is a right to dredge to any extent, at their free will and pleasure, and without limit of any kind. It is a part of their case as presented at the bar that they are not bound by any consideration of the navigation; they claim to remove the gravel and sand in unlimited quantities for the purposes of profit by sale to brickmakers and others. Certainly if their claim is well founded their operations may have a serious effect upon the navigation of the river. The Act contains in the 3rd section definitions, guarded in the usual fashion, of "the Thames" and of the word "shore," but does not contain any definition of the word "bed." The expression "the Thames" means and includes so much of the River Thames and Isis respectively, as are between the town of Cricklade in Wiltshire, and an imaginary straight line drawn from the entrance to Yantlett Creek in Kent to the City Stone opposite to Canway Island in Essex, and so much of the River Kennet and other rivers as is mentioned in the definition. The Thames, therefore, as I read the definition, includes so much of the shore where the tide flows as is covered with water at high water at ordinary tides. The word "shore" means the shores of the Thames so far as the tide flows and reflows (that is, up to Teddington Lock) between high and low-water marks at ordinary tides. The term "bed of the Thames" not being defined is thus far left to bear its ordinary meaning. The definition of "shore" cannot of itself be properly made use of to limit the ordinary meaning of the bed of the Thames. If that term is large enough to include the shore where the tide flows, it is not, in my opinion, a legitimate course of reasoning to say that its meaning is cut down because shore is defined.

Now, the reason for defining "shore" must be found in the Act itself. It occurs in fourteen sections at least of the Act, in thirteen sections with other words, and in one section without—namely, in the 58th, 59th, and 60th sections, the 69th, the 83rd, 92nd, 111th, 116th, 182nd, 184th, 185th, 204th, 205th, and 239th. The view I take of the 58th, 59th, and 60th sections is this. I think that they are conveyancing sections, whereby certain property and powers vested in the conservators at the passing of the Act are continued in them, notwithstanding the repeal of prior Acts and the alteration of the constitution of conservancy by the Act itself, and whereby there is also continued the express reservations in the specified Crown property as such reservation existed at the passing of the Act. The words used in these sections are the bed and soil and shores of the Thames (section 58); the portion of the bed or soil or shores of the Thames (section 59); and the banks, shores, and wharves of the Thames (section 60). According to the practice of conveyancers (and an excellent practice it is) the same set of words is used in the conveyance and reservation as were used in the original conveyances and reservations. The history of these sections is traced by Cave, J., in his judgment in Pearce v. Bunting. His judgment rests in a considerable measure upon them and on the use of the term shores in addition to bed and soil, indicating in his opinion that shore is distinct from, and is not included in, the term "bed." He apparently confines the dredging powers of the conservators to the property vested in them. In this opinion I am unable, viewing the whole Act, to concur. I think that these sections do not limit the conservators' powers of dredging, whatever they may be, as disclosed by the other parts of the Act, and that such powers are not confined to the property vested in them. Following out the sections in which the word "shores" occurs, I came to the 69th, empowering water-bailiffs to seize fish unlawfully taken and prohibited apparatus, not only on the water of the river, but on the shores or banks of the river. It was obviously convenient to extend the powers to the shore and to mention the shore specifically. Similar observations occur to me as properly applicable to section 83, sub-section 1 (d), in regard to the removal of obstructions and nuisances. I say the same of the 92nd section, sub-section 1, relating to the putting of gravel or other substances, or stones, or rubbish into the Thames or on the shore thereof, whence it might be washed into the river. The 111th section prohibits the making of docks and other works or erections as enumerated, upon the bed or shore, or afloat on the Thames, without the conservators' licence. The 116th section relates to the consideration for any licence granted by the conservators for doing in or upon the bed or shores, of or afloat in the Thames below Teddington Lock, any of the things enumerated at great length including docks, piers, and embankments and walls. This section appears to interfere in some degree with the rights of the proprietors of the soil of the shores as set up by the defendants without qualification or compensation. The 182nd section prohibits the execution of the works upon the bed or shores of the Thames below Teddington Lock by the conservators or their licensees without the permission of the Board of Trade. The 184th section relates to the removal of works executed with such permission. The consent of the owner of the shore is not in terms required by the 182nd section. The 185th section prohibits the discharge of guns over or upon the Thames or the shores, banks, or towpaths thereof, or any land for the time being vested in the conservators above an imaginary straight line drawn from Barking Creek to Margaret Ness. Here, again, a proprietory right of the owners of the shores, and also of the banks, is interfered with, as is generally done in the case of land near a highway, and it was considered necessary or expedient to include specifically shores, banks, and towpaths. The remaining sections are the 204th and 205th, relating to the jurisdiction of magistrates and the powers of the police; here, again, it was apparently considered necessary or expedient to use words which would prevent questions being raised. I reserve the 239th section for the present. With that exception I have dealt with all these fourteen sections, necessarily in a very brief manner. In all of them, having regard to the subject-matter and the context, there would appear to be some reason why shores should be mentioned specifically. They are none of them (I still except the 239th section) dredging sections; and regard being had to the variety of the words used, they do not appear to me to afford any safe guidance as to the meaning of the term "bed" in the sections specially relating to dredging. Whatever may be the force of the observations I have made on these sections, the sections themselves at all events supply the reason for the definition of the word "shore." Recurring to the word "bed," I find it in at least sixteen sections of the Act—namely, sections 58, 59, 62, 72, 83, 86, 87, 88, 89, 111, 182, 184, 204, 205, 234, and 239; in twelve sections with other words, such as soil or bed, bed and channel, bed or shores; and in four sections without any other words. It will not, however, serve any sufficiently useful purpose to go through these sections; the language of the Act cannot stand any critical examination.

I come now to the important group of sections, the 83rd to the 89th inclusive, placed under the head "Dredging and Ballasting." The 83rd section has already been carefully dealt with by Smith, L.J. I concur generally in his observations upon this section. The powers conferred by the 1st sub-section are expressly granted for the purpose of maintaining and improving and freeing from obstruction the navigation of the Thames. The leading power is that under (a) to dredge, cleanse, and scour the Thames. This is general, and in my opinion includes the shore. The powers under (b), (c), and (d) seem to be subsidiary powers. I can see no sufficient reason for excluding the shores from (b) and (c); they are expressly included in (d). To an Act drawn as this is, I think it would be dangerous to apply the rule of expressum facit cessare tacitum. I decline to draw the inference that because shores are mentioned in (d) they are excluded from (a), (b), and (c). The 2nd sub-section also relates to navigation. The power to dredge and raise "from the Thames" gravel, sand, and other substances is conferred only for the purpose mentioned in the sub-section. Here, again, "the Thames" is mentioned. Why does "Thames" not include the shore? The power to dredge and raise from the Thames below Teddington Lock, conferred by the 3rd sub-section, is expressly limited to the purpose of supplying ballast to vessels on the Thames, a purpose connected with navigation. The power in the 4th sub-section to sell or otherwise dispose of gravel and other substances is confined to gravel and substances raised by the conservators under the proviso of the 83rd section and not required for the purpose for which they were raised. The conservators have no unlimited or roving power to raise gravel and other substances; they have no power to carry on any general trade of raising and selling gravel and the like. In the 86th section it would be almost impossible to read the term "bed" in the restricted sense contended for by the defendants; "groynes" possibly might be placed in the bed, taken in the restricted sense, but they are usually placed on the shore; and I cannot call to mind a single instance of a retaining wall being placed in the bed, in the narrow sense, nor can I understand what useful purpose it would serve if there placed.

I come now to the 87th section. It has already been stated. I shall not read it again. It divides itself into three parts. The first confers on the licensees of the conservators powers to dredge and raise gravel, sand, ballast, and other substances from the bed of the Thames, except that portion which is mentioned in section 59—that is, to put it shortly, in front or immediately adjacent to, land reserved to the Crown. Turning to the 59th section I find the words, "the portion of the bed, soil, or shores of the Thames." I am unable to extract any satisfactory light from this strange drafting; it would rather seem from the exception that the word "bed" in the 87th section includes the "shores," but I place no reliance on this point. My opinion on this first part of the 87th section is as follows: An unlimited power of granting licences to others to dredge is not conferred on the conservators. The only licences which the conservators can lawfully grant are licences to dredge and raise gravel and other substances for the same purposes as the conservators can by their own agents, servants, and workmen dredge and raise. The licensees, however, are by this 87th section expressly forbidden to dredge in the land reserved to the Crown by the 59th section, whereas by the 83rd section the conservators themselves (that is, by their agents, servants, and workmen) are not expressly placed under the like prohibition. But the Crown rights seem to be fully protected by the 59th and other sections, such as the 213th. As the conservators themselves cannot directly carry on a general trade of raising and selling gravel, so in my opinion they cannot do so indirectly by granting licences to others. As at present advised, I think that it is not competent for the conservators to make a profit by the grant of licences or to raise money by the grant of licences, though they may be entitled to make a reasonable charge for the grant sufficient to cover the actual expense in granting them. The powers of the conservators and their licensees to dredge are not directly before us in this action; but it is impossible to decide the actual question properly without taking them into consideration. The second part of the 87th section contains the prohibition on which the conservators rely. Laying aside for the moment the introductory words, "subject to the provisions of this Act," there appears to me to be an unqualified prohibition precluding any person other than the conservators, their agents, servants, and workmen from dredging or raising gravel and other substances from the bed of the Thames other than the portion previously reserved to the Crown in section 59. And I cannot find any sufficient reason for confining the expression "bed of the Thames" in the first or second part of the 87th section to a restricted sense excluding the shore. The third part of the section contains an express reservation from the operation of the section itself in favour of the owners of the soil of the bed of the Thames above the City Stone, above Staines Bridge, of such rights, if any, of dredging or raising gravel or other substances "as would have been vested in or exerciseable by them if this Act (of 1894) had not been passed." This is significant; it imports that without the proviso the rights of the upper proprietors of the bed of the Thames would have been taken away by the previous parts of the section. There is no similar proviso as to the owners of the shores. The proviso, however, leaves open the question whether the word "bed" does or does not include the shores.

I now turn to the 239th section, which appears to have an important bearing. It relates to payments to be made by the conservators to the Crown. By the proviso at the end of the section the conservators are to pay to the Commissioners of Woods £500 a year in lieu of all payments which would otherwise, pursuant to the section, be payable "in respect of ballast, sand, earth, or gravel dredged or raised by the conservators or any person by their authority from the bed or shores of the Thames." This proviso assumes that powers are conferred by the Act on the conservators and their licensees to dredge and raise gravel from the shores as defined, and affords an additional reason for holding that the expressions "the Thames" and "bed and channel" of the Thames in the 83rd section (sub-section 1 (a) and (b)), and the term "bed of the Thames" in the 87th section are not used in a sense which excludes the shores.

I come now to consider the first of three points mentioned in an early part of this judgment—namely, What is the proper meaning of the term "bed" when applied to such a river as the Thames, which from its source as far as Teddington Lock is a non-tidal river, and from Teddington Lock downwards is a tidal river? In my opinion the bed of the Thames means, and includes, the soil or ground which is covered by water in the ordinary course of nature; the ground over which the water flows or on which it lies. I exclude all extraordinary causes whereby the volume of the water is increased or diminished, such as unusual floods or droughts, and unusual winds, which have a considerable effect on the tidal—and particularly the upper tidal—portions of the river. So far as the tide flows and reflows I include, as part of the bed, the soil or ground lying below high-water mark at ordinary tides. Such being my opinion on the ordinary and proper signification of the term "bed" when applied to a tidal river, I proceed to the second point: Is there on the face of this Act of Parliament sufficient ground to cut down the primâ facie meaning of the "bed of the Thames" and to exclude the shores as defined in the 3rd section? I have partially dealt with this point when going through particular sections. In my opinion there is not sufficient ground. Wending my way, as well as I can, through the mazes of this Act, and the variety of the words employed, I think that the Act does not restrict the meaning of the "bed of the Thames" in the 87th section. Unlimited dredging on the shores as defined would tend to change the course and flow of the water, and so impair the navigation of the river. There are in the higher parts of the river reached by the tide many considerable strands left bare at low water, the removal of which would change the course of the river and alter the navigation. Under the second portion of the 87th section no fetter is imposed on the conservators in the granting or withholding the necessary licence. But I cannot presume that such a representative body as the conservators are would refuse to grant the licence to the proprietors of the shores as defined, where they were satisfied that the dredging might take place without injury to the navigation. On the third point, whether the rights of the licensors of the defendants are saved by the 238th section, my opinion is that they are not. No doubt the general rule is that private rights are not taken away by an Act of Parliament without compensation (see Lyon v. Fishmongers Co., 25 W. R. 165, 1 App. Cas. 662). But in the unreported case of Goolden v. The Thames Conservators the House of Lords held that the plaintiff's rights as proprietor of part of the bed of the upper part of the Thames were taken away without compensation by the Thames Conservancy Act, then under consideration, but since repealed. Smith, L.J., has already dealt with that decision. It does not directly govern the present case, because there is a difference between the language of that Act and the Act of 1894. The 238th section commences with an exception, "except as in this Act expressly provided." The question here is whether the second part of the 87th section comes within this section. Now, it is urged for the defendants that the second part of the 87th section is not within the exception in the 238th section, because the second part is itself expressly made subject to the provisions of the Act, and therefore to the provisions of the 238th section. It must be admitted that there is some force in this argument. But as I read the 87th section it does expressly provide that no person other than the conservators and their licensees may dredge or raise gravel from the bed of the Thames, and I think that the words "subject to the provisions of the Act" are satisfied by applying them to other parts of the Act, exclusive of the 238th section. First there is the proviso at the end of the 87th section itself, which is very significant. This proviso expressly saves the dredging rights of the proprietors of the Upper Thames, but is silent as to the rights of the proprietors of the Lower Thames. The inference from this proviso appears to be that the dredging rights of the latter are intended to be affected by the section. The argument for the respondents renders this proviso not only idle but worse than idle. According to this argument the 238th section would have saved the dredging rights of the proprietors in the Upper as well as the Lower Thames without distinction. Secondly, there is the 234th section, sub-section 3, which expressly enacts that "nothing in this Act shall prejudice or affect any right of dredging or raising gravel, sand, ballast, or other substances from the bed of the Thames conferred on the Tilbury company under or by virtue of any Act." The 213th section seems to be another such section. There may also be others, such as sections 218, 219, 222, 223, and 236; there is, however, not sufficient information before the court to enable me to express any definite opinion on the subject. It would seem that in the case of the Grand Surrey Docks (section 236) the proprietors have some power of dredging in the river opposite the entrance to the docks by virtue of their special Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. cxxxiv), s. 64. The 238th section, on the face of it, does not save rights which are interfered with by express provisions of the Act, and some of such rights are interfered with without compensation; among these are, as I think, the rights of the lower proprietors to dredge without the licence of the conservators. The negative or prohibitory part of the 87th section is supplemental to the dredging powers of the conservators conferred in order to give effect to the main object and leading principle of the Act—namely, the maintenance and improvement of the river for the purpose of navigation by means of the conservators' power. For the reasons above stated, I think that the appeal should be allowed, and the question of law answered in the negative.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I have been requested by the Master of the Rolls to state that he agrees in these judgments.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellants, James Hughes.

Solicitors for the respondents, Farlow & Jackson.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — July 9.

HESTON AND ISLEWORTH URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. GROUT. (a.)

Local government—Public health—Sewers—Expenses—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 38—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 151, 257—Notice under section 150—Effect of adoption of Private Streets Works Act, 1892, after a notice has been given under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

Notices under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring the owner of a house to sewer and make up the street in which his premises are situated, are valid if duly given while that Act is in operation, and can be enforced notwithstanding that before the works required are actually done the local authority has adopted the Private Streets Works Act, 1892, section 25 of which excludes the operation of section 150 of the Public Health Act.

Decision of North, J., ante, p. 612, affirmed.

Appeal by the defendant against a decision of North, J. (reported ante, p. 612, where the facts and statutes are set out).

Macmorran, Q.C., and Ribton, for the appeal.—Section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, "does not apply" since the Private Streets Works Act of 1892 was adopted, and the notice is inoperative. As the later Act was voluntarily adopted by the local authority, the provisions of section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, as to rights

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"acquired, accrued, or incurred" under a "repealed" enactment have no application. Section 24 of the Act of 1892 is simply a re-enactment of section 6 of the Public Health Act, and does not help the other side. The local authority had only an option, which is not a right acquired under the former Act: Abbott v. Minister for Lands, [1895] A. C. 425, 431, 43 W. R. Dig. 123.

They also referred to sections 3, 6, and 7 of the Private Streets Works Act, 1892; section 341 of the Public Health Act, 1875; and Reg. v. Holdsworth, 1 Q. B. 220.

Warmington, Q.C., Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Morton W. Smith, for the urban district council, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J.—It appears to me that the conclusion at which the learned judge has arrived is quite right. The question turns really on the true construction of the Private Streets Works Act of 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), possibly assisted by the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63). I pass over the Interpretation Act, 1889, for the present. [His lordship stated the material provisions of the Act of 1892, and proceeded:]

We have now to apply these several enactments to a case in which the local authority—the district council—gave a notice under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, when that Act was in force in this district. That was a perfectly valid notice, and under that the local authority did what they were clearly entitled to do—apportioned the expenses among the frontagers. That notice was in force for nearly three years—two and three-quarter years at least—and in the interval, the notice having expired and nothing having been done, the district authority applied to the Local Government Board to sanction a loan for the purpose of doing the work. That was the state of things when, in June, 1894—nearly three years afterwards, it is true—the district authority resolved to adopt the Private Streets Works Act, 1892. Accordingly, as from that time, section 24 of the Act of 1892 says that section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, is not to be in force. But it would be a very forced construction to hold that the notice which was given was to be dropped, and that whatever had been done under it must go for nothing. Even without the aid of the Interpretation Act, 1889, I should come to the conclusion that that could not be the right view. But if we fall back upon the Interpretation Act, I cannot help thinking that the moment you find a provision that a particular section ceases from a certain date to apply to a certain district, that is a repeal from that time so far as regards that district. I cannot see any difference practically. That, therefore, lets in the provisions contained in section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63). Sub-section 2 says that "Where any Act passed after the commencement of this Act repeals any other enactment, then, unless the contrary intention appears, the repeal shall not (b) affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed, or anything duly done or suffered under any enactment so repealed; or (c) affect any right, privilege, obligation, or liability acquired, accrued, or incurred under any enactment so repealed." If there is otherwise any doubt about the matter, that enactment is amply sufficient to remove it. I cannot come to the conclusion which Mr. Macmorran has urged us to come to, that the true construction of the Private Streets Buildings Act, 1892, is that the adoption of that Act renders any previous notice futile, merely because the Act of 1892 is in force. It is perfectly obvious, of course, that after the Act of 1892 comes into force you cannot give any fresh notice under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and, therefore, all the consequences of giving such a notice under that section cease to apply. As for the future, it is clear that section 150 is to have no operation. But that does not affect a notice given previous to the adoption of the Act of 1892. I think, therefore, that the appeal fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

LOPES, L.J.—I think this case is very clear. I do not feel that I can really add anything to that which has already been said, and with which I entirely agree.

RIGBY, L.J.—I also agree, for the reasons which have been given by Lindley, L.J.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Woodbridge & Sons; H. R. Peake.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } June 18; July 6.

In re EHRMANN'S TRADE-MARKS. (a.)

Trade-mark—Registration—Dissolution of partnership—Application by partners for separate registration of old firm's trade-marks—Patents, &c., Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 72.

The prohibition under section 72 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, of the registration by the comptroller of a trade-mark identical with one already on the register or having such a resemblance to it as to be calculated to deceive is intended to protect the public as well as benefit the owners of trade-marks. The court, therefore, in the exercise of whatever discretion it may have under section 72, will, in considering whether it ought to encourage two concurrent applications for the registration of similar or identical marks by directing the comptroller to proceed with them, be governed by the principle laid down in the case of In re Dewhurst's Trade-Marks, 44 W. R. 672, [1896] 2 Ch. 137, and refuse the application unless satisfied that no harm is likely to arise by reason of such registration causing either confusion or deception; and the fact that the applicants were formerly partners and are asking for the registration in their respective names of the trade-marks used by the old firm is not sufficient to induce the court to accede to their application.

This was a motion asking that the comptroller should be directed to proceed with certain applications for registration of trade-marks, and raised questions as to the rights of new firms created by a dissolution of a partnership with regard to the trade-marks used by the old firm.

Down to December, 1896, five brothers named Ehrmann carried on business in partnership as wine and spirit merchants in the City of London, under the style of Ehrmann Bros. and Ehrmann Frères, and used in the course of their business various trade-marks.

In 1894 four of them brought an action against the fifth for the dissolution of the partnership.

By a deed dated the 23rd of December, 1896, the partnership was dissolved on the terms therein contained.

The important clauses of the deed were Nos. 4, 6, and 11.

Clause 4 provided that the business of the existing firm should belong to and be carried on by the parties thereto in manner following, that is to say, Ferdinand Baruch Ehrmann and persons claiming under him might carry on the same under the name of Ehrmann Bros., and the other partners and persons claiming under them might carry on the same under the name of Ehrmann Frères, and that the goodwill of such business should continue in and belong to the parties to the deed subject to the provisions thereof.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

Clause 6 provided that the said Ferdinand Baruch Ehrmann and persons claiming under him, and also the other partners and persons claiming under them should be entitled to use all or any of the trade-marks mentioned in the first schedule to the deed, with certain alterations specified in the deed as to some of such marks.

Clause 11 of the said deed provided for the application by the said Ferdinand Baruch Ehrmann for the registration of the trade-marks specified in the second schedule to the deed, and for the application by the other partners for the registration of the trade-marks specified in the third schedule to the deed, such applications to be made in manner specified in such clause. It also provided that all the parties to the deed should so far as necessary or expedient concur in and consent to and give authority for the making and prosecution of the application mentioned in such clause, and also that, if the Comptroller-General or any court or other authority should make it a condition of granting the applications thereinbefore provided to be made, or any of them, that the registrations of the trade-marks mentioned in the said first schedule to the deed or any of them should be cancelled under section 91 (6) of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Mark Acts, 1883-1888, then the several parties to the deed should at their own expense do and execute or concur in doing and executing all acts and documents necessary to procure such cancellation.

The trade-marks referred to in the first schedule to the deed were nine in number; eight of them were registered in the name of the old firm of Ehrmann Bros.; the ninth was unregistered.

The trade-marks referred to in the second schedule to the deed were the trade-marks subsequently applied for by F. B. Ehrmann; and those referred to in the third schedule the trade-marks subsequently applied for by the other partners in the old firm.

In pursuance of clause 11 two sets of applications were made for the registration of nine trade-marks, which were practically identical with one another and with those in use by the old firm.

The comptroller refused to accede to any of the applications.

The applicants appealed, and their appeals now came before the court on a motion asking that the comptroller might be directed to proceed with the applications.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and John Cutler, Q.C., for the motion.—The principle is that the new firm are entitled to the same benefit as the old firm were. [STIRLING, J.—Is not your case under section 87? The right has passed away from the old firm and gone into two new firms; would not the proper course be for each to register?] That might be done. [STIRLING, J.—The objection is under sections 71 and 72.] We submit that the court has power to register two persons as proprietors of the same mark. Here both parties are entitled to use the old trade-marks, but both want to have the trade-marks in question on the register in their own name. Where a firm dissolves partnership it cannot be disputed that all members of the dissolved firm are entitled to use the old trade-marks. That was the ground of the decisions in Dent v. Turpin, 9 W. R. 548, 2 J. & H. 139, Banks v. Gibson, 13 W. R. 1012, 34 Beav. 566, and Benbow v. Low, 29 W. R. 837. The principle of those cases, which applies here, is that if under the terms of the dissolution each partner can use the trade-marks of the old firm that right is one which the court can and ought to perfect under section 72.

Buckley, Q.C., and H. Terrell, for F. B. Ehrmann, adopted the same arguments.

Sir R. Webster, A.G., and Ingle Joyce, for the comptroller.—The objections to this application are that under the statute exclusive rights would be given contrary to the statute, and that trade-marks which would mislead the public would be on the register. If this application were to succeed greater rights would be given in respect of new trade-marks than exist in respect of the old marks. The principle of every decision is against allowing the same trade-mark to more than one firm, the whole spirit of the Act is against this view. [They referred particularly to sections 70, 76, and 87.] Section 72 (1) only relates to old trade-marks, and the comptroller is not to register two additional marks for different people. The statute does not allow the comptroller to register additional marks in respect of the same goods in favour of different persons, and it can make no difference that such persons applied on the same day and asked to be allowed to use the same mark. Here the public is to be asked to understand that each applicant has a right to use the mark to the exclusion of the other. Benbow's case was the case of an old trade-mark, and is no authority here. Dent v. Turpin and Banks v. Gibson were not cases of registration at all. The court will not register the same marks for different people: In re Dewhurst, 44 W. R. 672, [1896] 2 Ch. 137.

John Cutler, Q.C., in reply.—These trade-marks are already on the register. [STIRLING, J.—Then you ought to claim under section 87.] Then we should have to satisfy the comptroller as to the title to each mark. According to section 77 only the registered proprietor of the mark can institute proceedings for infringement, and that is why we wish to be registered. [STIRLING, J.—Under section 70, if the goodwill of the old firm has ceased, the old firm may no longer be able to enforce it.] Then Dent v. Turpin must be taken to be no longer law. These marks do not come within section 73. The Attorney-General says that these marks are deceptive; but if two identical old marks can be registered, why should two new marks be calculated to deceive? [STIRLING, J., referred to section 74 (3).] That only says that a mark publicly used by more than three persons on the same description of goods shall, for the purposes of the section, be deemed common to the trade in such goods. [STIRLING, J.—You could not contend that more than three persons could claim to be registered in respect of a new mark?] No. [STIRLING, J.—Well, but your application comes to this, that these five persons can come here and claim to be registered in respect of the same mark.] That is not the case here; there are only two persons; and if five were to apply they would have destroyed the distinction of their mark. [STIRLING, J., referred to Dewhurst's case. That was not the case of the dissolution of a partnership. [STIRLING, J.—Is the fact of two persons having been in partnership any ground that the comptroller should register these two parties?] No. [STIRLING, J.—Then what is the special circumstance here?] Here there is a trade-mark used by the old firm, and the partnership is dissolved on the terms that both parties should continue to use the trade-mark. There is nothing illegal in that; and they now wish to be able to bring an action for infringement in each of their respective names. [STIRLING, J.—The Court of Appeal has said in Dewhurst's case that only one person is to be registered. You must have some special circumstance, and if the consent of the person on the register is not a special circumstance, then how can an agreement on dissolution constitute a special circumstance?] The special ground is that, on the terms of the dissolution, there is nothing to prevent the partners continuing to use the mark. [STIRLING, J.—You are asking for more than the existing rights.] We are only asking to be put on in order to protect our existing rights. Benbow's case was not decided on the ground that the marks were old ones.

Cur. adv. vult.

STIRLING, J.—As regards the eight marks already on the register the comptroller raises the objection that under section 72, sub-section 1, he cannot proceed with the application until the existing entries have been cancelled. An order for cancellation might possibly be made under section 91, sub-section (c), but no application for the purpose has yet been made. The applicants are willing to make the necessary applications provided that the order for cancellation is made simultaneously with the registration of the marks in accordance with the applications. Possibly this might be arranged, but beyond this the comptroller raises the objection that identical new marks ought not to be registered in the names of two different persons. This objection applies with equal and immediate force to the applications relating to the ninth mark, which is not on the register.

Neither of the clauses of section 72 applies in strictness to this last mark; but, as was laid down by the Court of Appeal in In re Australian Wine Importers (Limited), 37 W. R. 578, 41 Ch. D. 278, the court has a discretion "as to whether, though registration is not prohibited, it is such a registration as the court ought not to encourage by directing the comptroller to go on": see p. 288, per Cotton, L.J. It was there held that the registration of the mark of a "Golden Fleece" in respect of wine ought not to be permitted in the face of the opposition of the owner of a mark of the same kind registered in respect of spirits, on the ground that the use of such a mark was calculated to deceive when applied to goods of a description similar to that in respect of which registration had taken place.

In the case of In re Dewhurst's Trade-Mark it was further held by the Court of Appeal that a mark which in the judgment of the comptroller had such resemblance to one on the register as to be calculated to deceive ought not to be registered, even if the owner of the registered mark consented. [His lordship read the judgment of Lindley, L.J., at p. 148, and continued:] What is prohibited by section 72 is the registration by the comptroller of a mark identical with one already on the register, or having such resemblance to it as to be calculated to deceive. These provisions exist, according to the decisions, not merely for the benefit of the owners of trade-marks, but for the protection of the public. There are at least two evils attendant on the registration of identical or similar trade-marks: first, the certainty of confusion; and secondly, the high probability of deception; and I read the judgments delivered in the Court of Appeal in Dewhurst's case as meaning that such registration ought not to be permitted unless the court is satisfied that there is no reasonable probability that harm is likely to arise from these causes. The like principle ought to govern the court in considering whether it ought to encourage two concurrent applications for the registration of identical or similar marks by directing the comptroller to proceed with them; and there is in the present case no evidence to satisfy me that the mischief to which I have alluded is not likely to occur. When it is inquired whether there are any special circumstances to induce the court to exercise such discretion as it may have under section 72, all that is said is that the applicants were formerly partners, and used marks identical with those in question for the purposes of their partnership; that they have dissolved the partnership, each of the applicants being entitled to use the marks; and that it is highly desirable that each of the applicants should be able to sue separately under section 77.

It may be observed on this that as to the marks already on the register, there will be no difficulty in suing in the names of the registered owners; and clause 7 of the deed of the 23rd of December, 1896, provides for such a case; and as to the one mark which remains unregistered, it might be registered in the same way as the other marks, and the rights would be regulated by the same clause. In any case the mere convenience of the applicants would not justify the court in departing from the principles laid down in the cases to which I have referred.

In argument some reliance was placed on the case of Dent v. Turpin, where it was held that each of two persons who had derived from a common predecessor the right to use a trade-mark was, under the law as it stood previously to the passing of the Trade-Mark Acts, entitled to sue separately in respect of an infringement of the right. It appears to be an answer to any claim founded on this decision that the applicants are not now applying under section 87 of the Act for the registration of an assignment or transmission of the marks in question. Even if they were I apprehend that for the purposes of the Trade-Mark Acts some limitation must be imposed on the application of the doctrine of Dent v. Turpin, at all events where more than three persons claimed to be assignees of a registered mark. It could hardly be contended that new marks can be registered in the names of a greater number of owners than is allowable under section 74, sub-section 3, in the case of old marks.

Solicitors, Goldberg, Langdon, Barrett, & Newall; Wild & Wild; Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. — June 15, 30.

STROHMENGER v. BOROUGH OF FINSBURY PERMANENT INVESTMENT BUILDING SOCIETY. (a.)

Building society—Alteration in rules—Ultra vires—Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), ss. 16 (2) (4), 18.

In contracts between a building society and one of its members the rights will be governed by the rules from time to time in force, and the member will be bound by any alterations in the rules, provided that such alterations are within the power of the society to make. But where a society which was subject to the provisions of the Building Societies Act, 1874, in order to meet losses incurred by the society, passed a resolution under section 18 of the Act to alter the rules so that the amount due from the society to each member in respect of the shares held by him on a certain date should be taken to be thirty-three-fiftieths of the net amount paid on such shares,

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the Act of 1874 contemplated that fully paid-up shares should be repaid, and that therefore a rule that fully paid-up shares should only be repaid in part was ultra vires, though in the event of a member wishing to withdraw it would be competent for the society to prescribe the terms of his withdrawal.

This was an action by the plaintiff on behalf of himself and all other members of the defendant society asking for an injunction to restrain the society, their directors, officers, and servants from acting on certain alterations recently introduced into the rules of the society.

The question was whether the alterations were such as the society had power to make.

The plaintiff was the holder of paid-up shares of the society.

The society was formed in 1867 under the old statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32. That Act provided: "It shall be lawful for any number of persons to form themselves into and establish societies for the purpose of raising . . . shares . . . and for the several members of each society from time to time to assemble together and to make, ordain, and constitute such wholesome and proper rules and regulations for the government and guidance of the same as to the major part of the members of such society so assembled together shall seem meet, so as such rules shall not be repugnant to the express provisions of this Act and to the general laws of the realm . . . and also from time to time to alter and amend such rules as occasion shall require, or annul or repeal the same, and to make new rules in lieu thereof under such restrictions as are in this Act contained."

The society received a certificate of incorporation under the Building Societies Act, 1874, the provisions of which Act were now applicable to the society.

Section 7 of that Act repealed the old Act, but the repeal was not to affect any subsisting society established under the old Act until such society should have obtained a certificate of incorporation under the Act of 1874. The important sections of this Act are section 16 (2) (4) and section 18.

Section 16.—The rules of every society hereafter established under this Act shall set forth: (2) The manner in which the stock or funds of the society are to be raised, the terms upon which paid-up shares (if any) are to be issued and repaid, and whether preferential shares are to be issued, and if so, within what limits, if any; and whether the society intends to avail itself of the borrowing powers contained in this Act, and if so, within what limits, not exceeding the limits prescribed by this Act. (4) The terms upon which shares may be withdrawn, and upon which mortgages may be redeemed.

Section 18.—Any society under this Act, certified previously to the passing of this Act, may alter or rescind any rule, or make any additional rule by the vote of three-fourths of the members present at a special meeting called for the purpose, of which meeting notice specifying the proposed alteration, rescission, or addition shall be given to the members in the manner provided by the rules of the society, or, in the absence of such rules, by letters sent through the post seven days previous to such meeting; and any society hereafter established may alter or rescind any rule, or make an additional rule, in the manner its rules direct; and every society under this Act altering or rescinding any rule, or making an additional rule, shall forward two copies of every resolution for rescission of a rule, and of every alteration of or addition to its rules, signed by three members and the secretary, and a statutory declaration of an officer of the society that the provisions of this section have been complied with, to the registrar, who, if he find that such alteration, addition, or rescission is in conformity with this Act, shall return one of the copies to the secretary or other officer of the society with a certificate of registration, and retain and register the other copy.

The rules as they existed down to the period when the alterations were made contained the following provisions:

Rule 71. Any member may, subject to the provisions of rules 73 and 91, withdraw all or any part of his shares upon giving one month's notice in writing. . . .

72. The rule previously numbered 72 was rescinded at a special general meeting of the society on the 13th of January, 1891.

73. In the event of the assets of the society being insufficient to meet the liabilities thereof, the directors may order that a sum sufficient to discharge a proper proportion of such liabilities shall be deducted from the amount payable to any member on withdrawal. The decision of the directors as to the sum so to be deducted may be made either before or during the currency, or after the expiration of the notice of withdrawal but before compliance therewith. If, owing to the number of members desirous of withdrawing their shares or to the amount of money available for the purpose or on any other account, the directors are of opinion that the interests of the society require the postponement of payment to members who have given notice of withdrawal the directors shall have power, whether the assets are sufficient to meet the liabilities or not, to postpone payment to any such members who have given notice of withdrawal for a period not exceeding one year and from time to time to continue such postponement for like further periods or to direct such payment to be made in rotation according to priority of notice as the funds of the society will allow. . . .

74. Until a notice of withdrawal has been complied with subject to deduction or postponement, the member giving the same shall continue to be bound by these rules or any alteration thereof whether such alteration be made before or after notice of withdrawal.

91. The funds of the society shall be applied solely for the purpose set forth in these rules and in manner therein provided. Firstly, in payment of all expenses of the society authorized by the rules. Secondly, in payment of the interest, dividends, or bonuses due to the holders of investment shares. Thirdly, in making advances to members notwithstanding the currency or expiration of any notices of withdrawal by other members. Lastly, in repaying subscriptions to members withdrawing their shares.

118. In case three-fourths in number and value of the investing members of the society for the time being present at a general meeting specially convened for the purpose shall resolve that no new business be transacted, then the society shall cease to transact any new business accordingly. [The rule then provided at some length for the distribution of the surplus assets, which provision, shortly stated, came to this, that the directors should get in the assets and pay and discharge liabilities, and when all liabilities and expenses were discharged the surplus assets should be divided among the investing members; and the whole of such surplus assets being disposed of the society should be and be deemed to be at an end.]

The society, through the defalcations of an officer, lost a large sum of money. Meetings were held to consider what ought to be done. Ultimately resolutions were passed, some of which were now complained of.

The first alteration necessary to mention was in rule 71, to strike out the words "his subscriptions" and substitute "the amount standing to his credit in the books of the society."

Next to insert as rule 72: "The amount due from the society to each member in respect of any share or shares held by him on the 1st of December, 1896, shall be deemed to be and taken as thirty-three-fiftieths of the net amount paid on such share or shares, anything in these rules to the contrary contained notwithstanding."

In rule 73 strike out the first paragraph and substitute, "The directors may at any time order that a sum sufficient to discharge a proper proportion of any loss, actual or anticipated, incurred by the society shall be deducted from the amount payable to any member on withdrawal."

P. S. Stokes, for the motion.—The rules must be fair. It is true that the society has power to alter its rules, but it is not fair for the society to pass a resolution which deprives the applicant of a portion of the amount due to him. Where a man has paid money on the terms that he shall have it back on certain notice, the society cannot alter the terms and prevent him from having it back on giving the notice.

He referred to Knight v. Tabernacle Building Society (unreported), Barnard v. Tomson, [1894] 1 Ch. 375; Auld v. Glasgow Working Men's Building Society, 35 W. R. 672, 12 App. Cas. 197; Wurtzburg on Building Societies, 3rd ed., p. 386.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Wurtzburg, contra.—The plaintiff would be bound by the rule even if passed after he became a member. If a member makes a mortgage of shares to a society under which he is entitled to redeem on payment of certain moneys the society can make a rule that he shall be entitled to redeem on these terms and have to bear his proportion of a loss as well: Rosenberg v. Northumberland Building Society, 37 W. R. 368, 22 Q. B. D. 373; Bradbury v. Wild, 41 W. R. 361, [1893] 1 Ch. 377; Pépé v. City and Suburban Benefit Building Society, 41 W. R. 548, [1893] 2 Ch. 211; Reg. v. Brabrooke, 69 L. T. Rep. 718. [STIRLING, J.—If I understand your argument, the society can make any rule it pleases?] Yes, if the rule is fair: Barnard v. Tomson.

Stokes, in reply.—The question is whether this alteration is a proper one, and I submit it is not. The society can pass rules that as a member comes to withdraw he shall receive only a certain amount, but this rule is that under no circumstances shall a member receive more than a certain proportion of what is due to him. The Act says you must provide for repayment, but here they provide for non-payment. All the cases go on the point whether a man is bound by the rule, but here the question is whether the rule is ultra vires. Barnard v. Tomson did not decide that a reduction was binding. It is beyond their power to pass a rule to pay only £33 out of £50. No matter what the assets of the society are, they ought to say as each withdrawal comes on how much ought to be taken off for losses.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 30.—STIRLING, J., stated the facts, and continued: Upon the argument two points were discussed—first, whether the alteration in the rules could be made so as to prejudice or affect the rights of the plaintiff as a fully paid-up shareholder; and secondly, whether, supposing this can be done, rule 72 is within the powers of the society. Now, as to the first point the authorities seem to me to be clear. There are a series of cases of which I need only mention Wilson v. Miles Platting Building Society, 37 W. R. 369, 22 Q. B. D. 381; Rosenberg v. Northumberland Building Society, and Pépé v. City and Suburban Benefit Building Society, which show that members of a building society may enter into contracts with the society that their rights shall be regulated not merely by the rules in force at the time of the contract, but by any rules which the society may from time to time make. Looking at rule 74 of the existing rules, which is not affected by the alterations, it appears to me to be clear that as to any matters within the powers of the society the rights should be governed by the rules from to time in force; and secondly, that so far as these alterations are within the powers of the society the plaintiff is bound by them. In fact this point was not seriously disputed in argument.

The real point to consider is whether rule 72 is within the powers of the society. The effect of that rule is to wipe out for all time nearly three-tenths of the money paid up by every member who had shares in the society on the 1st of December, 1896. The objection which is taken is that the Act, if it does not say so in express terms, implies that the paid-up shares are to be repaid in full. The rules which the society is authorized to make under section 16 are to provide for the terms on which such shares are to be repaid, and are also to provide for the terms under which shares may be withdrawn. No doubt as it seems to me there is a difference in the force of the section as regards these two matters, and the application of that remark is, I think, to be observed in connection with the relief sought to be obtained on the present occasion. The plaintiff does not complain of the alteration in rule 73 or of that rule itself. That is a matter which relates to the terms of withdrawal. [His lordship read the proposed alteration, and continued:] So far as I can see that is a reasonable rule, for it seems right and proper that if a society suffer loss a member shall not be entitled to withdraw without making some contribution to that loss. And if he insists on taking away his money when the loss is impending, the directors are entitled to say, "You shall not do so except by first making provision to meet that loss." But it is a totally different thing to say that for all time and for all purposes a certain amount shall be struck off from the amount which has been contributed to the funds of the society, because primâ facie, according to the terms of the Act, an investing member would be entitled to have the contributions repaid to him on dissolution, or when the surplus funds became distributable within the meaning of section 13, and when no longer required for the purposes of the society.

The proposed rule 72 goes far beyond the terms as to withdrawal, and would affect the distribution of the funds under rule 118, which relates to distribution. A similar point was considered by the Divisional Court in Knight v. Tabernacle Permanent Benefit Building Society, which came before Grantham and Charles, JJ., on the 1st of July, 1892, of which case I have been supplied with a report. The point is put neatly by Charles, J., according to this report of the judgment. In that case the society did not go so far as they have on the present occasion, because the rule there said that the amount due from the society to each member in respect of the share or shares held by him should be deemed to be five-sixths of the net amount paid on such share or shares. Then there was a further rule to the effect that out of the profits accumulated in the manner prescribed in rule 7a, one-sixth of the nominal value of the share was to be paid to the shareholder. So that there was an expectation held out to the members of the society that at a future time, under more favourable circumstances, they might receive the amount which had been written off. The Divisional Court held the rule to be beyond the power of the society. Charles, J., says: "The question we have to ask ourselves is this: Are those rules ultra vires or not? What they did was clear enough. They said they would pay Mr. Knight £10 with reference to each share; and as to the one-sixth, they would pay him out of the balance, if any, of net profits in future. In other words, the repayment of the odd one-sixth was entirely contingent upon the financial prosperity of the society. Could they do that? In answer to that question I must refer to the Act of 1874 itself, which, by the 16th section, provides that the rules of every society shall set forth, amongst other things, 'the manner in which fully paid-up shares (if any) are to be issued and repaid.' Section 18 gives power to the society to alter or rescind any rule in the manner therein prescribed, and it is contended that inasmuch as section 18 gives that unqualified power to alter any rule, they could alter the rule which formerly existed as to the repayment of fully paid-up shares and alter it in this manner—namely, that only five-sixths should be paid for certain, and that with regard to the other one-sixth the payment should be dependent upon the financial prosperity of the society. I do not think that they have any power under section 18 to make any such rule. In my judgment, to use the language of Lord Selborne, such a rule is 'repugnant to the express provisions to the Act of Parliament,' which appear to me to contemplate that fully paid-up shares shall be paid. The society may make any rules with reference to the repayment. But it may not say, 'We will not repay you at all, or we will only pay you a part of a fully paid-up share.' Nor, in my judgment, may they say, as they have said: 'We will only pay you a certain part, and, as to the rest, you must trust to get that back from the profits of the society, if any are made.' That appears to me to be repugnant to the express provision of the Act that fully paid-up shares are to be repaid."

Now, that decision was given on a case stated by an arbitrator, and it was afterwards held by the Court of Appeal (41 W. R. 35, [1892] 2 Q. B. 613) that that decision could not be appealed from. It is possible, therefore, that it is not binding on me, but I do not see my way to differ from that portion of Charles, J.'s, judgment in which he says that section 18 does not give the society power to make any such rule, and that it would be repugnant to the express provisions of the Act that fully paid-up shares are to be repaid. I think, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to the injunction asked for, but it must be limited to the alteration of rule 72.

Injunction granted to restrain the society and its officers from acting on the alteration of rule 72.

Solicitors, Dod, Longstaffe, Son, & Fenwick; Boulton, Sons, & Sandeman.

Chan. Div. }
Kekewich, J. } June 15.

HALL & CO. v. TRIGG. (a.)

Practice—Contempt—Breach of injunction—Attachment—Service of copies of affidavits with notice of motion—Proof of service of order—Consent order—Ord. 52, r. 4.

Upon a motion to commit for breach of an injunction the fact that the injunction was granted upon a consent order agreed to by the defendant's counsel will not relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving either that such order has either been served upon, or has been otherwise brought to the knowledge of, the defendant.

Motion.

The plaintiffs, who were lime and cement merchants, brought an action against the defendant, who formerly had been their traveller, to restrain him from soliciting their customers and from acting in contravention of the terms of his agreement for service with them.

On the 19th of February, 1897, the plaintiffs moved for an interim order to restrain the defendant, and by consent a perpetual injunction was granted upon the motion, which was treated as the trial of the action.

The plaintiffs now moved for the committal of the defendant, or for liberty to issue a writ of attachment against him for alleged disobedience to the order.

The notice of motion gave notice of the plaintiffs' intention to read certain affidavits which did not, however, include the affidavit of service of the order of the 19th of February, 1897.

Warrington, Q.C., and Whinney, for the plaintiffs.

Beaumont, for the defendant.—I take the preliminary objection that ord. 52, r. 4, has not been complied with; there is no affidavit of service of the order, and therefore the notice of motion is irregular: In re Dunning, 71 L. T. Rep. 57; Taylor v. Roe, 68 L. T. Rep. 213, 41 W. R. Dig. 171; and Rendell v. Grundy, 43 W. R. 50, [1895] 1 Q. B. 16.

Warrington, Q.C.—I submit that as this was a consent order an affidavit of service was not necessary; it was in effect an undertaking on the part of the defendant, and no notice to him is required.

Beaumont, in reply.—The defendant is entitled to have the order served on him, notwithstanding the fact that his counsel consented to the order. No doubt if the defendant had argued his own case in person it would be different; but that is not so in the present case; there is nothing to show that the defendant was present on the hearing of the former motion or knew of the order.

KEKEWICH, J.—The object of an affidavit of service is to satisfy the court that it can do justice between litigants who, if not fully forearmed, are at least fully forewarned, and this applies equally well whether the application to the court is for a writ of attachment or for any other purpose where an affidavit of service is necessary. The affidavit of service must show that the order has been brought to the notice of the defendant. That is the object of an affidavit of service. If that object is fulfilled to the satisfaction of the court in any other way than by the service of the order, then service becomes unnecessary. You can get over the necessity of service in cases where the man either conducts his own case in person or is present in court during the application; in such cases a mere reference to the fact of his presence may be sufficient upon a subsequent application to commit. I know of many cases where the court was satisfied that the respondent was present in court in person upon the hearing of the prior application, and has held him bound by the order then made. The question, however, which I have now to consider goes a step further, for the order was made by the consent not of the man himself, but of his counsel, who consented to what he thought was a proper order. But now, is there any difference between these cases? Can I assume that the man knew of this order? What could be done in cases where the liberty of the subject was not concerned I do not now consider; but where the liberty of the subject is concerned I think the strictest proceeding should be enforced. In substance I see no difference between an ordinary order and an order by consent. I think, therefore, that the preliminary objection is good, and must be upheld.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Foster, Spicer, & Foster; Rawlings & Butt.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Probate. } Feb. 18.

In the Goods of SUAREZ. (a.)

Probate—Administration—Persons entitled abroad—Urgency—Limited grant to stranger—Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73.

Where the next-of-kin of an intestate resided in the interior of Bolivia where a communication would take two months by letter and six weeks by telegram to reach them, and there were heavy transactions (shipments and bills) of the deceased's firm requiring to be immediately dealt with, the court, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, made a limited grant to a member of the firm of chartered accountants in whose hands the books of the firm of the deceased had been placed.

Motion for grant of letters of administration under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, of the estate of Francisco Suarez (deceased) to C. L. Nichols, a chartered accountant, until the next-of-kin obtain a general grant.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The deceased died intestate on the 10th of February, 1897, in London, where, and in Brazil, he carried on business as a merchant and agent, dealing principally in the sale of indiarubber consigned from Bolivia, and heavy shipments were arriving on which he had advanced money, £40,000 worth of rubber having just arrived in Liverpool, whilst £80,000 worth of bills against shipments were current; these required to be immediately dealt with.

The deceased died a bachelor, leaving his mother, three brothers, and two sisters surviving him.

The mother and eldest brother reside at Trinidad Beni, in Bolivia. The other brother at Rio Beni, in Bolivia; and the two sisters at Santa Cruz.

It would take two months for a letter and six weeks for a telegram to reach Rio Beni, and still longer to communicate with the mother and elder brother.

The only relative in this country was a nephew of the deceased (son of a brother who died in 1878), he supported the application as, being here temporarily and not having traded here he would have had difficulty in getting security if he had been the applicant.

The applicant was a member of a firm of chartered accountants in whose hands the books of the firm had been placed.

Inderwick, Q.C., and Barnard, in support of the motion.—It is a case of great urgency; great damage will be done to the deceased's business unless someone can act immediately, dispose of the shipments, and meet the bills arriving daily.

BARNES, J., allowed the motion on the applicant giving justifying security.

Motion allowed.

Solicitors, Goldberg, Langdon, Barrett, & Newall.

[THE END.]

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE;

WITH

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND PRIVY COUNCIL;

ALSO OF SOME CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE IN IRELAND;

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1896, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1897.

VOL. XLV.

LONDON: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

1897.

A DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN ENGLAND,

TOGETHER WITH SOME DECIDED IN IRELAND,

FROM

THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1896, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1897,

AS REPORTED IN

VOL. XLV. OF THE WEEKLY REPORTER, 1896-97;

AND IN

CERTAIN OTHER LEGAL REPORTS DURING THE SAME PERIOD,

TOGETHER ALSO WITH CERTAIN OTHER CASES REPORTED THEREIN DURING THE SAME PERIOD, BUT DECIDED PREVIOUSLY THERETO.

 In the following Digest the letters H.L. after a case indicate the House of Lords; P.C., the Privy Council; C.A., the Court of Appeal; LUN., Lunacy; CH D., the Chancery Division; Q.B.D., the Queen's Bench Division; BKCY., the Queen's Bench Division sitting in Bankruptcy; P.D. & AD.D., the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division; C.C.R., the Court for Crown Cases Reserved; C.A. (Ir.), the Court of Appeal in Ireland; M.R. (Ir.), the Master of the Rolls in Ireland; V.C. (Ir.), the Vice-Chancellor of Ireland; Q.B.D. (Ir.), the Queen's Bench Division, Ireland; P.D. & AD.D. (Ir.), the Probate and Matrimonial Division, Ireland.

 This Digest will contain at the end thereof a Tabular Index of the Names of all Cases Reported up to the end of August, 1897, as well in this Volume (45) of the WEEKLY REPORTER as in certain other Contemporaneous Reports. In this Digest, figures following the name of a case denote the page in the WEEKLY REPORTER at which it will be found. Where the name of a case has no figures attached, the case is not reported in this Volume of the WEEKLY REPORTER; but the references to the case in other Reports will be found in the Tabular Index to the Names of Cases.

ACCUMULATIONS.—See Settlement, 9.

ADMINISTRATION:—

1. Annuity payable during life or until alienation —Administration action—Valuation of annuity—Payment into court—Annuitant entitled to payment out of whole fund.—Where an annuity, payable to the annuitant for life or until alienation, had been valued in a creditor's action for the administration of the grantor's estate and the amount of such valuation paid into court to the account of the annuitant,

Held, that, notwithstanding the condition relating to alienation, the annuitant was entitled to have the whole fund in court paid out to him.—SINCLAIR, RE, ALLEN v. SINCLAIR, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 596.

2. Assets — Colonial assets — Colonial duties — Pecuniary and residuary legatees—Costs of realization.—A testator domiciled in England, whose assets consisted of considerable personalty in England and also of realty, leaseholds, and personalty in Australia, by his will, after bequeathing pecuniary legacies of considerable amount, gave his residuary real and personal estate upon trust for such of his five children as should be living at his death in equal shares, the share of each child being settled upon him or her for life with remainder to his or her children, with power for his trustees to manage and cultivate his real and leasehold estates until sold.

Held, that the duties due to the Government of South Australia were not, like the duties due to the English Government, payable out of the share of each child; but were part of the costs of realization, and were, therefore, payable out of the testator's general assets before distribution.—MAURICE, RE, BROWN v. MAURICE, Ch.D. North, J.

3. Assets—Crown debt—Specialty and simple contract creditors—Hinde Palmer's Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 46).—The object of Hinde Palmer's Act, 1869, is only to put specialty and simple contract creditors on an equal footing inter se for purposes of distribution, but it does not affect any other rights and priorities that may exist, nor does it bind the Crown in any way. Where, therefore, a testator died leaving assets sufficient, after the payment of his specialty debts in full, to pay a simple contract debt due to the Crown which before the statute would have had priority over other simple contract debts, but been postponed to the specialty debts,

Held, that the assets ought, in the first place, to be divided rateably between the specialty and simple contract creditors, and that the payment of the Crown debt ought to be borne by the fund for the payment of the simple contract creditors.

In re Jones, Calver v. Laxton, 34 W. R. 249, 31 Ch. D. 440, followed.

In re Williams, Williams v. Williams, 21 W. R. 160, 15 Eq. 270, distinguished.—BENTINCK v. BENTINCK, Ch. D. Stirling, J., 397.

4. Costs—Administrator—Rights of administrator—Disallowance of charges—Interest on balances—Debt due from next-of-kin—Set-off by administrator—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 1.—Where, in an administration action brought by the next-of-kin against an administrator the greater part of the administrator's claim for expenses of realization had been disallowed, but the administrator had acted bonâ fide throughout,

Held, that the administrator should be allowed his general costs of an administration action, notwithstanding the disallowance of a portion of his claim for expenses of realization, inasmuch as his claim was neither dishonest, improper, nor monstrous; and also that he should not be ordered to pay interest on balances of the estate which he had retained to meet such claim.

Some of the next-of-kin in the above administration action had brought an action against the administrator in his capacity of executor in another estate. This action had failed, and the next-of-kin were ordered to pay the costs, but had not done so.

Held, that the administrator was entitled to set off this debt due for costs against the shares in the intestate's estate due from him to such next-of-kin.—JONES, RE, CHRISTMAS v. JONES, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 598.

5. Costs—Excessive costs—Disallowance—Trustee.—In an administration action relating to an estate of about £10,000 in value an order had been made for the trustees to raise the sums necessary for payment of the costs, when taxed, of the trustees and their solicitor of instituting and defending various actions in the Queen's Bench Division relating to part of the estate, and to pay such sums when raised into court to the credit of the action. The costs were taxed at upwards of £3,580, which sum was raised by the trustees, under the advice of their solicitor, by mortgages of an irregular kind, and which ultimately appeared to have been quite unnecessary. The £3,580 was never paid into court by the trustees pursuant to the order, and was in fact received by the solicitor himself. Subsequently the trustees obtained an order for taxation and payment of further costs, amounting to about £200, which were claimed to be due to the estate of the solicitor, who had in the meantime died.

Held, that the estate had been improperly wasted by useless actions and proceedings, and that the court had jurisdiction to make a supplementary order, directing that the trustees (both impecunious persons) should not be paid any part of their £200 costs until they had first complied with the order for payment into court of the £3,580.—SCOWBY, RE, SCOWBY v. SCOWBY, C.A.

6. Practice—Insolvent estate—Interest—Surplus—Incorporation of rules of bankruptcy—Judicature Act, 1875, s. 10—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 55, rr. 62, 63.—H. died in 1882. In 1883 an order was made for the administration of his estate in a creditor's action. The estate was then insolvent, consisting of shares in a company which were worthless. These shares afterwards became valuable. In 1896 the chief clerk made a certificate stating the amount of the debts, in which he calculated interest on the debts carrying interest only down to the date of the judgment. The estate turned out more than sufficient to pay the certified debts.

Held, that the questions as to which the rules of bankruptcy are incorporated by section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, were all settled by the certificate, and those rules had nothing to do with the distribution of the surplus; the surplus must be distributed according to the rules of the Chancery Division—viz., in paying first interest on the debts which at law carried interest down to the date of payment, at the rates fixed by their contract, and subject thereto in paying interest at 4 per cent. to the other creditors on their debts.—HENLEY, RE, ALCOCK v. HENLEY, Ch.D. North, J.

7. Widow—Charge on estate of intestate—Intestates Estates Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 29), s. 2.—The widow of an intestate, entitled under the Intestates Estates Act, 1890, to a charge upon his real and personal estate, has a sufficient interest in the real estate to entitle her to have it administered.—MCFERRAN v. MCFERRAN, V.C. (Ir.).

See also Conflict of Laws; County Court, 2; Mortgage, 1; Partnership, 1; Practice, 1, 34.

ADMIRALTY:—

1. County court—Jurisdiction—Subjects or objects of salvage—Ship—Gas float—Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 2, 458, 476—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 71), s. 3.—The subjects or objects in respect of the saving of which the High Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction by the common law are confined to a ship, her apparel, her cargo, including flotsam, jetsam, and lagan, or the wreck of them, and to freight in danger and saved by reason of the saving of the ship or cargo; and the subjects or objects of salvage are not enlarged by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, or by any of the preceding statutes, or by the County Courts

Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, with the sole exception that the saving of lives of persons in danger from being on board ship have been added to the list of such subjects or objects.

The plaintiffs claimed a salvage award in a county court having Admiralty jurisdiction for services rendered to a gas float adrift in the tidal waters of the Upper Humber. The structure was of iron, boat shaped, and contained gas, which supplied the light raised above it.

Held, that the gas float was not a "ship" or a "wreck" within the meaning of sections 2 and 458 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and could not be the subject of salvage.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 263, [1896] P. 42, affirmed.—GAS FLOAT "WHITTON," THE, H.L.

2. County court—Practice—Action in rem—Mode of trial—Right to jury—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 101—County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 51), s. 2.—In an action in rem brought to recover freight in the county court under the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Acts, 1868 and 1869, a defendant is not entitled to trial by a jury under the County Courts Act, 1888, s. 101.—"THEODORA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

3. Practice—Damages—Limitation of liability—Right of plaintiffs to claim in respect of amount of damages already paid—Adjustment of claims between defendants, some of whom have recovered damages under order of foreign tribunal—Practice—Bail for interest on amount required exclusively to answer life and personal injury claims—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 503, 504.—The owners of a vessel who have obtained a decree limiting their liability under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for damage to goods, loss of life, or personal injury, are entitled to put in at the reference in the limitation suit a claim for such sums not exceeding the value of their vessel as they may have been compelled to pay under the order of a foreign court in respect of such damage, loss of life, or personal injury, and in regard to such claim to receive or have distributed to them the same dividend out of the amount in court or otherwise secured, as the plaintiffs in the foreign court would have received if execution on the judgment pronounced by the foreign court had been stayed and such plaintiffs had themselves sued here and brought in their claim in the limitation proceedings.

Those foreign plaintiffs who have not been paid abroad the full amount which they would have received if plaintiffs here, can come against the fund in court or otherwise secured for the balance of the dividend due to them.

By the practice of the Admiralty Division the plaintiffs in a limitation of liability suit brought for the purpose of limiting their liability in respect of damage to goods, loss of life, and personal injury arising from a collision for which their vessel is to blame, are required before a decree is pronounced in their favour, in addition to paying into court the statutory amount to which their liability for damage to goods is limited, together with interest, to give bail not only for the loss of life and personal injury claims for which they are liable, but also for interest on such claims calculated from the date of the collision until payment. —"CRATHIE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 631.

4. Practice—Salvage—Right of owners, masters, and crews of salving vessels to institute one action of salvage in rem against salved property—Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s. 21—Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 72, r. 2.—The procedure and practice in force in the High Court of Admiralty at the time of the passing of the Judicature Act entitled the owners, masters, and crews of different vessels who have rendered salvage services to a vessel, freight, or cargo in need of salvage services to institute one suit of salvage in rem against the salved property; and all such salvors have now, under the procedure and practice in force in the Admiralty Division, a similar right to join in an action in rem to recover the salvage remuneration due to them, and are not bound to sue out in it more than one writ of summons.

Smurthwaite v. Hannay, 43 W. R. 113, [1894] A. C. 494, distinguished.—"MARÉCHAL SUCHET," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 141.

See also Ship, 5.

ADULTERATION :—

1. "Drug"—Beeswax—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 6.—In a prosecution under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, of a grocer for selling beeswax adulterated by being mixed with paraffin, Held, that beeswax, so sold, was not a drug.—FOWLE v. FOWLE, Q.B.D.

2. Food—Butter—False warranty—Scienter—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 27.—By section 27 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, every person who shall give a false warranty in writing to any purchaser in respect of an article of food or drug sold by him as principal or agent shall be guilty of an offence under this Act and be liable to a penalty.

Held, that no offence was committed within that section by D., who had given a warranty in writing that butter sold by him was pure, although in fact it was adulterated, because it was not proved that at the time D. gave the warranty he had reason to know or knew that it was false.—DERBYSHIRE v. HOULISTON, Q.B.D., 527.

3. Milk—Certificate of analysis, Form of—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 18.—In a prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling adulterated milk to the prejudice of the purchaser, the certificate of the analyst which was given in evidence stated, as his opinion, that the sample submitted to him "contained the parts as under—milk, 94 per cent.; added water, 6 per cent. This opinion is based on the fact that the sample contained 7·97 per cent. solids, not fat, whereas genuine milk contains not less than 8·5 per cent. solids, not fat."

Held, that the certificate was good as evidence of adulteration.

Fortune v. Hanson, 44 W. R. 431, [1896] 1 Q. B. 202, distinguished.—BRIDGE v. HOWARD, Q.B.D., 78.

4. Milk—Knowledge of purchaser—Justices—Costs—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, s. 6.—W. was charged before justices with selling for new milk an article not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded, contrary to section 6 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1875. A sergeant of police, acting under H.'s orders, who was an inspector under the Act, purchased the milk from W., who, when he was asked for new milk, sold skimmed, and charged a penny a pint, the usual price for skimmed. The justices differed, one being of the opinion that only a penny a pint being asked, the purchaser must have been aware it was skimmed milk he was buying.

Held, that the knowledge of the purchaser was immaterial, and case remitted to the bench to convict.

The respondent W. did not appear, but the magistrates did.

Held, that costs in such a case could be given against them.—HEYWOOD v. WHITEHEAD, Q.B.D.

ADVANCEMENT.—See Will, 13.

AGENT.—See Company, 7, 21, 22; Contract, 7; Principal and Agent; Solicitor, 2.

ANNUITY.—See Administration, 1; Apportionment; Inland Revenue, 15, 23.

APPOINTMENT.—See Power, 1-3.

APPORTIONMENT :—

Annuity—Annuity payable in advance—Payment under separation deed—Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), ss. 2, 7.—By a separation deed the husband agreed to pay to the wife an annuity of £150, payable half-yearly in advance on the 1st of March and the 1st of September, in every year during their joint lives. An instalment of £75 was paid on the 2nd of March, 1896, and the husband died on the 13th of March. The executrix of the husband sued the wife to recover back the sum of £75, less an apportioned part for the period from the 1st of March to the 13th of March.

Held, that the sum of £75 was not apportionable, and no part thereof could be recovered back from the defendant.—TREVALION v. ANDERTON, C.A.

APPROPRIATION of PAYMENTS :—

Debtor and creditor—Rule in Clayton's case—Right to appropriate.—The rule in Clayton's case, 1 Mer. 572, does not apply where there is no account current between the parties, nor where, from the nature of the transactions or other circumstances, it is clear that the creditor intended that it should not.

Where there has been no appropriation by the debtor the creditor has the right of election up to the last moment.—"MECCA," THE, H.L. 667.

ARBITRATION :—

1. Contract — Master and servant — Arbitration clause—Wrongful dismissal—Stay of proceedings—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 4.—By a contract in writing the defendants agreed to employ the plaintiff for five years, but it was provided that the defendants might at any time dismiss the plaintiff if he were guilty of gross misconduct. It was also provided that any dispute should be referred to arbitration. The defendants having dismissed the plaintiff for alleged gross misconduct, the plaintiff brought an action for wrongful dismissal.

Held, that the action ought to be stayed under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889.

Davis v. Starr, 37 W. R. 481, 41 Ch. D. 242, distinguished.—RENSHAW v. QUEEN ANNE RESIDENTIAL MANSIONS CO., C.A., 487.

2. Practice—Special case—Power of court to order—Question of law—No decision by arbitrator—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 19.—The court or a judge has power under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to order an arbitrator to state a case for the opinion of the court on questions of law submitted to the arbitrator by one of the parties to the arbitration, although the arbitrator has not given any decision on the question of law, and has not indicated what his decision will be.—SPILLERS AND LEETHAMS' ARBITRATION, RE, C.A., 241.

See also Lands Clauses Acts, 1, 2; Local Government, 1.

ASSIGNMENT.—See Bankruptcy, 1-3, 5; Contract, 1; Copyright, 1; Landlord and Tenant, 1; Patent, 3; Practice, 6.

ATTACHMENT. — See Contempt; Divorce. 1; Practice, 8.

AUCTIONEER.—See Vendor and Purchaser, 5.

AUDITOR.—See Company, 36.

AUTRE VIE.—See Will, 6.

BANKER :—

1. Bill of exchange—Cheque—Forged indorsement—Liability of banker—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), ss. 24, 60, 79, sub-sections 2, 80, 82.—The defendant bank carried on business in London and had a branch in Paris. A cheque was drawn on the defendant bank in London in favour of the plaintiffs specially indorsed by the plaintiffs to a firm in London and posted for collection to that firm, but it never reached them. After the posting a forged indorsement was put on the cheque, and it was presented at the defendants' bank in Paris by a person purporting to be the last indorsee, who had no account at defendants' bank. The defendants paid the cheque and sent it to their bank in London, who credited their bank in Paris with the value. The London bank refused to deliver the cheque to the plaintiffs. The cheque, when it reached the defendants, was crossed generally.

In an action for conversion of the cheque,

Held, that the defendants, by paying the cheque and forwarding it to their London bank and crediting their Paris bank with the value, were guilty of a conversion of the cheque in England, and therefore the case was governed by English law; that the person who obtained payment of the cheque was not a "customer" of the defendants within the meaning of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 82; that the defendants, having paid the cheque on a forged indorsement, were not protected by any of the provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act, but were liable, under section 24, for the value of the cheque.

Kleinwort, Sons, & Co. v. Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris, [1894] 2 Q. B. 157, followed.—LACAVE & CO. v. CRÉDIT LYONNAIS, Q.B.D.

2. Customer—Trust money—Notice of trust—Payment of trust money to private account of trustee.—A bank credited a trustee's (J. G.) private account with moneys received by him as a trustee, he having no other account at the bank. The trust money had been received by the bank from their London agents with an advice note stating that it had been paid to the account "J. G. Trust," but the bank had no other knowledge of the trust. The trustee, J. G., was advised of the payment by the bank manager, but gave no direction as to opening a trust account. The trustee's private account having been overdrawn, and the trust money being lost, Held, that the bank was not liable to replace it.—COLEMAN v. BUCKS AND OXON UNION BANK, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 616.

See also Bankruptcy, 7; Bill of Exchange, 2, 3.

BANKRUPTCY :—

1. Act of bankruptcy—Estoppel—Assignment for benefit of creditors — Acquiescence by petitioning creditor—Supply of goods to trustee—Fresh act of bankruptcy—Notice of intention to suspend payment. —A creditor, without executing or expressly assenting to a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, may be estopped by his conduct from setting up the deed as an act of bankruptcy. A creditor so estopped cannot set up the circular convening the meeting of creditors as a notice of intention to suspend payment, if the circular formed part of the scheme.—WOODROFF, RE, WOODROFF, EX PARTE, Bkcy.

2. Act of bankruptcy—Estoppel—Deed of assignment for benefit of creditors—Acquiescence by petitioning creditor—Notice of intention to suspend payment. —A creditor who has acquiesced in a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors is estopped from relying on its execution as an act of bankruptcy; or from relying on the circular convening a meeting at which a composition was voted, as a notice of an intention to suspend payment, so as to constitute another act of bankruptcy.

In re Stray, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 374, followed.—HAWLEY, RE, RIDGWAY, EX PARTE, Bkcy.

3. Act of bankruptcy—Assignment for benefit of creditors—Proof—Registered deed—Office copy—Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 57), ss. 6, 11.—Upon the hearing of a bankruptcy petition, the only evidence adduced to prove the act of bankruptcy alleged—that the debtor had executed an assignment of all his property for the benefit of his creditors—was an office copy of a deed, registered under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, purporting to be executed by the debtor.

Held, that the office copy was, by reason of the provisions of section 11 of the Act, sufficient primâ facie evidence of the execution of the registered deed by the debtor, and of its execution on the date appearing in the office copy.—SLATER v. SLATER, C.A.

4. Act of bankruptcy—Notice of intention of suspension of payment of debts—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section (1) (b).—Words, which in themselves do not amount to a notice of intention of suspension of payment of debts, cannot by reason of their effect on the mind of the person to whom they are addressed constitute such a notice so as to create an act of bankruptcy.—PHILLIPS, RE, THOMAS, EX PARTE, Bkcy.

5. Assets—Property of bankrupt—Choses in action —Assignment of interest in contract—Validity of assignment as against trustee.—A theatrical costumier entered into a contract to supply a theatre with dresses and keep them in repair during a certain period in consideration of certain weekly payments. She assigned all her interest in the contract to the plaintiff by way of mortgage, and she subsequently became bankrupt.

Held, that the assignment did not transfer to the plaintiff, as against the trustee in bankruptcy, any of the payments becoming due under the contract after the bankruptcy.

Decision of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., ante, p. 12, affirmed.—WILMOT v. ALTON, C.A., 113.

6. Assets—Relation back of trustee's title—Protected transaction—Charging order—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 44, 45, 46, 49—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 23.—A charging order under section 23 of the Partnership Act, 1890, being a proceeding in invitum, is not a "contract, dealing, or transaction" protected under section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (compare Courage v. O'Shea, 43 W. R. 232, [1895] 1 Ch. 325).

Where the proceeds of an execution have been ordered into court, the creditor cannot be held to have completed his execution by seizure and sale within the meaning of section 45 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.—WILD v. SOUTHWOOD, Bkcy., 224.

7. Banker—Banking account opened by debtor in name of wife—Payments out by bank to wife after receiving order—Intervention of trustee—Res judicata —Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44. —The bankrupt had opened a banking account in his wife's name before receiving order, all her cheques to be initialled by him. After receiving order the bank continued to honour the wife's cheques until the trustee moved for a declaration that the account was in fact the bankrupt's. The trustee, having obtained such declaration, moved again for the repayment by the bank of moneys paid out since receiving order.

Held, that the bank was bound to honour the wife's cheques until the trustee intervened; and that, had the trustee been entitled to have the amount of such cheques repaid to him, he ought to have asked for it upon his first motion.—MONTAGU, RE, WARD, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 384.

8. Bankruptcy notice—Issue of notice—Foreign debtor out of jurisdiction at date of issue—Subsequent return—Service in England—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g); s. 6, sub-section 1 (d).—A bankruptcy notice was issued under section 4, sub-section 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, against a debtor who was a foreign subject and out of the jurisdiction, and who, at the date of the issue of the notice, had not "ordinarily resided or had a dwelling-house or place of business in England" within the preceding year. He subsequently returned within the jurisdiction, and whilst there was served with the bankruptcy notice.

Held, that the issue of the bankruptcy notice was good, and could not be set aside.—CLARK, RE, BEYER, EX PARTE, C.A., 118.

9. Bankruptcy notice — Service — Partnership — Receiver and manager appointed by the court—Service of notice on receiver—Construction of rule 260 of General Rules of 1886, 1890.—A bankruptcy notice in respect of a judgment debt against a partnership cannot be served under rule 260 of the Bankruptcy General Rules of 1886, 1890, upon a person who has been appointed receiver and manager of the partnership business by order of the court in an action for dissolution of the partnership. The words "person having the control or management of the partnership business" mean a person having such control or management by the authority of the partners, and acting as their servant or agent. —FLOWERS & Co., RE, WARE, EX PARTE, C.A., 118.

10. Beneficed clergyman—Sequestration of income of benefice—Discharge of bankrupt—Continuance of sequestration.—On the application of the trustee in bankruptcy of a beneficed clergyman of the Church of England, the bishop of the diocese issued a sequestration of the income of the living, by virtue of which a portion was paid to the debtor while performing the duties of the benefice under order of the bishop, and the residue, after paying thereout the costs and expenses of the sequestration, was handed over to his trustee in bankruptcy. Subsequently the debtor obtained an order of discharge, the whole of his property available for dividend, other than the moneys obtained by means of the sequestration, having been realized and distributed, but the sequestration was not relaxed by the bishop, the trustee in bankruptcy having refused to take any steps to obtain the relaxation on the ground that the bankruptcy had not been closed, that a dividend of only 8s. 9d. in the pound had been paid, and that the sequestration ought not to be relaxed until the whole of the debts were satisfied. In an action by the debtor against the trustee in bankruptcy for an injunction to restrain him from receiving the residue of the income of the benefice, a declaration that the debtor was entitled after his discharge to receive the income, and an order on the trustee in bankruptcy to take steps to obtain the relaxation of the sequestration,

Held, that the order of discharge did not entitle the debtor to the income of his benefice, and the action was dismissed.—LAWRENCE v. ADAMS, Ch.D. North, J.

11. Bill of sale—Trade goods—Order and disposition of the bankrupt with consent and permission of the true owner—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 7—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44.—The construction of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 44, is unaffected by the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, and the possession by the bankrupt of goods used in trade, which he has assigned by a bill of sale, under circumstances such as to raise a reputation of ownership, is a possession by the bankrupt with the consent and permission of the true owner.—GINGER, RE, LONDON UNIVERSAL BANK, EX PARTE, Bkcy.

12. Composition with creditors—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), ss. 125, 126—Default—Determination of deed—Right of creditors to prove in subsequent bankruptcy of the debtor—Statute of Limitations.—Creditors accepted a deed of composition in 1881, determinable by the trustees upon default. Default was made, and the debtor became bankrupt in 1889, and the trustee of the deed determined it in 1896. The creditors then proved in the 1889 bankruptcy.

Held, that they were entitled to prove, and were not barred by the Statute of Limitations, as the deed of composition was to be treated as an acknowledgment taking the debt out of the statute. —STOCK, RE, AMOS, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 480.

13. Costs—Security for—Appeal from receiving order—Application to increase security for costs—"Special circumstances"—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 131.—Where a debtor appeals from a receiving order made against him and lodges in court the sum of £20 prescribed by rule 131 as security for the costs of the appeal, the fact that the respondent's costs of the appeal out of pocket will alone exceed £20 is not a special ground for increasing the amount of the deposit.

In re McHenry, 17 Q. B. D. 351, distinguished.—PHILLIPS, RE, TREBOETH BRICK CO., EX PARTE, Bkcy.

14. Discharge—Suspension—Exercise of discretion—Right to review—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 8.—Suspension of discharge for five years is a severe sentence which should be reserved for very bad cases.—SWABEY v. SWABEY, Bkcy.

15. Fraudulent preference—Bill of exchange—Payment of overdue acceptance—Onus of proof—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 48.—When a bill of exchange is not presented for payment at maturity, but is held over at the request of the acceptor and subsequently paid, such a payment is not within the principle of In re Clay & Sons, (1895) 3 Manson 31, and may be a fraudulent preference within section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

When a trustee in bankruptcy proves that the debtor was insolvent at the time when he made the payment that is impeached as a fraudulent preference, the onus of proof shifts, and the party supporting the payment must show that it was not made with the view of preferring him.—EATON, RE, VINEY, EX PARTE, Bkcy.

16. Fraudulent preference—Creditor—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 37, 48.—B. gave the debtor his accommodation acceptance for £20, which the debtor discounted at his bankers. Within three months of the presentation of the petition the debtor paid in £20 to his bankers to meet the bill.

Held, that the payment was a fraudulent preference of B.; for though he was not actually a creditor at the date of the receiving order, he would have been one had it not been for such payment.—PAINE, RE, REED, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 190.

17. *Fraudulent preference — Non-trader — Postnuptial settlement of settlor's own property—Limitation to settlor for life determinable on alienation—*Bonâ fide *purchaser for valuable consideration—Defeating and delaying creditors—*13 Eliz. c. 5—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47, subsection 1.—A settlor who was entitled under the will of his father to a sum of £12,000 on attaining his majority, and a further sum on the death of his mother, made the day before coming of age a postnuptial settlement of all his interest under his father's will, upon trust to pay the income to himself for life or until he should charge the same, and then upon the determination of his interest upon trust for his wife. At the time of executing this settlement a sum of £3,000 was expressly set aside for the payment of debts incurred during his minority. The settlor was a man of very extravagant habits, and the members of his family were anxious that his property should be made secure from the claims of future creditors. Acting on the advice of counsel, the settlor's mother and brother became parties to the settlement, and the mother covenanted during her life to pay him £50 a year, and his brother £25 a year repayable with 4 per cent. compound interest on the death of his mother.

Held, that the settlement was a settlement for valuable consideration, and that notwithstanding the fact that the consideration was given for the express purpose of protecting the settlor's property from the claims of future creditors, for the benefit of the settlor, his wife and family, it was not intended to defeat and delay creditors.—TETLEY, RE, JEFFERY, EX PARTE, Bkcy.

18. Life interest — Forfeiture on bankruptcy — Colonial bankruptcy—English domicil—Property not "vested in or payable to" colonial trustee.—A colonial bankruptcy, where the debtor still retains his English domicil, will not of itself be sufficient to work a forfeiture of his life interest under an English will determinable on his becoming bankrupt or doing or suffering something whereby his interest, if belonging absolutely to him, would become vested in, or payable to, some other person or persons.

In re Blithman, L. R. 2 Eq. 23, 14 W. R. Dig. 51, followed.—HAYWARD v. HAYWARD, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 439.

19. Partnership—Infant partner—Bankruptcy of adult and solvency of infant partner—Infant partner not entitled to administer the partnership assets—Mis- application of assets by liquidator — Dealing with liquidator with knowledge of misapplication.—The rule which allows the solvent partner of a firm which has been dissolved by the bankruptcy of one of its members to administer and liquidate the partnership assets is a mere rule of administration, and has no application where such solvent partner is an infant.

The liquidator only holds the partnership assets upon trust for the purpose of discharging the partnership liabilities, and whoever deals with the liquidator with a knowledge of a misapplication of those assets must account for any part of the estate he may have received.

Quære, when the solvent partner is an infant the court may appoint his next friend to act as liquidator of the partnership assets.—BEAUCHAMP, RE, CARR, EX PARTE, Bkcy.

20. Pensions—Officer retired from the Army—Appropriation of pay or salary—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 53, sub-sections 1, 2.—An officer who has retired from the Army with permission, and who is placed on the reserve list and receives retired pay under Article 1057 of the Royal Warrant, 1887, is in receipt of a salary or income within the meaning of sub-section 2, and not within sub-section 1 of section 53 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and therefore, in the event of his bankruptcy, the court may order so much of such pay as it thinks just to be distributed amongst the creditors without obtaining the consent of the chief officer of the department under which the pay is enjoyed, as required by sub-section 1.

Sub-section 1 relates to the case where a bankrupt is in receipt of pay for services which he is still rendering, while sub-section 2 relates to the case where he is in receipt of pay for services which he has already performed.—WARD, RE, WARD, EX PARTE, C.A., 329.

21. Practice—Appeals—Date of receiving order made on appeal.—When an appeal against a refusal to grant a receiving order is allowed, the receiving order shall date from the day of the hearing of the petition in the court below.—RAATZ, RE, CARLHIAN, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 480.

22. Practice—Equitable execution—Appointment of receiver—Jurisdiction—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section (8)—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 93—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 93.—The Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver by way of equitable execution for the purpose of enforcing orders of the court for the payment of money; but such jurisdiction should rarely be exercised.—GOUDIE RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 80.

23. Principal and surety—Indemnity—Composition of principal—Certificate in bankruptcy—Debtor and creditor.—C. being indebted to H. in an unascertained sum accepted a bill for £64 drawn by H. H. negotiated the bill with a bank. Subsequently the amount due by C. to H. was ascertained and paid by C., and H. thereupon undertook to indemnify C. against all liability on the bill. H. carried an arrangement with his creditors, paying 4*s.* in the £, and obtained his certificate of conformity. The bank proved in the arrangement for their debt, and received the dividend, but C. had no notice of the arrangement proceedings. The bank then sued C. on his acceptance for the balance due on the bill, giving credit for the dividend received. C. paid the bank, and then brought an action against H. upon the indemnity to recover the amount so paid to the bank.

Held, that C. had no right of action against H. —CAREY v. HARPER, C.A. (Ir.).

24. Proof—Agreement to allow discount—Expiration of period of credit—Bankruptcy Act, 1883, Schedule II., r. 8.—D. was a retailer of beer, and traded for some time with C. & Co. During that time they had invariably allowed him 20 per cent. off invoices when settled in full. On the invoices it was stated that no discount would be allowed unless the account was settled in three months, but in the case of D. it had been allowed whenever the account was settled. The whole of the claim of C. & Co. being more than three months overdue, in October, 1896, D. made an assignment to the defendants of all his property as trustees to administer the estate under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. This was an action to recover the dividend on the difference between the full invoice price and the price with the discount deducted, as a dividend had only been paid on the latter. The defendants contended that they need only pay the former owing to Schedule II., r. 8, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and the county court judge was of that opinion. The plaintiffs appealed.

Held, that the rule applied, and that the judge was right.—CHAMBERS v. GUNSTONE, Q.B.D.

25. Proof—Composition—Amendment of proof—Liability of guarantors—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 3.—A scheme provided for the payment of 7s. 6d. in the £ to the creditors on the amount of their unsecured debts by three instalments of 2s. 6d. each. The trustees under the scheme guaranteed the composition by the deposit of their promissory notes for 7s. 6d. in the £ on the amount of the unsecured debts proved at the date of the approval of the scheme.

After two instalments had been paid a creditor whose securities had fallen in value claimed to raise his proof from £285 to £611, and also to be entitled to the benefit of the guarantee on the larger amount.

Held, by Vaughan Williams, J., that he was entitled to have his proof admitted for the larger amount; but that the guarantee of the trustees was limited to their liability on the promissory notes they had signed, and that there was no further contractual or statutory obligation which could be enforced against them.

The Court of Appeal (Lord Esher, M.R., A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) affirmed this decision.—MORTER, RE, NICHOLLS, EX PARTE, C.A., 593.

26. Proof—Partnership—Loan to trader—Fixed weekly payment out of profits—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 2, sub-section 3 (d); s. 3.—J. advanced £500 to the bankrupt under an agreement which gave J. the sum of £3 per week out of the profits of the bankrupt's business, if any, and £3 per week as payment for his services. Further, he was to have for seven months from the date of the loan a large control over the business, and the option of entering into partnership with the bankrupt. He never exercised this option, and proved in the bankruptcy for the £500.

Held, that, by the terms of the agreement, he was not a partner of the bankrupt, but that the loan was a loan to a trader within section 2, sub-section 3 (d), of the Partnership Act, 1890, and must be postponed until all other creditors of the bankrupt were paid in full.—YOUNG, RE, JONES, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 96.

27. Proof — Principal and surety — Joint and several promissory note—Payment at maturity by surety—Interest—Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), s. 5—Rule 20, Schedule II., of Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52).—A claim for interest on the amount of a joint and several promissory note paid by a surety at maturity is a claim on an instrument in writing, viz., on the promissory note, within the meaning of rule 20 of the rules of the 2nd schedule of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, which embodies the provisions of section 28 of the Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42).—EVANS, RE, DAVIES, EX PARTE, Bkcy.

28. Proof — Secured creditor — Amendment of valuation of security—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Schedule II., rr. 11, 12 (a), 13.—By the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, Schedule II., r. 11: "If a secured creditor does not either realize or surrender his security, he shall . . . state in his proof . . . the value at which he assesses it."

By rule 12 (a): "Where a security is so valued, the trustee may at any time redeem it on payment of the assessed value."

By rule 13: "Where a creditor has so valued his security, he may at any time amend the valuation and proof on showing . . . that the security has . . . increased in value."

The creditor in this case stated in his proof the value at which he assessed his security. The security increased in value, and the trustee tendered to the creditor the amount at which he had assessed it. The creditor refused the offer, and moved to amend the valuation and proof. The trustee opposed, on the ground that he had redeemed the security by tender of its assessed value.

Held, that tender was not equivalent to payment; therefore the security had not been redeemed, and the creditor still had a right to amend.—NEWTON, RE, NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 63.

29. Purchase by a partner of a member of the committee of inspection of part of the bankrupt's estate—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), r. 316.—A sale by the trustee in bankruptcy of part of the estate to a partner of one of the members of the committee of inspection cannot be set aside as being either directly or indirectly a sale to a member of the committee of inspection within rule 316; nor can it be set aside as being contrary to the earlier practice in bankruptcy laid down in Ex parte Moore, 30 W. R. 123, which did not allow a trustee to sell any part of the estate to his own partner.—GALLARD, RE, GALLARD, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 556.

30. Receiving order—Debtor an undischarged bankrupt—No assets—Discretion of court—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 5, 7, sub-section 3.—A debtor, against whom a bankruptcy petition was presented, was an undischarged bankrupt, and the court came to the conclusion that there were no assets, and no probability of any assets, available for distribution in a second bankruptcy.

Held, that, as the only effect of making a receiving order would be a waste of money in costs, the court would, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse to make a receiving order.—BETTS, RE, BETTS, EX PARTE, C.A., 98.

31. Receiving order—Petitioning creditor's debt—Bills of exchange—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 6 (1) (b).—When a creditor has taken bills from a debtor in lieu of payment, and that debtor commits an act of bankruptcy, the creditor is thereupon entitled to treat the bills as dishonoured, and may present a petition in bankruptcy upon the original debt.—RAATZ, RE, RAATZ, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 666.

32. Receiving order — Refusal to make order — "Sufficient cause"—Destruction of bankrupt's assets by bankruptcy—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 7, sub-section 3.—The fact that the assets of the debtor are likely to be absorbed in the costs of the bankruptcy is not "sufficient cause" for refusing to make a receiving order within section 7, sub-section 3, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883: "If the court . . . is satisfied that the debtor is able to pay his debts, or that for other sufficient cause no order ought to be made, the court may dismiss the petition."

Ex parte Betts, In re Betts, ante, p. 98, [1897] 1 Q. B. 50, distinguished.—JUBB, RE, BURMAN, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 479.

33. Set-off — Marine insurance — Bankruptcy of underwriter—Insurance brokers—Claim by trustee against brokers for salvage—Right of brokers to set off unpaid losses.—An underwriter carried on an underwriting business with insurance brokers, who effected policies of marine insurance with the underwriter in their own names and for principals, to whom they guaranteed the solvency of the underwriter. The underwriter became bankrupt, and at the date of his bankruptcy he owed a balance to the brokers in respect of losses upon policies. After the bankruptcy the brokers received various sums by way of salvage upon losses which had been settled with the brokers by the underwriter before his bankruptcy. The trustee in the bankruptcy claimed from the brokers the sums so received as salvage, but the brokers claimed to set off against the salvage the larger sum due to them from the bankrupt for the unpaid losses.

Held, that the brokers were not entitled to set off their unpaid losses against the sums received by them as salvage after the bankruptcy.—ELGOOD v. HARRIS, Q.B.D., 158.

34. Voluntary conveyance—Making good breaches of trust—Revocable deed—Fraudulent preference—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 48.—A bankrupt, a few days before his bankruptcy, executed a deed conveying certain real estate to a trustee upon trust to raise thereout a certain sum and to apply the same in making good divers breaches of trust which he had committed as trustee of certain specified estates. The deed, which contained recitals that the bankrupt was desirous of executing the deed to rectify the breaches of trust and thereby to shield and exonerate himself from liability to proceedings to which he might be exposed, charged the real estate with the payment of the said sum, and conferred upon the trustee, his executors and administrators, power to appoint new trustees for the purpose of carrying into effect the trusts of the deed. The deed was not communicated to any of the beneficiaries or creditors.

Held, first, that the intention of the bankrupt was to execute a deed, which should be binding upon him, in favour of his cestuis que trustent, and that therefore the deed was irrevocable; and, secondly, that the deed was not a fraudulent preference within section 48 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

The bankrupt, before his bankruptcy, deposited certain share certificates in the boxes in his office in which the documents relating to the trust estates were usually kept, along with a memorandum that the certificates were deposited as security for the moneys owing to the trust estates. The trustee in bankruptcy claimed the certificates.

Held, that there was a valid appropriation of the certificates to the particular trusts, and that the trustee was not entitled to them.

Middleton v. Pollock, 2 Ch. D. 104, 24 W. R. Dig.

88, approved.—NEW'S TRUSTEE v. HUNTING, C.A., 577.

35. Voluntary settlement—Life interest defeasible on bankruptcy—Damages in divorce suit—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 33.—A settlement of damages obtained by the settlor in a divorce suit cannot be set aside as voluntary or as made with intent to defeat creditors.—STEPHENSON, RE, BROWN, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 416.

36. Voluntary settlement — Right of settlement trustees to surplus after payment of debts in full—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47 (1). —When a voluntary settlement is declared void as against the trustee in bankruptcy under section 47 (1), such avoidance only operates to the amount of the debts and costs of the bankruptcy, the surplus of the settled property reverts to the trustees of the settlement, subject to the trusts thereof.—SIMS, RE, SHEFFIELD, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 189.

See also Administration, 6; Criminal Law, 1; Married Woman, 1; Solicitor, 1; Vendor and Purchaser, 12.

BETTING.—See Gaming, 1-4.

BILL of EXCHANGE:—

1. Acceptance with blank spaces—Alteration—Forgery—Negligence—Stamp — Liability of acceptor—Bill of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 64, sub-section 1.—The acceptor of a bill of exchange does not become liable to an indorsee for value for a sum beyond the amount of his acceptance because the form of the document and the stamp used admit of a forgery in the hands of a dishonest person.

Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253, considered and commented upon.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 43 W. R. 331, [1895] 1 Q. B. 536, affirmed.—SCHOLFIELD v. LONDESBOROUGH, H.L., 124.

2. Cheque—Liability of bankers—Collecting crossed cheque for customer—Cheque applied to payment of overdraft—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 82.—A banker who receives payment of a crossed cheque for a customer is protected by section 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, notwithstanding that the account of the customer was overdrawn at the time when the cheque was paid in.—CLARKE v. LONDON AND COUNTY BANK, Q.B.D., 383.

3. Cheque—Payee a fictitious or non-existing person—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), ss. 2, 7, sub-section 3.—Cheques payable to the order of a fictitious or non-existing payee, signed by the drawer and handed by him to his clerk to be posted, must be considered as issued by the drawer, and should they be received by a bonâ fide holder for value the drawer will be liable on them as payable to bearer. And this is so although the drawer was unaware that the payee was a fictitious or non-existing person, and was misled by the fraud of his clerk, who stole the cheques and having indorsed them in the name of the fictitious or non-existing payee handed them to the holders for value.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 114, [1895] 2 Q. B. 707, affirmed.—CLUTTON v. ATTENBOROUGH, H.L., 276.

See also Banker, 1; Bankruptcy, 15, 31; Principal and Surety.

BILL of SALE:—

1. Affidavit of execution—Sworn before solicitor of grantee—Validity of bill—Practice—Ord. 38, r. 16—"Party."—Rule 16 of order 38 applies to affidavits of execution of bills of sale, and consequently, if an affidavit of execution be sworn before the solicitor acting for the grantee in the preparation of the bill, the bill of sale will be void.—BAKER v. AMBROSE, Q.B.D.

2. Attestation—Description of witness—Statutory form—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 9.—A bill of sale which does not contain the description of the attesting witness is void for non-compliance with the statutory form, even though the witness has no business or occupation.

Parsons v. Brand and Coulson v. Dixon, 38 W. R. 388, 25 Q. B. D. 110, followed.—SIMS v. TROLLOPE, C.A., 97.

3. Consideration — True statement—Consideration under £30—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 8, 12.—A bill of sale was expressed to be given in consideration of the sum of £13 12s. then owing by the grantors under a promissory note, and of £16 8s. then paid to the grantors, making together the sum of £30, the receipt of which the grantors acknowledged.

The promissory note, which was given in consideration of an advance of £10, was for £14 3s. 4d. payable by weekly instalments of 11s. 4d. each, the whole balance to become payable on default in payment of any instalment. At the date when the bill of sale was given the first instalment of 11s. 4d. had been paid, and the second instalment was not yet due. The sum of £16 8s. was in fact paid on the execution of the bill of sale.

Held, that the bill of sale was void, on the grounds—(1) that it did not truly set forth the consideration for which it was given within the meaning of section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882; (2) that it was given in consideration of a sum under £30 within the meaning of section 12.—DARLOW v. BLAND, C.A., 177.

4. Specific description—Substituted chattels—Plant—Cab-horse—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 6, sub-section 2.—Cab-horses are not "plant" within the meaning of section 6, sub-section 2, of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882.

Yarmouth v. France, 36 W. R. 281, 19 Q. B. D. 647, distinguished. — LONDON AND EASTERN COUNTIES LOAN CO. v. CREASEY, C.A., 497.

5. Validity—Registration—Defeasance — Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 10.—A bill of sale was given to secure repayment of £140 at the expiration of one month. At the same time the grantor of the bill of sale gave to the grantee a mortgage to secure repayment of £440, which included the £140, and covenanted to pay the same on demand.

Held, that the covenant in the mortgage was a defeasance of the bill of sale within the meaning of section 10 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878.—ELLIS v. WRIGHT, C.A.

See also Bankruptcy, 11; Landlord and Tenant, 4.

BUILDING SOCIETY:—

Alteration in rules—Ultra vires—Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42), ss. 16 (2) (4), 18.—In contracts between a building society and one of its members the rights will be governed by the rules from time to time in force, and the member will be bound by any alterations in the rules, provided that such alterations are within the power of the society to make. But where a society which was subject to the provisions of the Building Societies Act, 1874, in order to meet losses incurred by the society, passed a resolution under section 18 of the Act to alter the rules so that the amount due from the society to each member in respect of the shares held by him on a certain date should be taken to be thirty-three-fiftieths of the net amount paid on such shares,

Held, that the Act of 1874 contemplated that fully paid-up shares should be repaid, and that therefore a rule that fully paid-up shares should only be repaid in part was ultra vires, though in the event of a member wishing to withdraw it would be competent for the society to prescribe the terms of his withdrawal.—STROHMENGER v. FINSBURY BUILDING SOCIETY, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 700.

See also Inland Revenue, 8; Vendor and Purchaser, 2.

BYE-LAW.—See Local Government, 3, 4; Metropolis Management, 5.

CANADA, LAW of:—

1. British Columbia—Consent judgment with intent to delay creditors—Consolidated Statutes, c. 51, s. 1.—Under section 1 of chapter 51 of the Consolidated Statutes of British Columbia a consent judgment obtained by the respondent bank against the insolvent respondent tramway company, with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the latter, was held to be null and void against them. So long as the intent is proved it is immaterial whether consent was given under pressure.—EDISON GENERAL ELECTRIC CO. v. WESTMINSTER AND VANCOUVER TRAMWAY CO., P.C.

2. British Columbia — Mines and minerals — Precious metals—Free miner's certificate—Construction—Law of British Columbia—Act 47 Vict. c. 14, s. 3—Act 54 Vict. c. 26.—By section 3 of the British Columbia Act (47 Vict. c. 14), land was granted to the Dominion Government, the appellant company's predecessor in title, "including all mines, minerals, and substances whatsoever thereupon, therein, and thereunder."

Held, in an action for wrongful ejectment by the holder of a free miner's certificate under the "British Columbia Placer Mining Act, 1891" (54 Vict. c. 26), applicable to a part of the land granted, that he was entitled to mine for gold and other precious metals thereon, the above words not being sufficiently precise to transfer to the appellants' predecessor the right of the provincial legislature to administer the precious metals in the lands assigned.—ESQUIMALT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY CO. v. BAINBRIDGE, P.C.

3. Manitoba—Dominion railway—Section capable of sale—Jurisdiction of provincial court—Part of section outside jurisdiction of court—Construction of mortgage—Revenues—Practice—Issues not raised in courts below.—In a suit by the appellants, being mortgagees of a division of 180 miles of the respondents' railway and of its revenues subject to working expenses, for a sale of the division and for a receiver and other relief, Held, (1) that this division of 180 miles is by the law of Canada applicable to the railway a section capable of sale in its entirety, but that the provincial court had no power to order a sale, part of the section being within and part without its jurisdiction; (2) that so long as the railway was worked as a whole the revenues of the division are subject along with other revenues to the working expenses of the whole line, and that the receiver was only entitled to the net earnings of the division so ascertained.

Their lordships declined to hear argument as to the validity of the mortgage or of the power of sale, or of the mortgagees' right of entry, the pleadings and evidence not raising those issues, and the courts below not having adjudicated thereon.—GREY v. MANITOBA AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. OF CANADA, P.C.

4. Nova Scotia—Provincial Parliament—Immunity of members—Revised Statutes, 5th series, c. 3.—The Nova Scotia House of Assembly has statutory power to declare that wilful disobedience to attend the House in reference to a libel on its members is a breach of privilege, and can punish that breach by imprisonment.

In an action for assault and imprisonment against members of the Assembly who had voted for the plaintiff's imprisonment,

Held, that the sections of the Local Revised Statutes, 5th series, c. 3, which create the jurisdiction of the House and indemnify its members against legal proceedings in respect of their votes therein, are a complete answer to an attempt to enforce civil liability for acts done and words spoken in the House. Those sections, except so far as they may be deemed to confer any criminal jurisdiction, otherwise than as incident to the protection of members, are intra vires of the local Legislature, as relating to the constitution of the province within the meaning of section 72 of the British North America Act, 1867, or under the authority of section 5 of the Colonial Laws Validity Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 63), which was recognized by the Act of 1867, s. 88.

Barton v. Taylor, 11 App. Cas. 197, distinguished.—FIELDING v. THOMAS, P.C.

5. Ontario—Brewers' licences—Revised Statutes of Ontario, c. 194, s. 51, sub-section 2—Direct taxation—British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3), s. 92, sub-sections 2, 9—Powers of provincial Legislature.—Held, that the Liquor Licence Act (Revised Statutes of Ontario, c. 194), s. 51, sub-section 2, which requires every brewer and distiller to obtain a licence thereunder to sell wholesale within the province, is intra vires of the provincial Legislature—

(a) as being direct taxation within sub-section 2 of section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867.

Bank of Toronto v. Lambe, (1887) 12 App. Cas. 575, followed.

(b) as comprised within the term "other licences" in sub-section 9 of the same section.—BREWERS' ASSOCIATION OF ONTARIO v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF ONTARIO, P.C.

6. Ontario—British North America Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3), ss. 109, 111, 112—Indian reserves—Liability to pay annuities in respect thereof.—By treaties in 1850 the Governor of Canada, as representing the Crown and the provincial government, obtained the cession from the Ojibeway Indians of lands occupied as Indian reserves, the beneficial interest therein passing to the provincial government, together with the liability to pay to the Indians certain perpetual annuities.

Held, that, these lands being within the limits of the Province of Ontario, created by the British North America Act, 1867, the beneficial interest therein vested under section 109 in that province.

The perpetual annuities having been capitalized on the basis of the amounts specified in the treaties, the Dominion assumed liability in respect thereof under section 111. Thereafter the amounts of these annuities were increased according to the treaties.

Held, that liability for these increased amounts was not so attached to the ceded lands and their proceeds as to form a charge thereon in the hands of the province, under section 109. They must be paid by the Dominion with recourse to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec conjointly, under sections 111 and 112; in the same manner as the original annuities. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF CANADA v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF ONTARIO, P.C.

7. Railways—Imported steel rails—Street railways—Tramways — Law of Canada — Construction — Dominion Act (50 & 51 Vict. c. 39), s. 1, item 88; s. 2, item 173.—Although there may be in various Canadian Acts and for other purposes substantial distinctions between railways or railway tracks and street railways and tramways, yet for the purpose of separating free and dutiable articles, such distinction is not maintained in Canadian Act 50 & 51 Vict. c. 39 and its three predecessors.

According to the true construction of that Act (see section 1, item 88, and section 2, item 173), the question whether imported steel rails are taxed or free depends solely upon their weight, not upon the character of the railway track for which they are intended.—TORONTO RAILWAY CO. v. REGINA, P.C.

CANAL:—

Special Act—Owners of adjacent and subjacent minerals—Right to support—Compensation—Statutory company—Undertaking not to sue—Ultra vires.—Where the Act of Parliament under which a canal was made and maintained contains provisions as to working the adjacent and subjacent minerals similar to or identical with the provisions of the Acts in the cases of Knowles v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., 14 App. Cas. 248, and Chamber Colliery Co. v. Rochdale Cana Co., [1895] A. C. 564, the owner of the adjacent minerals may work them without regard to the security of the canal, notwithstanding the fact that he is also owner of subjacent minerals. And if both parties admit that any damage which might result to the canal from the working of the subjacent minerals would be very trifling compared with the amount of the compensation payable to the mine owners in case they were left unworked, and if the canal owners give an undertaking that they will not claim any damages by reason of the working of such subjacent mines, and at their own expense will repair any damage thereby caused to the canal, the court will refuse to make a declaration that the mine owners are entitled to such compensation upon leaving the subjacent mines unworked.

Semble, that such an undertaking is not ultra vires the canal company.

Decision of the Court of Appeal in Chamber Colliery Co. v. Rochdale Canal Co., [1894] 2 Q. B. 632, 43 W. R. Dig. 119, followed.—NEW MOSS COLLIERY CO. v. MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY CO.—Ch.D. Byrne, J., 493.

CAPE COLONY, LAW of:—

Pondoland Annexation Act, 1894, No. 5, s. 2—Construction—Extent of legislative power conferred on the governor—Illegal proclamation of arbitrary arrest, conviction, and punishment.—Section 2 of the Pondoland Annexation Act, 1894, gives authority to the governor to add to the existing laws, already proclaimed and in force in the territories annexed, such laws as he "shall from time to time by proclamation declare to be in force in such territories."

Held, that this section did not, according to its true construction, authorize the governor to make new laws, but only to transplant to the new territories and enact there such laws as were already in force in other parts of the colony.

In 1895 the governor, "in virtue of powers vested in me by law," including the Act above mentioned, issued a proclamation which set aside the established law of Pondoland with respect to arrest, trial, conviction, and punishment, and condemned the respondent untried and unheard to imprisonment, the place and duration of his captivity being left to the will of the governor.

Held, that the proclamation was ultra vires of any authority conferred upon the governor by section 2, or of any authority at all except that of an irresponsible sovereign or a supreme Legislature. —SPRIGG v. SIGCAU, P.C.

CERTIORARI:—

Thames Watermen — Court of company of — Judicial Order—Applications for licences—Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. cxxxiii.), s. 56 (Local).—Certiorari will not lie to remove an order, made by the court of the Company of Watermen and Lightermen of the River Thames under section 56 of the Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act, 1859 (Local), granting a licence to act as a waterman or lighterman within the limits of the Act.—REG. v. COMPANY OF WATERMEN AND LIGHTERMEN OF THE RIVER THAMES, Q.B.D.

CEYLON, LAW of:—

Will—Jus accrescendi—Fidei commissum.—The law of fidei commissum is not altered by Ceylon Ordinances No. 21 of 1844, No. 10 of 1863, and No. 7 of 1871.

Two spouses by joint will directed that after the death of the survivor certain lands should be created fidei commissum, so as not to be sold, aliened, or mortgaged, and that the "three children of their deceased daughter and their surviving daughter shall divide into two and inherit according to custom, and they and their descendants possess without interruption."

Held, that, by the true construction of the will, the moiety devised to the three grandchildren was burdened with one fidei commissum, and not with three fidei commissa separately applicable to the three shares. Accordingly, one-third share of such moiety did not vest absolutely in each institute so as to pass to his heir-at-law not in the direct line of descent from the testators; but the whole vested in the three institutes jointly with benefit of survivorship and with substitution of their descendants.—HAMINI v. TILLEKERATNE, P.C.

CHARITY:—

1. Commissioners—Scheme under Endowed Schools Acts—Recommendation of woman as almoner—Refusal of Commissioners to appoint—Mandamus—Discretionary power of court to grant prerogative writ—Alternative remedy—Christ's Hospital Foundation Administration Scheme, 1890, clauses 19 and 143.—An application by the London School Board for a mandamus directing the Charity Commissioners to determine under clause 43 of Christ's Hospital Administration Scheme, 1890, the validity of the proceedings of the governors of the hospital in refusing to appoint as almoner a lady nominated by the applicants, was refused, the court being of opinion that mandamus was not the only and more convenient means of remedy open to the applicants. —REG. v. CHARITY COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 336.

2. Friendly society—Poverty—Failure of objects—Lapse—Cy-près.—A testator who died in 1893 bequeathed a legacy of £500 to a friendly society. This society was formed in 1800 for the relief of sick and distressed members, their widows and children. It was supported by subscriptions of members and outside donations, and was not maintained on strictly actuarial principles. Poverty was a necessary qualification to obtain relief. At the testator's death only one member and three annuitants were alive, and two of the latter had since died. The annuity of the last annuitant was fully covered by funds of the society in court.

Held, that the society was a charity, and was in existence at the date of the testator's death; that the legacy had not lapsed, and was applicable cy-près for charitable purposes.

Cunnack v. Edwards, ante, p. 99, [1896] 2 Ch. 679, distinguished.—BUCK, RE, BRUTY v. MACKEY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 106.

3. Will—Option to invest on Government or rea securities—Exercise of option to invest on real securities—Validity of gift.—The validity of a charitable gift by will is not affected by the trustees exercising an option to invest in real security.

A testatrix disposed separately of all such parts of her personal estate "as could not by law be devoted to charitable purposes." She then gave the residue of her personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert it into money, invest the proceeds on Government or real securities, pay the income to her daughter for life, and after her death to apply the capital for the benefit of certain charities. The trustees during the life of the tenant for life invested out of the pure personalty two sums of £350 and £100 in real securities, and they remained so invested at the death of the tenant for life.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing the decision of Kekewich, J.), that the charitable gifts were not made pro tanto invalid by the investment in real securities.

In re Corcoran, 62 L. J. Ch. 267, distinguished.—HAMILTON, RE, CADOGAN v. FITZROY, C.A.

4. Will — Gift to purchase advowsons — Valid charitable gift—General charitable intention.—A testator gave the proceeds of conversion of his residuary, real, and personal estate to special trustees upon certain trusts for the promotion of "true Protestant and Church of England principles," which he explained as being the principles known as Evangelical.

Held, upon the construction of the whole will, that there was such a general charitable intention as made the gift a good charitable gift, notwithstanding difficulties raised by the language in which the trusts were declared.

Semble, the trustees under such a will could be restrained by injunction from applying any of the trust property in the promotion of views inconsistent with those prescribed by the testator.

Decision of Romer, J., ante, p. 344, reversed.—HUNTER, RE, HOOD v. ATTORNEY GENERAL, C.A., 610.

5. Will—"Philanthropic" purpose—Bequest for "purposes charitable, philanthropic, or . . . " —Validity.—A testator having bequeathed a sum of money for "some one or more purposes charitable, philanthropic, or . . . ,"

Held, that the gift was to be read as for "purposes charitable or philanthropic"; but that the word "philanthropic" was wide enough to include purposes not "charitable" in the technical sense; and that therefore the gift failed as being too indefinite.

Decision of Stirling, J., 44 W. R. 344, affirmed. —MACDUFF v. MACDUFF, C.A., 154.

See also Friendly Society, 3; Mortmain; Rentcharge; Will, 4.

CHEQUE.—See Bankruptcy, 7; Bill of Exchange, 2, 3; Mortgage, 8.

COAL.—See Weights and Measures.

COMMON:—

Right of highway authority to take gravel—Order of justices—Discretion to make or refuse order—Commons Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 56), s. 20.—Under the Commons Act, 1876, s. 20, the justices to whom application is made for an order under the section have a discretion to make or refuse such order.—HAYES COMMON CONSERVATORS v. BROMLEY DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 207.

COMPANY:—

1. Articles of association—Annual general meeting—Dividend—Accounts.—The articles of a company provided for the submission of accounts up to a date within three months and reports thereon, the sanction of a dividend, and the transaction of the ordinary business at the annual general meeting.

Held, that a final dividend could not be sanctioned except at an annual general meeting at which accounts up to the prescribed date and reports thereon were submitted.—NICHOLSON v. RHODESIA TRADING CO., Ch.D. North, J.

2. Board of Trade—Inspector—Examination of affairs of company—Prohibition—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, and 61.—An examination into the affairs of a joint-stock company by an inspector appointed by the Board of Trade under section 56 of the Companies Act, 1862, is not a proceeding of such a nature that prohibition can lie in respect of it either to the Board of Trade or to the inspector.—GROSVENOR RAILWAY HOTEL CO., RE, C.A.

3. Capital—Reduction—Capital "in excess of the wants of the company"—Return to shareholders—Issue of debentures—Companies Acts, 1867 and 1877. —The court, upon the requirements of the Companies Act, 1867, ss. 13 and 14, being satisfied, confirmed a scheme of reduction under which a portion of the capital of a company was to be returned to the shareholders, although a part of the portion so returned was to be immediately borrowed from them by the company on debentures.—NIXON'S NAVIGATION CO., RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

4. Capital—Reduction of capital—Different classes of shareholders—Reduction of capital affecting class prejudicially—Alteration of voting rights.—The court sanctioned a reduction of capital notwithstanding that the voting powers of a class of shareholders was thereby affected.

Semble, now that Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. (No. 2), 13 W. R. 1059, 2 Dr. & Sm. 521, has been overruled by Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., ante, p. 321, In re Continental Union Gas Co., 7 T. L. R. 476, is no longer an authority. — COLMER, RE, Ch.D. Romer, J., 343.

5. Company incorporated for the benefit of one person — Debentures — Statutory requirements—Preponderance of one shareholder—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 6, 8.—By complying with the requirements of the Companies Act, 1862, any lawful business may be converted into a limited liability company, and it is immaterial that an overwhelming number of shares are held by one person (the vendor to the company), or that debentures were issued in part payment of the purchase-money, or that the object of incorporation was to prevent the creditors of the company from obtaining more than the statutory liability of the shareholders imposes.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (Broderip v. Salomon, 43 W. R. 612, [1895] 2 Ch. 323) reversed. —SALOMON v. SALOMON (BRODERIP v. SALOMON), H.L., 193.

6. Debentures — Charge on uncalled capital — Property—Liquidation.—Where a company having power to charge its uncalled capital, by a debenture charges "the undertaking and all the property of the company whatsoever and wheresoever, both present and future," such a charge does not include uncalled capital got in during liquidation.—STREATHAM AND GENERAL ESTATES CO., RE, Ch.D. Chitty, J., 105.

7. Debenture—Debenture stock certificate—Agent—Authority — Purchaser for value — Mortgagee.—A company applied to P., who had acted as its broker, for a loan of £3,000 on the security of £8,000 of its debenture stock, which was by the trust deed assignable free from equities. P. asked G. to lend £6,000 on the stock, and he consented to do so on the certificate for the £8,000 stock being deposited. After P. had communicated with the company, its secretary deposited as required a certificate under its seal stating that G. was the registered holder of £8,000 debenture stock of the company, and that the stock was only transferable by deed registered in the company's books. G. then paid £6,000 to P., who paid the company only £3,000.

Held, that, although the certificate was not a negotiable instrument, G. was entitled to assume that P. had full authority from the company to deal with it, and was not concerned to see that P. paid the £6,000 to the company; and that in an action to enforce the rights of the debenture stock-holders, G. could prove for £8,000 provided he did not receive dividends exceeding £6,000 and interest. — ROBINSON v. MONTGOMERYSHIRE BREWERY CO., Ch.D. Vaughan Williams, J.

8. Debentures — Floating security — Condition allowing company to carry on business until default for certain period—Subsequent issue of bonds—Priority.—A company issued debentures "by way of floating security," and subject to conditions, one of which was that, notwithstanding the charge, the company should be at liberty, for the purpose of its business, to deal with any part of its property until default should be made in payment of any interest thereby secured for a period of three months, or until the company should be wound up. After interest had been more than three months in arrear, but before the debenture-holders had taken any step to enforce their security, the company issued bonds covered by a trust deed, which recited the issue of the debentures and that default had been made in the payment of interest.

Held, that, although the three months' period of grace had elapsed before the issue of the bonds, yet the debentures then still remained a floating security only; and, consequently, that the bonds had priority over the debentures.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 166, [1895] 2 Ch. 551, affirmed.—GOVERNMENT STOCK INVESTMENT CO. v. MANILA RAILWAY CO., H.L., 353.

9. Debenture — Floating security — Foreclosure — Debenture-holders' action for foreclosure—Absence of one debenture-holder.—In a debenture-holders' action the court will not make an order for foreclosure where one of the debenture-holders has neither been made a party nor given his consent.

Sadler v. Worley, 42 W. R. 476, [1894] 2 Ch. 170, distinguished.—CONTINENTAL OXYGEN CO., RE, ELIAS v. CONTINENTAL OXYGEN CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 313.

10. Debenture — Floating security — Protection of security—Receiver—Manager.—Where a petition had been presented to wind up a company, and a holder of debentures of the company of the nature of a floating security moved, before any winding-up order had been made, for the appointment of a receiver and manager, although no such default had been made by the company in payment of interest as to cause the principal money to become payable,

Held, that, although the debentures had not crystallized, they were in jeopardy, and the court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver and manager. —VICTORIA STEAMBOATS CO., RE, SMITH v. WILKINSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 135.

11. Debenture—Interest—Statutes of Limitations—Debenture stock—Companies Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 118), ss. 22, 27—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4), c. 27, s. 3.—A railway company—incorporated by a special Act, authorizing it to issue debenture stock, bearing interest, subject to Part III. (which includes sections 22 and 27) of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863—in 1885 issued debenture stock, for which it gave certificates under its common seal, and also a warrant for interest under the signature of the secretary. The warrant was never presented for payment, and in 1896 the company went into voluntary liquidation under another Act.

Held, that, the liability being statutory, the period of limitation was twenty years, and the claim for interest mentioned in the warrant was therefore not statute-barred. — CORNWALL MINERALS RAILWAY CO., RE, Ch.D. Vaughan Williams, J.

12. Debentures—Payment by instalments—Specific performance of agreement—Damages.—The defendant applied for and was allotted sixteen debentures in the plaintiff company upon the terms that the amount thereof should be payable by instalments, and that the principal moneys secured should be repaid at a future named date. The defendant made default in the payment of the instalments.

Held, that specific performance of the agreement to pay the instalments would not be granted, and that the company was only entitled to such damages as had been suffered by reason of the defendant's default, and that as there was no evidence of any damage the company was entitled to nominal damages only.—SOUTH AFRICAN TERRITORIES v. WALLINGTON, C.A., 467.

13. Debenture-holder's action—Practice—Judgment—Certificate—Uncalled capital—Liability of plaintiff—Shareholder.—In an action against a limited company by one debenture-holder on behalf of himself and all other debenture-holders, the chief clerk may, under an inquiry directed by the judgment as to the property charged by the debentures, find what uncalled capital is due from the several shareholders (where uncalled capital is part of the security), notwithstanding that no calls can actually be made in such an action; and where the plaintiff is himself a shareholder and is found indebted in a sum of uncalled capital, he, being a party to the action, is bound by that finding, unless varied by the judge, the court having jurisdiction to decide in that action the question of the plaintiff's liability without leaving it to be decided by other proceedings.—MADELEY v. ROSS, SLEEMAN, & Co., Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

14. English company trading in colony—Preference and ordinary stockholders—Dividend duty imposed by Colonial Legislature—Incidence of duty.—An English company originally formed in 1841 by a contract of copartnership, and afterwards incorporated under the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1856, carried on business in a colony; and, under the powers conferred on it by its original contract of copartnership, created guaranteed 5 and 6 per cent. preference stock entitled to cumulative payment of interest in priority to its ordinary stock.

The Colonial Legislature imposed a "dividend duty" on the dividends and interest paid on the capital of the company employed in the colony.

Held, that the contract between the various classes of shareholders was an English contract, and therefore that an Act passed by the Colonial Legislature would not affect the rights of the preference stockholders not domiciled in the colony, and that, consequently, the preference stockholders were entitled to receive their interest in full, and that the duty thereon must be paid out of the general assets of the company.—SPILLER v. TURNER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 549.

15. Meeting—Adjournment—Chairman's authority—Articles giving power to adjourn—Leave to appeal.—Where the articles of association of a company provided that the chairman might, with the consent of the members present at any meeting, adjourn the same from time to time and from place to place in P.,

Held, that the chairman was not bound to adjourn the meeting, even though a majority of those present desired the adjournment.

Under the special circumstances of the case special leave to appeal was given at the hearing.—SALISBURY GOLD MINING CO. v. HATHORN, P.C., 591.

16. Meeting of shareholders—Special resolution—Proxies—Mode of counting votes—Show of hands—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 51—Blanks in proxy—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 80.—At a meeting of the shareholders of a company, the articles of which provided that every motion submitted to a general meeting should be decided, in the first instance, by a majority to be ascertained by a show of hands; that every member should have one vote for every share he should hold in the company; and that votes might be given either personally or by proxy, the chairman of the meeting refused to count proxies on taking votes by show of hands.

Held, that the chairman was right in so refusing.

In re Caloric Engine and Siren Fog Signals Co., 52 L. T. N. S. 846, approved.

In re Bidwell Brothers, 41 W. R. 363, [1893] 1 Ch. 603, overruled.

By a printer's error, the day and hour appointed for a meeting of shareholders had been omitted from the proxy which was sent to each shareholder with the notice convening the meeting. The secretary of the company, having discovered the error, sent a postcard to each member saying that, if the proxy had already been returned to him, he should assume that he had authority to fill in the blanks, and accordingly did so.

Held, that the proxies were valid, and had been duly stamped within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Decision of Chitty, J. (ante, p. 45, [1896] 2 Ch. 572), affirmed on both points.—ERNEST v. THE LOMA GOLD MINES, C.A., 86.

17. Memorandum of association—Alteration—Advertising petition—Advertising order on petition—Practice—Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890—Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, sub-section 3.—There is no established practice as to the advertising of the order made on a petition confirming a special resolution under the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, but the court has jurisdiction in its discretion to direct or dispense with advertisements of such an order.—LANCASTER BANKING CO., RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

18. Memorandum of association—Alteration of articles—Increase of capital—Preference shares—Rights of shareholders—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 12, 50, 51.—There is no condition implied in a memorandum of association that all shareholders are to be on an equality unless the memorandum itself shows the contrary.

Held, consequently, that a limited company, not being expressly prohibited from so doing by its memorandum of association, might, under section 12 of the Companies Act, 1862, make provision, either in its original articles of association or by alteration, under sections 50 and 51 of the same Act, of the original articles, for the increase of its capital by the issue of shares bearing a preferential dividend.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 46), reversed.

Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. (No. 2), 13 W. R. 1059, 2 Dr. & Sm. 521, overruled.—ANDREWS v. GAS METER CO., C.A., 321.

19. Prospectus—Contract to take shares—Rescission—Non-disclosure of material facts.—A person who has contracted to take shares in a company cannot avoid his contract on the ground that the prospectus did not set forth all the facts which were known to the directors, and which might induce a person to apply or not apply for shares. In order to avoid the contract, a misstatement or concealment of facts must be of such a character as to make the prospectus as it stands misleading.

Decision of Romer, J. (44 W. R. 664), affirmed.—MCKEOWN v. BOUDARD PEVERIL GEAR CO., C.A., 152.

20. Register of mortgages—Right of creditor to inspect and take copies—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 43.—A creditor of a company registered under the Companies Act, 1862, is entitled not only to inspect, but also to take copies of, the register of mortgages of the company kept in pursuance of section 43 of that Act.

Semble, should the addresses of the mortgagees have been also registered, these too can be copied.

Mutter v. Eastern, &c., Railway Co., 36 W. R. 401, 38 Ch. D. 92, considered.—NELSON v. ANGLO-AMERICAN LAND CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 171.

21. Shares—Contract—Acceptance of offer—Notice of such acceptance—Underwriting letter.—S. signed a letter addressed to A. whereby he undertook to underwrite, on or before the day after the day appointed for the closing of the list for subscriptions for shares—viz., the 20th of September, 1895—10,000 shares, or such less number as might be accepted by A., in the C. Co., and he thereby, in the event of his failing to comply with the terms therein contained, authorized A. as his agent, on his behalf and in his name, to apply for such shares.

On the 12th of September A. accepted the offer of S. for the whole 10,000 shares, but gave no notice of this acceptance to S. On the 29th of September A. applied in S.'s name to the C. Co. for 10,000 shares, and was allotted 9,000. On the 28th of September A. informed S. of this allotment, but S., on the 30th of September, repudiated his offer. S. had not paid any deposit money for the shares.

Held, (1) that A.'s authority to apply for shares in S.'s name only arose in case of failure by S. to apply for shares after he had been informed that his offer had been accepted, and the extent to which it had been accepted; that, S. not having been informed of the acceptance of his offer, A.'s authority never arose; and (2) that S. was not estopped from showing that A.'s authority had never arisen.

Decision of North, J. (ante, p. 227), reversed.

Ex parte Harrison, 69 L. T. N. S. 204, distinguished.—CONSORT DEEP LEVEL GOLD MINES, RE, STARK AND ELLISTON'S CASE, C.A., 420.

22. Shares—Contract—Authority to apply for shares—Authority coupled with an interest.—P. promoted a company for the purpose of purchasing from him and working a mining property. On the 21st of February, 1896, C. signed an underwriting letter addressed to P. by which he agreed, in consideration of a commission, to subscribe for 1,000 shares in the company, such number to be reduced according to the number of shares taken by the public. C. further agreed that the agreement and application should be irrevocable, and, notwithstanding any repudiation by him, should be sufficient to authorize P. to apply for shares on behalf of C. and the company to allot them. P. by letter accepted these terms. The company was incorporated on the 24th of March, and the subscription list was advertised to open on the 27th of March, and close on the 30th. On the 27th of March, C., who had applied for 1,000 shares, stopped the cheque he had given for the deposit, and on the 30th wrote to P. and to the secretary of the company repudiating the agreement. P., however, on the 2nd of April, applied on behalf of C. for 980 shares, which, in the events which had happened, was the number he was bound to take, according to the terms of the letter, and the company allotted these shares to C., and put him on the register in respect of them, Held (affirming the decision of Stirling, J.), that C. was rightly placed on the register, and was not entitled to have his name removed, for that the authority given to P. by the underwriting letter to apply for shares on behalf of C. was an authority coupled with an interest, and therefore not revocable.—HANNAN'S EMPRESS GOLD MINING AND DEVELOPMENT CO., RE, CARMICHAEL'S CASE, C.A.

23. Shares—Contract—Misrepresentation—Rectification—Payment—Adoption of contract—Delay.—A., a widow, applied for shares in a company connected with the manufacture of cycles, on the faith of the name Dunlop appearing in the prospectus. On finding that the person mentioned in the prospectus was not the Dunlop of the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Company, Limited, she, on the 23rd of May, wrote a letter repudiating her contract. On the 27th of May she paid £62 10s. on allotment, and on the 20th of June £125, payable within one month after allotment. On the 13th of July she served notice of motion to strike her name off the register of shareholders.

Held, that the applicant was entitled to rescind the contract on the ground that she was deceived by the use of the name Dunlop in the prospectus; but that by her delay and the payment of the two sums of money she had acted in a manner inconsistent with repudiation of the contract, and the motion must be dismissed with costs.—DUNLOP-TRUFFAULT CYCLE AND TUBE CO., RE, SHEARMAN'S CASE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

24. Shares—Contract—Payment in Cash—Promoters—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—Although an arrangement between promoters and a company that the former should sell property to be acquired by the latter for so much cash and so many shares is in contravention of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), still there may be an independent agreement on the part of the promoters to take so many shares presently payable in cash, and an independent agreement by the company to purchase the property for so much money down which would be perfectly legitimate, provided the shareholders are fully informed and a fair price is given.

Anything which would be sufficient evidence to support a plea of payment would be payment in cash within section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867.

Spargo's case, 21 W. R. 306, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 407, approved.—LAROCQUE v. BEAUCHEMIN, P.C. 639.

25. Shares—Contract—Registration of contract—New South Wales Companies Act, 1874, s. 57—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 89), s. 25.—The contract in writing to be filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies at or before the issue of shares under section 57 of the New South Wales Companies Act, 1874, and the 25th section of the Companies Act, 1867, so as to avoid the liability of payment in full on such shares, must be a document creating legal rights, duties, and obligations as between the parties to it. A mere resolution between certain persons interested in a property setting forth the manner in which they propose to put the property before the public is insufficient, though registered under the statute.

Hartley's case, 23 W. R. 203, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 157, considered and explained.—SMITH v. BROWN, P.C., 132.

26. Shares—Contract—Underwriting—Application for shares on behalf of underwriter—Condition precedent—Invalid allotment of shares—Rectification of register—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 35.—An underwriting letter, in the ordinary form, for shares in a company in course of formation, addressed to the promoters, contained a clause whereby the underwriter agreed that he would sign and lodge with the promoters, whenever called upon, the necessary application for the number of shares underwritten, with cheque for the deposit attached thereto, and that, if he failed to do so, the agreement, which was irrevocable on his part, should, notwithstanding any withdrawal on his part, or repudiation of his responsibility thereunder, be sufficient to authorize the promoters, if and when they thought fit, in his name to apply for, and the directors of the company to allot to him, the said shares, either with or without any further application either from the underwriter or the promoters for the said shares.

Held, that, assuming that the offer contained in the underwriting letter was accepted by the promoters before it was repudiated, and that consequently a binding contract between the underwriter and them was constituted, yet, a request by the promoters to the underwriter to apply for shares was a condition precedent to the obligation on his part to sign and lodge the application for the shares with a cheque for the deposit; and that, without such a request and a failure to comply with it, the promoters had no authority to make any application for shares in the underwriter's name.—BULTFONTEIN SUN. DIAMOND MINE, RE, C.A.

27. Shares — Issue of shares at a discount — Winding-up—Adjustment of rights of contributories inter se—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89) —Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), ss. 24, 25.—Under no circumstances, and for no purpose whatever, can a company incorporated with limited liability under the Companies Acts issue shares at a discount, or on any terms relieving the shareholders from payment in full. The issue of such shares does not therefore constitute a contract between shareholders, even for the purpose of adjusting their rights among themselves, although this is expressly authorized by the articles of association, and the creditors and costs of winding up have been provided for.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 43 W. R. 117, [1895] 1 Ch. 255, affirmed; Lord Herschell dissenting.

Per Lord Davey.—The obligation to contribute to the assets of the company in one way or another the nominal amount of the shares is part of the statutory constitution of every joint-stock company limited by shares embodied in its memorandum of association, and therefore not alterable by the company or by the unanimous consent of all the shareholders.—WELTON v. SAFFERY (RAILWAY TIMETABLES, &c., CO., RE), H.L., 508.

28. Shares—Shares paid up in advance of calls—Payment of interest out of capital as such prepayments —Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 14, Table A, clause 7.—Where one of the articles of association of a company authorized the directors to receive payment from any shareholder of the whole or any part of the amount remaining unpaid on any shares held by him upon such terms as they thought fit, and also to pay out of the capital of the company interest on sums paid up on shares in advance of calls,

Held, that the above article, being in substance Table A, clause 7, of the Companies Act, 1862. was not ultra vires; that advances obtained from shareholders under it were in the nature of a debt due to an ordinary creditor of the company; and, consequently, it was lawful to pay the stipulated interest out of capital, though the company had made no profits.

Decision of Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 257, [1896] 1 Ch. 397, affirmed.—LOCK v. QUEENSLAND INVESTMENT CO., H.L., 65.

29. Shares—Transfer—Estoppel—Certification on transfer.—Where a transfer for value purporting to relate to fully-paid shares in a company bears on the face of it a certification by the secretary of the company that the share certificate has been lodged with the company, the certification amounts to a statement that a certificate of the shares described in the transfer has been lodged, and the company is estopped from denying that the shares are fully paid up, even though no certificate has been lodged with the secretary or the certificate lodged does not say whether the shares are fully paid up or not.

Bishop v. Balkis Consolidated Co., 25 Q. B. D. 512, observed upon.—CONCESSIONS TRUST, RE, MCKAY'S CASE, Ch.D. Vaughan Williams, J.

30. Winding up—Assets—Substratum of business gone—Special object stated in memorandum of association—General objects ancillary thereto—Failure of special object—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 79, sub-section 5.—Where a company puts in the forefront of its memorandum of association a special object, as to which definite information can be obtained by intending subscribers for shares, and the subsequent clauses of the memorandum contain a list of general objects, the reasonable mode of construing the memorandum in ordinary cases is to say that the object first stated is the paramount object of the company, and that the other objects are ancillary and subservient to that object.

Where, therefore, the paramount object of a company was to work gold mines in the colony of West Australia, the promoters of the company having in view one particular mine near Coolgardie in that colony, although the memorandum of association specified as one of the objects of the company to acquire and work mines "in West Australia or elsewhere," the acquiring and working a mine in the colony of Victoria was held not to be a carrying out of the objects of the company; and the real object for which the company was formed having therefore failed, and its substratum having gone, an order for winding up the company was made.

In re The Haven Gold Mining Co, 20 Ch. D. 151, approved. — COOLGARDIE CONSOLIDATED GOLD MINES, RE, C.A.

31. Winding up — Assets — "Surplus assets"— Construction of articles of association.—The term "surplus assets," when used in articles of association providing for distribution among the shareholders on a winding up taking place, has no such recognized technical meaning that the court is bound to construe it as referring to the assets after providing only for debts, liabilities, and costs, without recouping paid-up capital.

The capital of a company was £100,200, in 100,000 ordinary shares and 200 founders' shares respectively of £1 each, all of which (except one founders' share) were issued and fully paid up.

One of the articles of association was as follows: "If the company shall be wound up, one-fifth of the surplus assets (if any) shall belong to and be divided among the holders of founders' shares, and the remaining four-fifths of such surplus assets shall belong to and be divided among the holders of ordinary shares in proportion to the amount of capital paid up on the shares held by them."

Another article had provided that the profits in each year should be applicable in or towards payment of a dividend of 8 per cent. on the amount paid up on the ordinary shares, and that the surplus (if any) should be divided, as to one-fifth among the holders of founders' shares, and as to the other four-fifths among the holders of ordinary shares in proportion to the amounts for the time being paid up thereon.

The company went into voluntary liquidation, and, after providing for all debts, costs, and liabilities, a sum of about £90,000 remained for distribution among the shareholders.

Held, that, having regard to both articles, "surplus assets" meant the assets remaining after providing for debts, costs, and liabilities, and also recouping the paid-up capital subscribed by all the shareholders.—NEW TRANSVAAL CO., RE, Ch.D. Vaughan Williams, J.

32. Winding up — Borrowing powers — Common officers—Irregularity—Notice—Proof in winding up. —At a general meeting of a company—which by its articles was not allowed to borrow money to an amount greater than its paid-up capital, unless the borrowing of a larger amount should have been previously authorized by a general meeting—a resolution was passed purporting to authorize the directors to borrow £30,000 when the paid-up capital was only £10,000. The articles also required that notices convening general meetings should specify the general nature of any special business to be transacted at the meeting, but the notices convening the meeting at which the above-mentioned resolution was passed did not refer to the intended loan. The money was borrowed from a building society that had its offices in the same building as the company, and the company and the society had four directors and a secretary in common. The society claimed to prove for the whole loan in the winding up of the company.

Held, that the knowledge of the officers of the company as to the irregularity in summoning the meeting could not be imputed to the society; that the society was justified in assuming that all affairs relating to the internal management of the company had been properly carried out; and that the society was entitled to prove for the loan in the winding up of the company.—HAMPSHIRE LAND CO., RE, Ch.D. Vaughan Williams, J., 136.

33. Winding up—Contract with vendors—Payment in fully paid-up shares—Property sold of less than nominal value of shares—Stamp duty—Apportionment of value of items of property sold—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—Where a limited company purchased property, and paid the agreed price in fully paid-up shares, the contract of sale being duly registered before the issue of the shares pursuant to section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, the vendors cannot be made liable as contributories in the winding up of the company merely on the ground that the value of the property sold was less than the full nominal value of these shares.—WRAGG, RE, C.A., 557.

34. Winding up—Contributory—Paid-up shares—Bonus shares—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.—By a preliminary agreement made before the incorporation of a company, it was agreed that seventy-five shares fully paid up should be allotted to the vendors as the purchase price of the property to be sold to the company, leaving twenty-five shares in the company to be subscribed for in cash. This agreement was adopted by the company after incorporation, with the modifications that £5,000 in cash, omitted by mistake from the preliminary agreement, should be paid to the vendors in addition to the seventy-five shares, and that the vendors should distribute twenty-five out of the seventy-five shares rateably among the cash subscribers of the first-mentioned twenty-five cash shares. The company accordingly allotted twenty-five of the seventy-five vendors' shares to the cash subscribers, the certificates of title stating that the shares were fully paid up. There was no question of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, not being complied with.

In the winding up of the company the liquidator applied to have the allottees of the twenty-five distributed shares placed on the list of contributories. There was no question of any fraud or impropriety having been committed.

Held, that the holders of the twenty-five distributed shares were liable to contribute the full nominal amount of such shares in cash.—ALKALINE REDUCTION SYNDICATE, RE, Ch.D. Vaughan Williams, J., 10.

35. Winding-up—Creditor's petition — Opposition by majority of other creditors—No tangible assets—Discretion of the court.—A winding-up petition was presented by a debenture-holder of a company which was opposed by the great majority of the other debenture-holders, on the ground that their only prospect of recovering anything on account of their security would be ruined by a winding-up order being made. The whole of the assets of the company were covered by the debentures, and the debenture-holders practically represented its only creditors. There was evidence, which was uncontradicted, to the effect that the company had no tangible assets. Romer, J., however, decided to make a winding-up order, being of opinion that there would be assets forthcoming if the company was ordered to be wound-up. On appeal:

Held, that, as the official receiver (according to a statement confidentially made by a representative of his to the court) was not satisfied that the company had no assets which could be reached in the winding-up, the order of Romer, J., ought not to be disturbed, notwithstanding the wishes of the great majority of the creditors.—INTERNATIONAL COMMERCIAL CO., RE, C.A.

36. Winding up — De facto auditor — Officer — Misfeasance—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 10.—An auditor may or may not be an officer of a limited company; primâ facie he is not. If he is appointed to an office under the company and acts in that office he will be liable under a misfeasance summons under section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890. But a person is not an "officer" who fills no position either de jure or de facto, but who happens to do some of the work which he would have to do if he were an officer in the proper sense of the word.

So held by the Court of Appeal (reversing Stirling, J., ante, p. 263)—WESTERN COUNTIES STEAM BAKERIES AND MILLING CO., RE, C.A., 418.

37. Winding up—Judgment creditor—Receivership order, effect of—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 88), ss. 87, 163.—A judgment creditor of a company who, at the commencement of the winding up of the company, has obtained a receivership order against the company but has taken no steps under that order, has not acquired anything in the nature of a charge, but is in a position analogous to that of an execution creditor where the execution is incomplete, and accordingly will not be allowed to proceed further by the court in the absence of special circumstances, and gains no priority over the other creditors by virtue of the order.

In re Potts, [1893] 1 Q. B. 648, applied.—CROSHAW v. LYNDHURST SHIP CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 570.

38. Winding up—Liquidator—Litigation—Authority of the court or of the committee of inspection—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63) s. 12, sub-sections 1-4.—An order to the liquidator of a company directing him to call up all uncalled capital, and "for that purpose to take all necessary proceedings for enforcing such call," is not an authority to him under section 12, sub-sections 1-4, of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, either to commence actions against such contributories or to employ a solicitor without further authority of the court or of the committee of inspection.

But where such unauthorized actions have been commenced the committee of inspection may sanction subsequent proceedings in such actions, and such proceedings are then authorized within the meaning of section 12 of the Act.—LONDON METALLURGICAL CO., RE, Ch.D. Vaughan Williams, J., 601.

39. Winding up—Mortgage—Interest accrued after winding-up order—Distress—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 87, 163.—The liquidators and receivers of the H. Co. entered into possession of their mills and kept them in working order, so as, if possible, to sell them as a going concern at an enhanced value. The mortgagees having applied for leave to distrain, for interest accrued due after the date of the entering into possession, were refused leave, on the ground that the possession of the liquidators was as beneficial to the mortgagees as to the company and to all its other creditors.

It is easier for a landlord to obtain leave to distrain for rent than for a mortgagee to obtain leave to distrain for interest accrued since the date of the winding up.

In re Lancashire Cotton Spinning Co., 36 W. R. 305, 35 Ch. D. 656, followed.—HIGGINSHAW MILLS CO., RE, MANCHESTER COUNTY BANK v. HIGGINSHAW MILLS CO., C.A., 56.

40. Winding up—Practice—"Just and equitable"—Substratum gone—Fraud—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 79, sub-section 5.—A company fraudulent in its inception, carrying on a small business at a loss, having no capital of its own—all the subscribed capital having found its way into the hands of the real, though not the ostensible, promoters—and hopelessly embarrassed by numerous actions brought by shareholders on the ground of fraud, was ordered by the Court of Appeal (affirming Vaughan Williams, J.) to be wound up, the court holding that the case was one in which it was "just and equitable," within section 79, sub-section 5, of the Companies Act, 1862, to make the order, that being the most effective means for recovering for the shareholders the money dishonestly retained by the real promoters.—BRINSMEAD (T. E.) & SONS, RE, C.A.

41. Winding up — Private company — Debentures issued to vendors—Debentures covering all assets—Right of unsecured creditors to winding-up order.—Where the available assets of a private company are insufficient to satisfy debentures which have been issued to the vendors of property to the company, in payment of the agreed price thereof, and which cover all the assets, the unsecured creditors of the company are not entitled to a winding-up order, as they could not get anything thereby.—LONDON ELECTRICAL INSTITUTE, RE, C.A., 566.

42. Winding up—Shares—Contributory—Estoppel—Certificate—Fully paid-up shares.—A company borrowed money from the appellant on the security of certain fully paid-up shares, and delivered to him certificates under their common seal to the effect that on each of these shares the full amount had been paid, and this was believed to be so by the appellant. As a matter of fact these shares were not paid up at all, neither had any contract been registered under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867.

Held, that the company were estopped from alleging that the shares were not fully paid up, although upon inquiry and investigation the appellant would have discovered otherwise; and, consequently, that he was not liable to be placed on the list of contributories.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 577, [1896] 2 Ch. 525, reversed.—BLOOMENTHAL v. FORD, H.L., 449.

43. Winding up—Voluntary winding up—Distress put in before commencement of winding up—Staying proceedings—Companies Act, 1862, ss. 87, 134.—The rules laid down in the case of the compulsory winding up of a company in In re The Great Ship Co., 12 W. R. 139, 4 De G. J. & S. 63, and In re Lancashire Cotton Co., 36 W. R. 305, 35 Ch. D. 656—that if an execution is issued or a distress levied before the commencement of the winding up, permission will be given to proceed to sale unless there are special reasons rendering such a course inequitable, while, in the absence of special reasons such permission will be refused where the execution is issued or the distress levied after the commencement of the winding up—apply to the case of a voluntary winding up.

The commencement of a voluntary winding up is the time of the passing of the second or confirmatory resolution.—ROUNDWOOD COLLIERY CO., RE, LEE v. ROUNDWOOD COLLIERY CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 217.

44. Winding up—Voluntary winding up—Transfer of shares after commencement of winding up with consent of liquidator—Alteration of status—Contributories—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 38, 131, 153.—After the commencement of the voluntary winding up of a limited company T., the holder of certain shares not fully paid up, transferred them, with the consent of the liquidator, to P., whose name was substituted for that of T. on the register of members, and P. afterwards, with the like consent, transferred them to R., whose name was substituted for his on the register. It subsequently became necessary to make calls in respect of the shares.

Held, that R. was the proper person to be upon the register of members; that he alone should be upon the A list of contributories; and that T. and P. ought both to be on the B list.—NATIONAL BANK OF WALES, RE, TAYLOR AND PHILLIPS' CASES, C.A., 401.

See also Inland Revenue, 16; Landlord and Tenant, 4; Practice, 18; Probate, 5; Trustee, 5.

COMPENSATION.—See Canal; Landlord and Tenant, 10; Lands Clauses Acts, 2; Railway, 3, 4.

COMPROMISE.—See Solicitor, 2, 5.

CONFLICT of LAWS:—

Administration—Scotch will—General power of appointment—English appointor—Assets for creditors.—The exercise by an Englishman of a general power of appointment conferred by the will of a Scotchman is governed by Scotch law, and consequently the fund appointed does not become assets for the payment of the debts of the appointor.—BALD v. BALD, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 499.

CONSENT.—See Practice, 35, 44; River, 2.

CONSPIRACY.—See Trade Union.

CONTEMPT:—

Injunction—Breach by person not enjoined—Jurisdiction to commit.—A person not himself included in an injunction, or a party to the action, who knowingly aids and abets a defendant in a breach of it, may be committed for contempt.—SEAWARD v. PATERSON, C.A., 610.

See also Practice, 8.

CONTRACT:—

1. Author and publisher—Agreement with a limited company—Assignability of contract.—The principle laid down in Stevens v. Benning, 3 W. R. 149, 6 De G. M. & G. 223; Reade v. Bentley, 6 W. R. 240, 4 K. & J. 656; and Hole v. Bradbury, 28 W. R. 39, 12 Ch. D. 886, that a contract between an author and a publisher is of a personal nature, and therefore not assignable, is not affected by the publisher being a limited company instead of an individual or a partnership firm consisting of individuals.—GRIFFITHS v. TOWER PUBLISHING CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J., 73.

2. Building contract—Construction of—Clause as to penalties for delay—Extras ordered by architect.—A builder entered into a contract to carry out certain specified works and to complete them by a stipulated date, and there was a provision that the whole of the works were to be completed by that date under a penalty of £2 per week for every week that any part of the works remained unfinished after that date, as liquidated damages. By the contract the building owner had the right to call upon the builder to do extra works, and this right he exercised. By one of the clauses in the agreement it was provided that any authority given by the architects for any alteration or addition in or to the works should not vitiate the contract. Owing to the ordering of extra works the whole work was not completed until some time after the stipulated date, and the building owner claimed to recover from the builder the penalties provided for as liquidated damages for the delay in completion.

Held, that the building owner was not entitled to claim the penalties for non-completion within the specified time, as he had ordered the builder to carry out extra works whereby it was impossible for the builder to complete the entire works within the time specified in the contract.

Westwood v. Secretary of State for India, 11 W. R. 261, followed.

Jones v. St. John's College, 19 W. R. 276, L. R. 6 Q. B. 115, distinguished.—DODD v. CHURTON, C.A., 490.

3. Delivery as escrow—Evidence to show no contract.—Where an agreement for a lease had been signed by the plaintiff, and was subsequently signed by the defendant, but not in the presence of the plaintiff, and the defendant subsequently never delivered the agreement to the plaintiff,

Held, that evidence might be admitted to show that there was no true animus contrahendi between the parties.

Pym v. Campbell, 4 W. R. 528, 6 E. & B. 370, followed.—PATTLE v. HORNIBROOK, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 123.

4. Master and servant—Personal service—Agreement by employed to "act exclusively for" employers—Absence of negative covenant—Breach—Injunction.—In a contract of personal service a stipulation by the employed to "act exclusively for" his employers does not, in the absence of a negative covenant, express or implied, which is sufficiently clear and definite, confer upon the employers a right to obtain an injunction against the employed to restrain him from entering into the employment of other persons.

The Whitwood Chemical Co. v. Hardman, [1891] 2 Ch. 416, considered and applied.

Lumley v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. 604, distinguished.—MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION v. NEW YORK LIFE ASSURANCE CO., C.A.

5. Memorandum in writing—Letter—Envelope—Statute of Frauds, s. 4—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4.—Where a letter, which is relied on as a memorandum in writing of a contract to satisfy section 4 of the Statute of Frauds or section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, does not itself contain the name of the person to whom it is written, but is proved to have been sent enclosed in an envelope addressed to that person, the letter and the envelope ought to be considered as one document.—PEARCE v. GARDNER, C.A., 518.

6. Restraint of trade—Partnership subsequently entered into by covenantee—Death of covenantee—Right of surviving partner to sue for breach of agreement.—The defendant entered into a written agreement with W., in consideration of being employed as assistant-master, not to carry on the business of a school within nine miles of the place where W.'s school was carried on for twelve years after leaving the school. Subsequently, and while the defendant was in his service, W. entered into a partnership agreement with the plaintiff who was on his death to succeed to the business. W. died, and thereupon the defendant commenced a school in the same place.

On a motion on behalf of the plaintiff to restrain the defendant from so doing:

Held, (1) that the defendant's agreement was not limited to the life of W.

(2) That though goodwill was not mentioned in the partnership agreement, the benefit thereof did pass so as on the death of W. to vest in the plaintiff, and that, following Jacoby v. Whitmore (49 L. T. Rep. 355), the defendant's agreement formed part of such goodwill; and

(3) That the plaintiff was therefore entitled to the benefit thereof, and to the injunction asked for.—SMITH v. HAWTHORN, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

7. Specific performance — Undisclosed vendor — Acceptance by agent—Reference in contract to an unsigned document—Terms of contract—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.—Acceptance of an offer by the agent of a vendor whose name is not at the time known to the purchaser, is a sufficient acceptance on the part of such vendor to satisfy the Statute of Frauds.

If a signed memorandum of agreement refers definitely to an unsigned contract in which all the terms of the contract are definitely stated, such memorandum constitutes a binding contract, and is not conditional on the drawing up of a formal agreement.—FILBY v. HOUNSELL, Ch.D. Romer, J., 232.

8. Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Letters—Inquiry as to time for completion—Open term.—A party (the purchaser) to a contract for the sale of real estate, in a letter accepting the vendor's offer added the words, "I should like to know from what time Mr. Hughes (the vendor) wishes the purchase to date."

Held, by Romer, J., ante, p. 221, that on the letter as a whole these words were merely a courteous way of asking the vendor the time at which he wished to complete, and in no way added a fresh term, or prevented the agreement from forming a binding contract.

The Court of Appeal affirmed this decision.—SIMPSON v. HUGHES, C.A.

See also Arbitration, 1; Company, 19, 21-26; Guarantee, 1, 2; Insurance, 1, 3, 12; Poor Law, 4; Principal and Agent; Railway, 6; Vendor and Purchaser, 4, 5.

CONVEYANCING ACTS.—See Divorce, 17; Landlord and Tenant, 1, 2, 8; Married Woman, 7, 8; Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

COPYHOLD:—

Heriot—Heriot custom—Power to seize beast off manor.—The lord of the manor has a right to seize a heriot, due by heriot custom, wherever it may be found, as well off as on the manor.—WESTERN v. BAILEY, C.A., 115.

COPYRIGHT:—

1. Infringement—Assignment—Right of unregistered assignee to sue—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 13, 24.—The assignee of a copyright under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, must be registered before he can maintain an action for its infringement.—LIVERPOOL GENERAL BROKERS' ASSOCIATION v. COMMERCIAL PRESS TELEGRAM BUREAUX, Q.B.D.

2. Infringement—Copy of central figure—Sentiment of picture.—Where a picture contains a direct copy of a substantial portion of a copyright work, that substantial portion constitutes an infringement if it is a copy in the ordinary sense, and particularly where the sentiment expressed in the copyright picture has also been embodied.—BROOKS v. RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY, Ch.D. Romer, J., 476.

3. Infringement—Injunction—Exclusive information—Right of property.—Information acquired by the expenditure of labour and money becomes a valuable property in the hands of the person so acquiring it, and can be communicated upon such terms as he thinks fit. Any person inducing anyone to whom the information is communicated to break the contract under which such information is received will be restrained by injunction. It is immaterial that the information so acquired has already been partly published so long as it has not been published to the whole world and there are persons who are willing to pay to acquire it.

Exchange Telegraph Co. v. Gregory, [1896] 1 Q. B. 147, 44 W. R. Dig. 44, followed.—EXCHANGE TELEGRAPH CO. v. CENTRAL NEWS, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 595.

4. Registration—Validity—Literary Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 13, 24—Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), ss. 1-4.—The managing director of a limited company, having prepared the letterpress of a trade catalogue, ordered two drawings to illustrate it to be made by a firm of lithographers. The drawings were made and were paid for and used by the company. The managing director was registered as proprietor of the copyright in the drawings under the Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862, s. 4, and of the copyright in the catalogue under the Literary Copyright Act, 1842, s. 13. There was no entry of any agreement in writing vesting the copyrights in him. The managing director and the company having brought an action as co-plaintiffs to restrain an alleged infringement of the copyrights,

Held, that the managing director had acted throughout only as the nominee of the company; that he was not a trustee for the company, and was not, therefore, in fact, proprietor of the copyrights under either of the Copyrights Acts; and that the registrations were bad.

Held, further, that, assuming the managing director to be entitled to be registered as proprietor of the letterpress of the catalogue, the drawings illustrating it would not be protected by such registration.

Held, therefore, that although the company, who were in fact the proprietors of the copyrights, were joined as co-plaintiffs, the action was not sustainable, because the company were not registered as the proprietors.—PETTY v. TAYLOR, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 299.

5. Work first published abroad—Copies lawfully printed in country where work first published—Importation into United Kingdom for sale or hire—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 2, 15, 17—International Copyright Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 12), ss. 2, 3, 10.—Section 10 of the International Copyright Act, 1844, does not prohibit the importation into the United Kingdom for sale or hire of copies of a copyright work lawfully printed in the country where the work was first published. That section, however, is not a complete code on the subject; and sections 15 and 17 of the Copyright Act, 1842, read together with section 3 of the Act of 1844, do prohibit such importation unless it take place with the authority of the owner of the copyright. The owner of the English copyright in a German piece of music is therefore entitled to an injunction to restrain the importation into this country, for sale or hire, of copies lawfully printed in Germany.

Decision of Kekewich, J., reversed (Lopes, L.J., dissenting).—PITT PITTS v. GEORGE, C.A., 164.

CORONER:—

Inquest—Criminal law—Inquisition—Validity of—Quarries Act, 1887, s. 3.—An inquisition finding that the deceased met his death from injuries to his head and back caused by a fall into a quarry, and that, by "the neglect of" three specified persons "to fence or cause to be fenced the said quarry, the said" deceased person "fell therein, and that therefore the said" three specified persons "did feloniously kill the said" deceased, is bad upon the face of it, on the ground that, although it stated certain facts, it had not stated any facts showing that there was a duty on the part of the three specified persons to fence the quarry.—REG. v. OXFORD ASSIZE CLERK, Q.B.D., 543.

CORPORATION:—

1. Association of nurses—Proprietors of class journal—Alleged libel by editor published by instructions of association—Action for libel against editor personally—Defence undertaken by association—Principal and agent—Indemnity—Ultra vires—Injunction.—An association of nurses, incorporated by Royal Charter, were the proprietors and publishers of a journal published for the information and benefit of their members. An action having been brought against the editor of the journal to recover damages for an alleged libel contained in an article inserted in the journal by the instructions of the association, they resolved to undertake the defence of the action and to pay any costs and expenses which might be incurred therewith.

Held, that, under the circumstances, to undertake the defence was not a misapplication of the funds of the association.—BREAY v. ROYAL BRITISH NURSES' ASSOCIATION, C.A.

2. Borough funds—Chief constable respondent in licensing appeals—Power to pay costs—Municipal Corporation Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 140.—On the 13th of August the Watch Committee resolved to authorize the chief constable to obtain legal assistance at the licensing sessions. On the 21st of August the council passed a like resolution. The chief constable successfully opposed some licensees, five of whom appealed to quarter sessions. On the 10th of October the Watch Committee, having taken the opinion of counsel, refused to authorize the chief constable to act as respondent.

On the 15th of October the council resolved to allow him to so act, and to pay his costs. When the appeals came on he appeared and opposed them, and they were dismissed with costs. The amount recovered on taxation was £132 5s. less than he had to pay. On the 19th of November the Watch Committee resolved to pay these costs. This action was brought by the plaintiffs as ratepayers to restrain this payment.

Held, that, under these circumstances, there was no right to use the borough funds for this purpose, for one Watch Committee has no power to apply to the council to pay certain moneys which a former Watch Committee has said ought not to be paid.

Semble, that in certain cases a Watch Committee may have power to incur legal expenses in connection with the opposition to licences either at brewster or quarter sessions.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. TYNEMOUTH (MAYOR), Q.B.D.

3. Municipal corporation—Burgess—Minutes of proceedings of council—Right to inspect—Committees—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 233.—By section 233 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, a burgess has the right to inspect minutes of proceedings of the municipal council, but the Act does not give the right in terms to a burgess to inspect minutes of proceedings of a committee appointed by the council.

Burgesses of the city of M., being dissatisfied that on the minutes of the council no particulars appeared of the proceedings of committees approved by the council, claimed the right to inspect all minutes of such committees.

Held, that the burgesses had the right to inspect only such minutes of committees as were actually laid before the council for their approval.—WILLIAMS v. MANCHESTER (MAYOR OF), Q.B.D., 412.

See also Local Government, 4.

COSTS.—See Administration, 4, 5; Bankruptcy, 13; County Court, 1, 2; Divorce, 15, 16; Executor, 3A; Justices, 5; Lands Clauses Act, 1, 2; Married Woman, 2; Metropolis Management, 11; Mortgage, 1; Poor Law, 1, 3, 6; Practice, 1, 9-17; Probate, 7, 9, 11; Settlement, 2; Solicitor, 3-13, 18-22.

COUNTY COURT:—

1. Appeal—Costs—Security.—If it appears to the High Court that there is reasonable ground for an appeal from a county court, the High Court will not order the appellant to give security for the costs of the appeal merely on the ground that he has no visible means of paying the respondent's costs should the appeal fail.—PRITCHETT v. POOLE, Q.B.D.

2. Costs—Administration suit—Insolvent estate—Taxation—Discretion of registrar—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 50a, r. 20.—In an administration suit in the county court the costs of the administrator are within the discretion of the registrar as discretionary "fees or allowances" under ord. 50*a*, r. 20, of the County Court Rules, 1889, and in disallowing certain costs the registrar may take into consideration the fact that the estate is insolvent, in which case only such costs as are strictly necessary for the protection of the estate should be allowed.—PAIN v. BOWDEN, Q.B.D., 48.

3. Execution—Claim to goods seized—Sale by bailiff—Title of purchaser—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 156.—Where good are seized in execution under a judgment of a county court, and a claim is made to them, but the claimant fails to comply with any of the three conditions laid down by section 156 of the County Courts Act, 1888, a sale by the bailiff under that section confers on the purchaser a good title the goods, although the claimant may afterwards prove that they belonged to him at the time of the seizure.

Judgment of Wills and Wright, JJ., ante, p. 303, affirmed.—GOODLOCK v. COUSINS, C.A., 369.

4. Execution—Distress for rent—Poundage of high bailiff—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 154, 160—County Court Rules, 1889, Schedule A.—Where a high bailiff seizes goods on any premises under a warrant of execution, and then seizes further goods on the same premises under a claim made by the landlord for rent, he is entitled to a separate set of fees in respect of each seizure.—BROSTER, RE, PRUDDAH, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 576.

5. Practice—Employers' liability—Want of due notice of injury—Statutory defence—Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), s. 4—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 10, rr. 10, 18a.—In an action in the county court for compensation under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), the defence that the plaintiff has not given due notice of the injury as required by section 4 of that Act is a statutory defence within the meaning of the County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 10, r. 18a, and unless the defendant has duly filed a notice of his intention to rely upon such statutory defence he cannot avail himself thereof at the trial.—CONROY v. PEACOCK, Q.B.D., 502.

6. Practice—Service out of the jurisdiction—Transfer of action to High Court—County Courts Act, 1888, ss. 67, 68, 164—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 51, r. 23—Judicature Act, 1875, s. 17—Ord. 11, rr. 1 (d), 2.—Service in an action commenced in the county court having been effected out of the jurisdiction,

Held, that such service was authorized by ord. 51, r. 23, of the County Court Rules, 1889, and that though such rule was wider than the corresponding High Court rule, it was, nevertheless, a rule which might lawfully be made by the proper authorities under section 164 of the County Courts Act, 1888, and that, therefore, no objection to the jurisdiction could be raised in the county court.

But the action having been transferred to the High Court, Held, that the person served ought to have an opportunity of raising the objection that it could not have been lawfully entertained there.—WOOD v. MIDDLETON, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 184.

7. Practice—Summons out of the district—Discretion of judge to grant leave for such summons to be issued—County Court Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 74—Ord. 5, r. 9a, of County Court Rules, 1889.—By section 74 of the County Court Act, 1888, an action may be commenced by leave of the judge against a defendant resident out of the district if the cause of action arose wholly or in part within the district.

Held, that the words of the section were permissive only, and that the judge therefore had discretion to refuse leave for such a summons to issue, although he was satisfied that the cause of action was such as to give him power to grant the summons if he had thought fit to do so.

Julius v. The Bishop of Oxford, 28 W. R. 726, 5 App. Cas. 214, considered and applied.—REG. v. TURNER, Q.B.D., 316.

See also Admiralty, 1, 2; Metropolis Management, 11; River, 2.

CRIMINAL LAW:—

1. Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 11—Public examination of bankrupt — Admissions — Parol evidence—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 17.—At the public examination of a bankrupt under section 17 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, a shorthand writer took down the evidence given by him, and made a transcript of it; the transcript was not read over to or by or signed by the bankrupt, and the public examination was adjourned sine die. The bankrupt was afterwards tried upon an indictment charging him with misdemeanours under section 11 of the Debtors Act, 1869, and at the trial the shorthand writer gave parol evidence of admissions made by the bankrupt at the public examination tending to establish the misdemeanours with which he was charged.

Held, that the evidence was rightly admitted.—REG. v. ERDHEIM, C.C.R.

2. Embezzlement—Assistant overseer—Rural parish —Form of indictment—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 5 (1), (2) (c); s. 6 (1); s. 81 (3). —Notwithstanding that under the Local Government Act, 1894, an assistant overseer in a rural parish is appointed by the parish council, he is the servant of the inhabitants of the parish, and not of the parish council; and in an indictment for embezzling the moneys collected by him from the ratepayers he is well described as the servant of the inhabitants, and the moneys embezzled are rightly alleged to have been received by him on account of such inhabitants, his employers.—REG. v. SMALLMAN, C.C.R., 249.

3. Evidence—Abortion—Statement by woman to police officers in absence of accused—Statement subsequently read over to accused—Admissibility.—On the trial of a person for using an instrument with intent to procure miscarriage, it was proposed to put in evidence a statement made by the woman, upon whom the instrument was alleged to have been used, to the police officers in the absence of the accused, but which was subsequently read to the accused by the police.

Held, that the course adopted by the police was an exceedingly objectionable one, and that the statement should not be put in.—REG. v. SMITH, Q.B.D.

4. False pretences—Evidence—Letter written by defendant—Opinion of witness as to meaning.—Upon the trial of an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretences, a letter written by the defendant to the prosecutor respecting the goods was put into the hands of the prosecutor, who was asked what opinion he formed as to the position or occupation of the defendant upon the receipt of the letter,

Held, that, although the question of the proper inference to be drawn from the letter was for the jury, the question was admissible to show the inference in fact drawn from it by the prosecutor.

A defendant who has been convicted upon an indictment charging him with obtaining credit for goods by false pretences cannot be afterwards convicted upon a further indictment charging him with larceny of the same goods.—REG. v. KING, C.C.R.

5. Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 90), ss. 2, 3, 11—Operation of Act—Pleading.—If there be an unlawful preparation of a naval or military expedition against any friendly state by some person within her Majesty's dominions, any British subject who assists in such preparation will be guilty of an offence under section 11 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, even though he renders the assistance from a place outside her Majesty's dominions.

By section 2 of the said Act, "This Act shall extend to all the dominions of her Majesty." And by section 3, "This Act shall come into operation in the United Kingdom immediately on the passing thereof, and shall be proclaimed in every British possession by the governor thereof as soon as may be after he receives notice of this Act, and shall come into operation in that British possession on the day of such proclamation."

An indictment alleged that "within the limits of her Majesty's dominions and after the coming into operation therein of the Act called 'The Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870,'" certain offences against the said Act were committed.

Held, that the indictment sufficiently alleged the Act to have been in operation in that part of her Majesty's dominions in which the alleged offences were committed.—REG. v. JAMESON, Q.B.D.

6. Practice—Writ of error—Dispensing with attendance of plaintiff in error in cases of felony.—Where a person convicted of felony alleges error upon the record, the court may, if the plaintiff in error be in custody, dispense with his attendance in court upon the argument of the writ of error.—RICHARDS v. REG., Q.B.D.

See also Coroner.

CROWN:—

1. Civil servant—Officer of Inland Revenue—Appointment during pleasure of commissioners—Reduction in rank—Malice—Cause of action—Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21), s. 4.—A supervisor of Inland Revenue was appointed in 1881 to hold office "during the pleasure of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue." By section 4, sub-section 3, of the Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890, the commissioners have power to reduce or discharge any such officer as they see cause.

The commissioners directed the supervisor to collect statistics for the Board of Agriculture. The supervisor refused to comply with the order as being one which did not concern his duties as an official of Inland Revenue. The commissioners thereupon reduced him in rank. In an action against the commissioners to recover damages, Held, that no cause of action was shown, and that, in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of the court the action should be stayed.—WORTHINGTON v. ROBINSON, C.A.

2. Civil servants—Power to dismiss at pleasure—Law of New South Wales—Civil Service Act, 1884 (48 Vict. No. XXIV.).—The Crown has by law, whether in England or New South Wales, power to dismiss at pleasure either its civil or military officer, a condition to that effect being an implied term of the contract of service except where it is otherwise expressly provided,

But held, that certain provisions of the New South Wales Civil Service Act of 1884, being manifestly intended for the protection and benefit of the officer, are inconsistent with such a condition, and consequently restrict the power of the Crown in that respect.—GOULD v. STUART, P.C.

See also Injunction; Practice, 23; Principal and Agent.

DAMAGES:—

Measure of damages—Trespass—Injury to land—Deposit of spoil on land.—The defendants, who were colliery owners, had committed a trespass on the plaintiff's land by depositing spoil thereon from their colliery for a number of years. Further tipping having been restrained by injunction, and an inquiry as to damages having been directed,

Held, that the true measure of damages was the value of the land to the trespasser for the purposes for which he had used it.

The principle of the wayleave cases—Jegon v. Vivian, 19 W. R. 365, L. R. 6 Ch. 742; Livingstone v. Rawyards Coal Co., 28 W. R. 357, 5 App. Cas. 25; and Phillips v. Homfray, L. R. 6 Ch. 770, 20 W. R. Dig. 121—applied.

Decision of Chitty, J. (44 W. R. 459), affirmed.—WHITWHAM v. WESTMINSTER BRYMBO COKE AND COAL CO., C.A.

See also Bankruptcy, 35; Company, 12; Divorce, 13; Landlord and Tenant, 15; Ship, 19; Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

DEBTORS ACT.—See Criminal Law, 1.

DEED:—

Presumption of law—Deed more than thirty years old—Marriage settlement purporting to exercise power of appointment—Execution by attorney of appointor—Mere production of deed insufficient evidence—Invalid exercise.—On the mere production of a deed more than thirty years old purporting to exercise a power of appointment, and executed by the attorney of the appointor, the presumption of law that a deed more than thirty years old and produced from an unsuspected repository proves itself does not, in the absence of other evidence, warrant the court in coming to the conclusion that the attorney was properly constituted and authorized to execute the deed, and, consequently, the power of appointment will not be deemed to have been validly exercised.—AIREY, RE, AIREY v. STEPHENSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 286.

See also Bankruptcy, 3; Settlement, 4.

DENTIST:—

Medical practitioner — Registration — Pupil — Declaration—Dentists Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 33), s. 37.—A person who, at the date of the passing of the Dentists Act, 1878 (22nd of July, 1878), was a pupil to a dental practitioner, but whose articles as a pupil expired in October, 1878, is not entitled to be registered under section 37 of the Dentists Act, 1878, unless he has complied with section 7.

So held by the Court of Appeal, affirming the Queen's Bench Division (ante, p. 526).—REG. v. GENERAL MEDICAL COUNCIL, C.A.

DIVORCE:—

1. Attachment—Order to deliver up child—Evasion of service within the jurisdiction—Knowledge of contents of order—Order for attachment upon ex parte application.—An order was made in a divorce suit that "the child, issue of the marriage between the petitioner and respondent, be forthwith delivered up to and remain in the custody of the petitioner until further order of the court, but . . . that such child be not removed out of the jurisdiction of the court without its sanction."

This order was brought to the knowledge of the respondent, who took the child out of the jurisdiction and retained its custody. Legal service was not effected upon him.

The court, upon ex parte application by the petitioner, ordered a writ of attachment to issue against the respondent.—FAVARD v. FAVARD, P.D. & Ad.D.

2. Judicial separation — Husband and wife — Separation deed—Covenant not to sue for greater allowance—Permanent alimony—Matrimonial Causes Acts, 1857, 1859, 1866 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, ss. 32, 35; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 4; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 1.)—Although under a separation deed a wife may have agreed to accept a certain sum as maintenence from her husband, and may have covenanted not to sue for any further allowance, yet if the circumstances be altered to divorce or judicial separation by reason of subsequent adultery or otherwise the court has power to order a larger sum to be paid to the wife by the husband by way of permanent alimony and for the maintenance of her children.

Gandy v. Gandy, 30 W. R. 673, 7 P. D. 168, 33 W. R. 803, 30 Ch. D. 57, explained.—BISHOP v. BISHOP, JUDKINS v. JUDKINS, C.A., 567.

3. Nullity—Fraud inducing marriage.—A marriage is not rendered null and void by concealed unchastity or pregnancy on the part of the wife at the time of the marriage.—MOSS v. MOSS, P.D. & Ad.D., 635.

4. Permanent maintenance—Full inquiry on petition for alimony pendente lite—Procedure—Husband's income—Voluntary allowance to husband.—Where alimony pendente lite has been fixed after a full inquiry, the facts so elicited constitute the grounds on which the amount of permanent alimony or permanent maintenance should be determined; and

Semble, if alimony pendente lite has been awarded, no evidence can be given on the application for permanent alimony or maintenance, except to show alteration in means since the first inquiry

In estimating the husband's income, the court can take into calculation income to which he may have no legal claim.

In this case the court calculated in the respondent's income a monthly allowance made to him by his brother, to whom he was largely indebted, "so long as he remained out of the country."

Haviland v. Haviland, 11 W. R. 550, 3 Sw. & Tr. 114, considered.—BONSOR v. BONSOR, P.D. & Ad.D., 304.

5. Practice — Co-respondent — Necessary party—Leave to proceed without—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), ss. 27, 28—Divorce Rules, 2, 4, 5, 6.—The court has a discretion, under section 28 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, as to whether the petitioner may present a petition for divorce without adding a co-respondent. Such discretion is to be exercised having regard to the facts of each particular case, and it would be wrong in principle for the court to impose fetters upon the exercise of the powers which are left by law to its discretion in each case as it arises.

So held by the Court of Appeal (Lindley and Rigby, L.JJ.; A. L. Smith, L.J., dissenting as to the exercise of the discretion in this particular case).—SAUNDERS v. SAUNDERS, C.A., 583.

6. Practice—Death of alleged adulterer before suit—Motion to dispense with making co-respondent.—Where, in a petition for dissolution of marriage, adultery is charged against a person who died before the institution of the divorce proceedings, the petitioner must apply to the court for an order to be excused from making him a co-respondent, even though adultery be charged against a second person who has been made a co-respondent in the suit.—SLAYTOR v. SLAYTOR, P.D. & Ad.D.

7. Practice—Discretion of court—Misconduct of petitioner—Adultery—Wife's petition—Wilful neglect or misconduct of husband conducing to wife's adultery—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 31.—The circumstances to be considered by the court in exercising its discretion under section 31 of the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, to grant a divorce to a wife who has been guilty of adultery, include the case of the husband causing or conducing to her adultery by his own wilful neglect or misconduct.

A husband, who had treated his wife with great cruelty during cohabitation, finally deserted her and went to live with another woman. More than seven years after the desertion the wife, not knowing whether her husband was alive, and without making inquiry, commenced to live with another man; the cohabitation continued long after the time when it came to the wife's knowledge that her husband was alive. Subsequently, and after the wife had ceased to live in adultery, her husband was convicted, under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, of an aggravated offence on a young girl not amounting to rape.

Held, that under the circumstances the wife's adultery did not disentitle her to a decree for dissolution of marriage.—SYMONS v. SYMONS, P.D. & Ad.D.

8. Practice—Order for costs—More than six years' delay in issuing execution—Application to the court—R. S. C., ord. 42, r. 23.—Where on a husband's petition for dissolution of his marriage a decree nisi is granted with costs against the co-respondent, and the husband does not issue execution for more than six years, application should be made to the court for leave to issue execution.—GOODWIN v. GOODWIN, P.D. & Ad.D., 656.

9. Practice—Judicial separation—Wife's petition—Counter-charge of adultery—No relief sought—Alleged adulterer—Application for leave to intervene—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 22—Practice—Leave refused.—A petition by a husband claiming a divorce from his wife and damages against the co-respondent, was dismissed, by consent, before trial. Thereupon the wife filed a petition claiming a judicial separation, and the husband, in his answer, counter-charged the adultery which he had alleged in the former suit, but he asked for no relief. The alleged adulterer applied for leave to intervene and defend.

Held, that the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts governed the case, and, that as that practice afforded no precedent for allowing an intervention in such circumstances, the application must be refused.—FARRELL v. FARRELL, P.D. & Ad.D.

10. Practice—Nullity suit—Summons for directions—Notice to Queen's Proctor before setting down.—The President, upon a summons for directions in a nullity suit by a husband, the case being undefended, directed the solicitors for the petitioner to give information of the facts of the case to the Queen's Proctor, before setting the case down for hearing, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, as amended by 36 Vict. c. 31. Upon receipt by the petitioner's solicitors of an intimation from the Queen's Proctor that he did not intend to intervene at this stage of the proceedings,

The President allowed the case to be set down forthwith, and to be added to the supplemental list of undefended causes just published.—M—— v. M——, P.D. & Ad.D.

11. Practice—Restitution of conjugal rights—Bonâ fides and conduct of petitioner—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), s. 5.—Conduct of a petitioner, though falling short of a matrimonial offence for which relief could be obtained, may yet be a good and sufficient ground for refusing a decree for restitution of conjugal rights.—OLDROYD v. OLDROYD, P.D. & Ad.D.

12. Practice—Restitution of conjugal rights—Written demand for cohabitation—Substituted service—Rule 175.—Where a wife posted a written demand for restitution of conjugal rights to the husband addressed to him at his business and private address, and both letters were returned unopened through his solicitors, who refused all information about him, but it was believed he had left the country, the court allowed substituted service of the demand on the husband's solicitors.—TUCKER'S PETITION, RE, P.D. & Ad.D., 656.

13. Practice—Sequestration—Damages against co-respondent—Interest of co-respondent in settlement—Motion against the trustees.—The right of sequestrators to attach moneys alleged to be held by third persons for the judgment debtor, but denied by them to be so held, cannot be determined upon a motion in the suit to which the the third persons are not parties, unless they appear and submit to the jurisdiction of the court.

So held, on a motion by sequestrators against the trustees of a co-respondent's marriage settlement to enforce payment of damages ordered to be paid by the co-respondent to the petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage.—CRAIG v. CRAIG, P.D. & Ad.D., 64.

14. Practice—Trial—Notice of setting down for—New trial—Surprise—Divorce Court Rules, rr. 44, 47.—The solicitor of the petitioner for a divorce wrote to the respondent's solicitor a letter, headed with the title of the cause, in which he said, "I have set this cause down for trial." No other notice was served.

Held, that this letter was a sufficient notice, within rule 44 of the Divorce Court Rules, of the cause having been set down for trial.

The respondent's solicitor, in the belief that a more formal notice ought to be given, did not watch the cause list, and the cause came on for trial without his knowledge, and a decree for a divorce was made in the absence of the respondent. She applied for a new trial on the ground of surprise.

The court ordered a new trial on the undertaking of the solicitor personally to pay the costs thrown away.—FLUISTER v. FLUISTER, C.A.

15. Practice—Wife's costs—Husband's suit—Wife's solicitor.—To warrant a petitioner (husband) in opposing, and the court in refusing, the usual order for a wife's costs, it is not necessary to show "misconduct" on the part of the wife's solicitor.

A solicitor acting for the wife in a matrimonial case is not entitled to rely upon his client's instructions, but, in order to entitle him to look to the husband for payment of the wife's costs, he must fairly investigate for himself the various points put forward by the wife as a defence, and must satisfy himself in regard to their reasonableness.

Under the particular circumstances of the case, the usual order for the wife's costs was refused, and the amount in court was ordered to be paid out to the husband (the petitioner).—WALKER v. WALKER, P.D. & Ad.D.

16. Practice—Wife's costs.—Upon a husband's petition for divorce, the solicitor for the wife incurred costs which were taxed and ordered to be paid; but after the pleadings were closed, and before the cause was set down, the petitioner, without paying them, applied for and obtained leave to proceed in formâ pauperis. The wife's solicitor thereupon took out a summons before the judge in chambers, calling upon the petitioner to show cause why further proceedings should not be stayed by reason of the petitioner not having complied with the order dated the 8th of February, 1897, for payment of £20 11s. 6d. for the respondent's taxed costs. The registrar who taxed the bill had refused to order a stay of proceedings in the event of the amount not being paid by the petitioner.

The judge ordered proceedings to be stayed until payment of the wife's taxed costs.—JOSEPH v. JOSEPH, P.D. & Ad.D.

17. Variation of settlement—Death of petitioner after decree absolute—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 19), s. 3—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 39.—A petitioner (the husband) having obtained a decree absolute for dissolution of marriage, presented a petition to vary the trusts of the marriage settlement and to carry out the terms of an agreement which had been made with his wife on the hearing of the suit. Shortly afterwards the petitioner died. An application was made by his legal personal representative to be made a party in order to continue the proceedings.

Held, that the court has no jurisdiction, under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, and section 3 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, to order the legal personal representative of a deceased petitioner to be made a party for the purpose of continuing proceedings for the variation of the settlement. The Act of 1859 was intended for the benefit of living persons only.—THOMSON v. THOMSON, C.A., 134.

18. Variation of settlements and permanent maintenance — Report of registrar — Unsettled property squandered—Income from settled property—Large proportion awarded.—Where a respondent (husband) had recently squandered the bulk of the property over which he had free control, the court awarded to the petitioner more than one-third of the income from the property which had been brought into settlement by the respondent upon the marriage, and further ordered that, after the respondent's death, the award should be increased to more than one-half of that income, but limited dum sola vixerit.—BASHALL v. BASHALL, P.D. & Ad.D.

See also Bankruptcy, 35; Married Woman, 4.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSÂ:—

Essentials to gift—Delivery antecedent to gift.—The rule that delivery of a chattel is essential in order to constitute a valid donatio mortis causâ is satisfied by an antecedent delivery of the chattel alio intuitu to the donee.—CAIN v. MOON, Q.B.D.

EASEMENT:—

Right of way—Easement in gross—Covenant with yearly tenant and "his heirs and assigns"—Alteration of grantee's interest in dominant tenement—Estoppel.—A grant by deed of a right of way to a yearly tenant of the dominant tenement and his heirs and assigns, will not determine by reason of the fact that the yearly tenant of the dominant tenement subsequently acquires the fee in the dominant tenement.—RYMER v. MCILROY, Ch.D. Romer, J., 411.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW:—

1. Benefice — Vacancy — Sequestration — Profits accrued during vacancy.—The incumbent succeeding to a vacant benefice has a right of action against the sequestrator of such benefice for the balance of profits accrued during the vacancy.—RUSSELL v. LAY, Q.B.D.

2. Brawling in churchyard—"Any person"—Clergyman—23 & 24 Vict. c. 32, s. 2.—The preamble to 23 & 24 Vict. c. 32 recites that, "Whereas it is expedient to abolish the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts of England and Ireland over persons not in holy orders in suits for brawling." Section 2 enacts that "any person who shall be guilty of riotous, violent, or indecent behaviour . . . in any churchyard" shall be liable to a penalty.

Held, that section 2 applies to persons in holy orders as well as to laymen.—VALLANCEY v. FLETCHER, Q.B.D., 367.

3. Churchwarden—Criminal suit—Duty of churchwarden with respect to collections at morning and evening service—Alms dish—Usage of church—Control of churchwardens over moneys collected for church expenses.—By the accustomed practice of a parish church, when collections from the congregation were made either at the morning or the evening service on Sundays, the collecting bags were brought after the collection up to the chancel steps and placed in the alms dish there held by the minister for the purpose of receiving the same and placing them on the Communion Table. One of the churchwardens of the parish was charged in a criminal suit with having committed offences against ecclesiastical law in that during the time he held office he had at the morning service on one Sunday and the evening service on another Sunday vexatiously refused to place the bag in which he had collected money from the congregation in the alms dish in accordance with the above practice. At the hearing these charges were sufficiently proved.

Held, that, in so deviating from the practice in use in the matter, the respondent had offended against the laws ecclesiastical, and that he ought to follow such practice for the future unless otherwise ordered by the bishop.

Where collections for ordinary church expenses are made at the morning and evening services in parish churches, the churchwardens are the proper custodians of the moneys collected, and such moneys should be placed by them at a bank to an account in their joint names.—HOWELL v. HOLROYD, P.D. & Ad.D.

4. Clergy — Discipline — Deprivation — Bishop's jurisdiction.—The jurisdiction of a bishop to depose a clergyman from holy orders under section 8 of the Clergy Discipline Act, 1892, is distinct from the jurisdiction of the court which pronounces the sentence of deprivation under that Act. — REG. v. DURHAM (BISHOP), Q.B.D.

5. Diocesan archives — Document of historical interest to foreign State—Delivery up.—A manuscript book called the "Log of The Mayflower," containing a history of the voyage of that vessel to America in 1620, together with entries of births, marriages, and deaths of many of the first settlers in New England, was amongst the archives of the Diocese of London at Fulham Palace.

Upon petition of the Ambassador of the United States the MSS. was ordered to be delivered up to the United States upon certain conditions.—"MAYFLOWER" (LOG OF THE), RE, P.D. & Ad.D.

6. Faculty—Chancel screen—Confirmatory faculty for retention of chancel screen of carved figures representing our Lord on the Cross, the Virgin Mary, and St. John—Representation of historical scene not likely to be object of superstitious reverence.—A figure of our Lord upon the Cross was in 1880 placed in a parish church above, and on the centre of the screen separating the chancel from the nave; and in 1893 there were placed on one side thereof a figure of the Virgin Mary, and on the other side thereof a figure of St. John. All the figures were carved in wood, were about 2ft. 9in. in height, the central figure being rather higher than the two others, and all had been placed in the church without the sanction of a faculty. There was not in the church anything of the nature of a rood-loft or rood-stairs, and no candles were round or in front of the figures. In 1896 the rector and churchwarden of the parish instituted a cause of faculty praying the Ordinary to authorize by faculty the retention of the three figures on the screen, and filed affidavits stating that the services of the church had been conducted in accordance with the directions of the Book of Common Prayer, and that there was not and had not been anything in the said services or in the attitude of those attending the services to indicate or suggest any probability of worship, adoration, or any superstitious reverence being paid to the figures on the screen. No person appeared to oppose the grant of the faculty.

The Chancellor of the Diocese of Norwich ordered the faculty to issue as prayed.—BARSHAM (RECTOR) v. PARISHIONERS OF SAME, P.D. & Ad.D.

7. Faculty — Discretion — Refusal of faculty — Chancel screen gates — Figures on chancel screen representing our Lord upon the Cross, the Virgin Mary, and St. John — Evidence — The Church Building Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 70), s. 7—Select vestry—Effect of resolution of meeting of pew-renters of parochial chapel of ease.—A petition by the vicar and churchwardens of the parish church of R., and the chapelwardens of a chapel of ease in the parish of R., asking for a faculty to authorize the erection in the chapel of a chancel screen with gates, and with a crucifix and figures of the Virgin Mary and St. John placed on top of the screen, was supported by a resolution of a meeting of the pew-renters of the chapel. The vestry for ecclesiastical purposes of the parochial area in which both the parish church and the chapel of ease were situate, was a select vestry of the whole civil parish of R., which comprised a larger area than the parochial area above mentioned, and the vestry had passed no resolution either in favour of or against the grant of the faculty.

Held, (1) that a resolution of the select vestry might be dispensed with; (2) that a faculty for chancel screen gates ought not to be granted; (3) that a faculty for a crucifix with or without figures on either side placed on a chancel screen ought not to be granted. — RICHMOND (VICAR OF) AND CHAPELWARDENS OF ST. MATTHIAS, RICHMOND v. ALL PERSONS HAVING INTEREST, &c., Q.B.D.

8. Faculty — Jurisdiction — Affixing of military colours to walls of chancel of parish church—Interest —Member of Parliament—St. Margaret's, Westminster — Churchwardens — Confirmatory faculty. — The Ordinary has jurisdiction to authorize by faculty the affixing of military colours as church ornaments to the walls of the chancel of a parish church where it appears that a former rector of the church has approved of their being placed in the chancel.

The rector of a parish church has no legal right without the sanction of a faculty to remove out of the chancel church ornaments, such as military colours, placed there without a faculty in a permanent position with the concurrence of a former rector and former churchwardens.

A member of the Commons House of Parliament has a sufficient interest to institute a faculty suit in respect of alterations in or additions to the parish church of St. Margaret's, Westminster.

Semble, the churchwardens of a parish church to which military colours, no longer required for use in her Majesty's service, have been presented, have vested in them the legal property in the colours for the purpose of safe custody in all cases where the colours are not affixed to the freehold.—VINCENT v. EYTON, P.D. & Ad.D.

9. Faculty—Restoration of chancel screen—Figures of our Lord upon the Cross, St. Mary, and St. John—Architectural decorations not likely to be abused by superstitious reverence.—A crucifix with the accompanying figures of the Virgin Mary and St. John is not forbidden by law to be erected on a chancel screen, but may be placed in that position in a parish church under a faculty where the Ordinary is satisfied that it is not likely to be abused by superstitious reverence being paid to it.

A faculty authorizing the restoration in a parish church of a stone chancel screen or interior chancel arch of pre-Reformation date by placing on three existing pedestals springing from ornamental tracery in the upper parts of such screen or interior arch three stone figures without gilding or painting, each two feet three inches high—one, the central figure, representing our Lord upon the Cross, and the other two representing respectively the Virgin Mary and St. John—was granted by the Consistory Court of St. Albans on the Ordinary being satisfied that the figures would be for the purpose of architectural decoration only, and that there was no ground for reasonable apprehension that they would be abused or made the subject of superstitious reverence.—GREAT BARDFIELD (VICAR OF) v. ALL HAVING INTEREST.—P.D. & Ad.D.

10. Pew—Chancel—Ancient pew—Right appointment to parish—Prescription—Repair.—The claimant of a right of prescription to a pew in the chancel of a parish church in respect of his ownership and occupancy of an ancient house in the parish, must, as against the Ordinary, prove, not merely exclusive possession of the pew by himself and his predecessors, but also some act of user or assertion of right inconsistent with mere possession by permission of the churchwardens. The right to such a pew is subject to the burden of repair, but it is not necessary to prove actual repair where evidence is given of other such acts of user or assertion of proprietary right, repair being only one of many possible acts of user. Upon such proof being given, a lost faculty should be presumed.

The removal of the woodwork of a pew in the chancel and the substitution of chairs for the former seats is an act of ownership or assertion of proprietary right inconsistent with any right in the Ordinary, and, together with exclusive possession, is sufficient to prove the claimant's right; such removal will not amount to an abandonment of the right, unless it be coupled with circumstances indicating an intention to abandon.

Re-lining a pew is not an act of repair.

Semble, per Charles, J.: The right of the lay rector to the chief seat in the chancel of the parish church is not confined to a single seat for his personal occupation.—STILEMAN-GIBBARD v. WILKINSON, Q.B.D.

11. Simony—Immorality — Clerical Subscription Act, 1865—False declaration against simony—Clergy Discipline Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 32), ss. 2, 12.

Held, that in order to punish the offence of simony in a clerk, resort cannot be had to the provisions of the Clergy Discipline Act of 1892, but proceedings must still be taken under the Act of 1840. The immorality against which the Act of 1892 is directed is so defined by sections 2 and 12 as to exclude simony from its scope.

Held, also, that a false declaration against simony under the Clerical Subscription Act of 1865 cannot be isolated from the charge of simony and brought within the scope of the Act of 1892.—BENEFICED CLERK v. LEE, P.C.

12. Use of black gown in pulpit—Conditional bequest of money—Legality.—It is not illegal for a clergyman of the Church of England to wear the black gown while preaching; and a condition requiring him to do so attached to a bequest of property for his benefit is not an illegal or impossible condition.—ROBINSON, RE, WRIGHT v. TUGWELL, C.A., 181.

EJUSDEM GENERIS.—See Gaming, 3, 4.

ELECTION LAW:—

1. Registration—Parliament—Franchise—Borough vote—Disqualifying alms—Almspeople in almshouses—Lands vested in almspeople—Reform Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 36.—By a grant of lands a charity, known as the Charterhouse Hospital, was established at Hull for a number of poor men and women, and the condition for election to the charity was, and still is, that the persons should be "feeble or old, so long as they are necessitous." The lands, including the Charterhouse Hospital itself, were, and still are, vested in the master and almsmen themselves, and form the source of the revenue of the charity. Under the scheme at present in force the almsmen were appointed by the town council and were removable by them, but the power of removal had never been exercised. The almsmen receive a weekly allowance out of the revenues of the charity, and each occupy a separate room in the Hospital House, which room is separately rated, but the rates are paid out of the charity funds. The almsmen had hitherto always voted at parliamentary elections without objection.

Held, that the almsmen, the recipients of this charity, were not disqualified by the receipt of alms within section 36 of the Reform Act, 1832.

Harrison v. Carter, 25 W. R. 182, 2 C. P. D. 26, distinguished.—COWAN v. KINGSTON-UPON-HULL (TOWN CLERK), Q.B.D., 413.

2. Registration — Parliament — Franchise—Objection to name—Closing the list—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 40, sub-sections 8, 9, 10, 11.—A revising barrister gave notice that his court would be held on certain days, and that after the last sitting the lists would be closed. This was done, and on the day after the lists were closed the revising barrister sat for the purpose (inter alia) of expunging from the list the names of those persons whose names had been objected to and who had not appeared and announced their intention of contesting the objection at the previous sittings. On the name of S. being called evidence was given of the service of the notice of objection, and S. thereupon claimed to be heard in answer to the objection. The revising barrister refused to hear him and expunged his name.

Held, that a mandamus would not be granted to compel the revising barrister to state a case on the question whether or not he was right in expunging the name of S. from the list.—REG. v. SODEN, Q.B.D., 234.

3. Registration — Parliament — Franchise — Old lodger claim—Omission of part of declaration—Mistake—Power of amendment — Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 28, sub-section 2.—Where an old lodger, whose name was on the existing register, sends in within the proper time for old lodger claims a claim in respect of the same lodgings, but by mistake omits to state in the declaration of the claim that he is on the register of electors in respect of the same lodgings, and that he desires to have his name inserted on the old lodger list, the revising barrister has power to correct the mistake by inserting in the declaration the omitted statement.—FRANCIS v. METCALFE, Q.B.D., 174.

4. School Board—Ballot papers—Voting by crosses—Mode of counting—Ballot papers not officially stamped or cancelled—Elementary Education Acts—General Order of Privy Council on Education, 1*st August*, 1895—Ballot Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33), s. 2.—In counting the numerical value of the crosses on the ballot papers at a school board election, at which voters can give all their votes to one candidate, or distribute them, and can vote by numbers in lieu of a cross, each cross must be counted as one vote and no more.

Ballot papers which bear no official mark, stamp, or perforation ought to be rejected under section 2 of the Ballot Act, 1872; and ballot papers which have not been cancelled ought to be rejected, as there is no evidence they were ever in the ballot boxes.—MORRIS v. BEVES, Q.B.D., 430.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACTS.—See County Court, 5; Master and Servant, 2, 3.

ESCHEAT.—See Intestates' Estates Act.

ESTOPPEL:—

Settlement of land by grantor having no title—Acquisition of possessory title by tenant for life—Rights of remaindermen—Statute of Limitations—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 34.—A. obtained in 1867 possession of land under a settlement made in 1842 whereby an estate was limited to him for life, with remainder over. The settlor had no title to the land in question.

Held, that A., and those claiming through A., were estopped from setting up as against the remaindermen any title adverse to the deed of settlement—e.g., a title by possession under the Statutes of Limitation.

Hawksbee v. Hawksbee, 11 Hare 230, and Board v. Board, 22 W. R. 206, L. R. 9 Q. B. 48, approved and adopted.—DALTON v. FITZGERALD, C.A., 685.

See also Bankruptcy, 2; Company, 29, 42; Easement; Vendor and Purchaser, 9.

EXECUTOR:—

1. Acknowledgment of debt by one of several—Statutes of Limitation—9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 1—19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 14.—An acknowledgment within Lord Tenterden's Act of a debt of a testator by one of several executors is sufficient to take the case out of the Statutes of Limitation.—MACDONALD, RE, DICK v. FRASER, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 628.

2. Acting before probate—Delay in proving will—Wilful default.—A testator died in 1882, and his will was proved (by one only of three executors named in the will) in 1889. A policy on the testator's life could not be got in until probate was obtained, and meanwhile interest at the rate of 5 per cent. was paid upon the debt of the testator.

Held, that this delay in proving the will and getting in the money due upon the policy did not amount to wilful default.

Two persons named as executors in the will wrote a letter in conjunction with the executor who eventually proved asking the assurance office to pay the policy to a creditor of the testator.

Held, that all three had acted as executors.—STEVENS, RE, COOKE v. STEVENS, Ch.D. North, J., 284.

3. Administration—Alleged wilful default—Acting "honestly and reasonably"—"Fairly to be excused"—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.—Where the executor of a deceased solicitor was bonâ fide and on reasonable grounds satisfied that he could not maintain an action against a client of his testator to recover costs incurred in an administration action and owing to the testator, there being an arrangement between the testator and the client to the effect that the latter should not be personally liable to the testator for the costs, except in the event of his being unable to recover the same in the administration action.

Held, that the executor was not guilty of any wilful default; but that even if the executor was technically liable for a breach of trust, then under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, he, having acted honestly and reasonably, ought fairly to be excused.—ROBERTS, RE, KNIGHT v. ROBERTS, C.A.

3A. Costs—Action against executor and residuary legatees—Separate defence by executor.—Costs incurred by an executor, who, to meet a possible charge of devastavit, separately defends an action brought jointly against residuary legatees and himself, are not "an outlay in the strict line of his duty" towards his cestui que trust; and he cannot call upon them to indemnify him in respect of his expenditure.—HOSEGOOD v. PEDLER, Q.B.D.

4. Deposit in Post Office Savings Bank—Nomination by a testatrix of an executor named in her will—Evidence rebutting presumption of gift—Savings Bank Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 40) s. 3.—Where a testatrix subsequent to the execution of her will filled up a nomination in the prescribed form of the amount (being under £100) due to her by the Post Office Savings Bank at her decease, in favour of one of her executors, and there was sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption that such executor should receive such amount as a gift, it was held that he received the same in his capacity of executor, and he was ordered to account for the same accordingly.—READ, RE, TURNER v. READ, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

5. Devisee—Fixtures—Tapestry.—Tapestry on the walls of a room in a family mansion, which was called the "Tapestry Room," had about a century ago been affixed to the walls of the room in a manner that skilled witnesses said would now be used if it was required to fix tapestry permanently. The mansion-house had been settled by the will of a former owner in strict settlement, but the will made no mention of the tapestry. The tapestry was claimed as a chattel by the residuary legatee of the will as against the devisee of the mansion-house.

Held, that as regards fixtures a claim by an executor against a devisee was on the same footing as a claim by an executor against an heir; that on the evidence in this case the tapestry was a fixture and passed under the devise of the mansion; and that the case fell within the principle of the decisions relating to claims to fixtures as between executor and heir, and was covered by the decision in D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 15 W. R. 186, L. R. 3 Eq. 382.—NORTON v. DASHWOOD, Ch.D. Chitty, J.

6. Injunction restraining bankrupt executor from acting—Application by co-executor—No receiver.—Upon the application of one executor for an injunction to restrain his bankrupt and defaulting co-executor from acting, the court has jurisdiction to grant the injunction without having recourse at the same time to the appointment of a receiver of the testator's estate.—BOWEN v. PHILLIPS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 286.

7. Retainer—Legatee debtor to testator—Bankruptcy of legatee.—A father deposited with a bank a sum of £2,400 (money of his own) as a continuing security for any amount which might from time to time be owing to the bank by a firm in which two of his sons were the only partners. Interest on the deposit was from time to time paid by the bank to the father. By his will the father gave legacies and shares of residue to the two sons. At the date of his death the sons owed £8,858 to the bank, and the sons were afterwards adjudicated bankrupts. The bank proved in the bankruptcy for the whole £8,858. No dividend having yet been paid in the bankruptcy, but it being admitted to be improbable that the estate would realize enough to pay the bank in full, and that the bank would ultimately appropriate the deposit of £2,400 towards the payment of the firm's debt,

Held, that the trustees of the father's will were not entitled to retain the legacies and shares thereby bequeathed to the sons against the liability of the father's estate as surety to the bank, but that the trustee in the bankruptcy was entitled to receive those legacies and shares.—BINNS, RE, LEE v. BINNS, Ch.D. North, J.

8. Will—Administrator pendente lite—Appointment by Probate Division—Suing administrator pendente lite in Chancery Division—Motion to stay action—Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), ss. 70, 71.—An administrator pendente lite of the personal estate of a deceased appointed by the Probate Division may be sued by creditors of the estate in the Chancery Division without leave.—TOLEMAN, RE, WESTWOOD v. BOOKER, Ch.D. North, J., 548.

See also Inland Revenue, 12.

FACTORY :—

1. Cotton cloth factory—Justices—Mitigation of penalties—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 4—Cotton Cloth Factories Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 62), s. 13.—Section 13 of the Cotton Cloth Factories Act, 1889, enacts that, "If in the case of any cotton cloth factory there is a contravention of, or non-compliance with, any of the provisions of this Act, the inspector shall give notice in writing to the occupier of the same of the acts or omissions constituting the contravention or non-compliance, and if such acts or omissions, or any of them, are continued or not remedied, or are repeated within twelve months after such notice has been given, the occupier of such factory shall be liable, on summary conviction, for the first offence, to a penalty of not less than five pounds nor more than ten pounds, and for every subsequent offence to a penalty of not less than ten pounds nor more than twenty pounds."

On a summons taken out under the above section, justices at petty sessions convicted the defendants of a first offence, but, holding that they had discretionary power under section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, to do so, they reduced the fine to twenty shillings.

Held, that the justices had acted wrongly. Section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, does not apply to section 13 of the Cotton Cloth Factories Act, 1889. A particular and a serious offence is created by section 13, and when such offence is committed the magistrates have no power to reduce the penalty under the provisions of section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act.—OSBORN v. WOOD, Q.B.D., 319.

2. Dangerous machinery—Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 16), s. 5; 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 75), s. 6.—Under section 5 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, as amended by section 6 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, "all dangerous parts of the machinery" in a factory must either be securely fenced or be in such a position or of such construction as to be equally safe to every person employed in the factory as they would be if they were securely fenced.

Held, that, although a part of a machine might not be dangerous in the ordinary course of its working, yet it might be a "dangerous" part of a machine within the meaning of the Acts if, owing to external causes or to the negligence of a workman, it was liable to cause accidents.—HINDLE v. BIRTWISTLE, Q.B.D., 207.

3. Workshops—Work carried on in workshop on Sunday—"Open for traffic on Sunday"—Meaning of—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 & 41 Vict. c. 16), s. 51.—The occupier of a workshop, who was of the Jewish religion, employed a woman of the Jewish religion to work in his workshop on Sunday. The business carried on was the making of buttonholes on garments for tailors, and garments were carried to and from the shop on Sunday in pursuance of prior arrangements; but no arrangements, payments, or settlements were made with any customers or other persons on the Sunday.

Held, that the workshop was not "open for traffic on Sunday" within the meaning of section section 51 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878.—GOLDSTEIN v. VAUGHAN, Q.B.D., 399.

FINANCE ACT, 1894.—See Inland Revenue, 2-7.

FISHERY:—

1. Licence—Profit a prendre—Incorporeal hereditament—Right of action by grantee.—The plaintiffs were the lessees by deed for a term of years of "the exclusive right of fishing" in a specified part of the River Colne, with a proviso that "the right of fishing hereby granted shall only extend to fair rod and line angling, and to netting for the sole purpose of procuring fish-baits." The defendants discharged into the river water loaded with mud and sediment, which drove away the fish and injured the spawning beds.

Held, that the grant to the plaintiffs was not a mere licence to fish, but a right to fish and carry away the fish caught; that this was a profit a prendre, and an incorporeal hereditament; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction and damages against the defendants.—FITZGERALD v. FIRBANK, C.A.

2. Sea fisheries—"Taking"—"Removing from the fishery"—Sea Fisheries (Shell Fish) Regulation Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.—The taking of shell fish from the bed in which they were found, with the intention of taking them away altogether, amounts to a removal of such shell fish from the fishery within bye-laws made under section 1 of the Sea Fisheries (Shell Fish) Regulation Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 26), even though, as a matter of fact, the shell fish were in the result not actually taken away.—THOMSON v. BURNS, Q.B.D.

3. Several fishery — Tidal river — Grant from Crown—Surrender by subject—Evidence—User.—From the finding of an inquisition in 1540 there was clear evidence of the existence at and prior to that date of a several fishery in tidal waters, which had been surrendered to the Crown. By subsequent instruments of title this several fishery was identified with that claimed by the plaintiff, who proved documentary title thereto. The evidence satisfied the court that a several fishery was in fact held and enjoyed in accordance with the documentary title.

Held, that the plaintiff had established his right to the several fishery claimed.—TIGHE v. SINNOTT, M.R. (Ir.).

FIXTURE:—

1. Mortgagor and mortgagee—Gas-engine fixed to the soil—Intention of affixers, how far material—Right of owner, by contract with mortgagor, to remove engine—Mortgagee taking possession without notice of contract.—A gas-engine which, for the purpose of convenient working, is fixed to a concrete bed by means of screws and bolts, becomes by such attachment a fixture and part of the soil. A mortgagee of the land is therefore entitled, on taking possession of the land, to take possession also of the engine, notwithstanding that the latter is the property of a third person, and that by an agreement in writing between that third person and the mortgagor (of which the mortgagee had no notice) the engine is not to become the property of the mortgagor.

Cumberland Union Banking Co. v. Maryport Hematite Iron Co., 40 W. R. 280, [1892] 1 Ch. 415, questioned.

Wood v. Hewett, 8 Q. B. 913, and Lancaster v. Eve, 7 W. R. 260, 5 C. B. N. S. 717, discussed.—HOBSON v. GORRINGE, C.A., 356.

2. Tenant for life and remainderman—Mansion-house—Natural history museum—Stuffed birds and animals.—Specimens of stuffed birds and animals which form part of a natural history collection in a museum built on to the mansion-house, are not fixtures so as to devolve with the freehold under the limitations of the settlement.—HILL (VISCOUNT) v. BULLOCK, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 587.

See also Executor, 5; Landlord and Tenant, 11.

FOOD.—See Adulteration, 2-4.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT.—See Criminal Law, 5.

FRAUDS, STATUTE of:—

Absolute conveyance—Trust — Proof by parol evidence—Fraud—Laches—Delay—Frauds, Statute of, s. 7.—Certain estates in Ceylon to which the plaintiff was entitled subject to a mortgage were in 1873 sold by the mortgagees to the defendant, and were conveyed to him by a conveyance absolute in form.

Held (reversing the decision of Kekewich, J.), that upon the facts the defendant took the property as a trustee for the plaintiff.

Held, also, that, notwithstanding section 7 of the Statute of Frauds, it is competent for a person claiming land conveyed to another and alleging fraudulent breach of trust to prove by parol evidence that it was conveyed upon trust for the claimant.

Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 1 Eden 515, overruled.

Held, further, that, there being an express trust, mere delay by the plaintiff in seeking to enforce her rights was no bar to her claim.

Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co., 27 W. R. 65, 3 App. Cas. 1218, and Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, 22 W. R. 492, L. R. 5 P. C. 221, discussed.—DE LA ROCHEFOUCAULD v. BOUSTEAD, C.A., 272.

See also Contract, 5, 7; Guarantee, 1; Practice, 50; Vendor and Purchaser, 10.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY:

1. Dispute—Expulsion of member—Jurisdiction of court—Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 22—Friendly Societies Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 26), s. 10, sub-section 1.—Section 10, sub-section 1, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1895—which enacts that section 22 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, providing for the settlement of disputes between a member and the society in the manner directed by the rules of the society, shall apply to every dispute between any person aggrieved, who has for not more than six months ceased to be a member of a society, and the society—does not alter the nature of the dispute, but merely extends the time for settling disputes which come within section 22 of the Act of 1875. The dispute must still be one between the society and a member as a member.

Therefore a dispute whether the society is entitled to treat a person as no longer a member of the society is not a dispute to be settled according to the rules of the society, and the court has jurisdiction to to entertain such dispute.—PALLISER v. DALE, C.A., 291.

2. Dissolution—Infant members—Branch composed of minors—Governing committee—Friendly Societies Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 63), ss. 9, 13, 15, 25, 27—Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), ss. 6, 15, sub-section 8; s. 25.—In 1873 a friendly society, called the "Loyal Social Design Lodge," instituted a society to be called the juvenile branch of the lodge, and drew up rules for it which were registered and certified. The society was to consist of persons between the ages of six and eighteen. By rule 3, it was to be "governed" by a committee of eight appointed by the lodge. It was provided by rule 21 that no rules should be altered without the consent of a majority of members present at a special meeting. The members having been reduced to six persons about sixteen years of age, one of the members and the fathers of the rest on their behalf, without the consent of the committee, signed an instrument for dissolution of the society and distribution of its funds under the Friendly Societies Act, 1855, s. 13, and the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, s. 25, and the dissolution was advertised. The trustees in whom the property of the society was vested brought an action to set aside the the instrument.

Held, that as the Act of 1875 preserved the rules of old societies so far as they were not contrary to the Act, rule 3 was still in force; that it was to be considered a fundamental rule of the society from which the members could not escape; that the members could not dissolve the society without the consent of the committee; and that the instrument of dissolution must be set aside.

Whether, if the infant members had power by themselves to dissolve the society by signing an instrument of dissolution, an instrument signed for them by their fathers, guardians, or agents would suffice, quære.—RUDD v. JAMES, C.A.

3. Failure of objects — Unexpended fund—Bona vacantia.—In 1810 a society consisting of honorary and ordinary members was formed for the purpose of providing annuities for the widows of deceased members. All the members and members' widows having died, and there being in the hands of the trustees unexpended funds of the society,

Held, that, upon the construction of its rules, the society was not a charity; that there was no resulting trust in favour of the representatives of deceased members; but that the Crown was entitled to the unexpended funds as bona vacantia.

Decision of Chitty, J. (43 W. R. 325, [1895] 1 Ch. 489), reversed.—CUNNACK v. EDWARDS, C.A., 99.

See also Charity, 2.

GAMING:—

1. Betting—House used for payment of bets made elsewhere—Betting House Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1, 3.—The use of a house by a person for the payment of bets made by him previously and elsewhere is not the using of the house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto within the meaning of section 3 of the Betting House Act, 1853, as the payment of such a bet does not constitute the act of "betting" within the meaning of that statute.—BRADFORD v. DAWSON, Q.B.D. 347.

2. Betting—Other place—Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 3.—The respondent, a professional bookmaker, stood for several hours upon a certain spot near a hoarding on a piece of ground comprising about one-eighth of an acre, and surrounded on all sides by buildings or hoardings, and made bets with persons who came there.

Held, that the respondent was rightly convicted of using "a place" for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto under section 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853.—MCINANEY v. HILDRETH, Q.B.D.

3. Betting—"Other place"—Enclosure on racecourse—User—Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 3.—By the Betting Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 3, "Any person who, being the owner or occupier of any house, office, room, or other place, or a person using the same, shall open, keep, or use the same for the purposes" of betting with persons resorting thereto, is liable to a penalty.

The respondent, a professional betting man, was present in an enclosure known as Tattersall's Ring at Hurst Park Racecourse on the occasion of a race-meeting, and, by calling out the odds on horses, invited other persons to make bets with him, and did in fact make bets with other persons in the enclosure. The enclosure was about forty yards long and thirty yards wide, and was bounded on three sides by iron railings and on the fourth by a building which formed part of the enclosure. The respondent moved about within the enclosure, and did not confine himself to any particular spot. Upon an information preferred under section 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, Held, that the enclosure was a "place" used by the respondent for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and that the respondent was liable to a penalty under that section.—HAWKE v. DUNN, Q.B.D., 359.

4. Betting—"Other place"—Enclosure on racecourse — Bookmaker using enclosure — Betting Act, 1853, s. 3.—Bookmakers carried on the business of betting in an enclosure on a racecourse to which they, along with other members of the public, were admitted by the owners on the same terms. The enclosure was about a quarter of an acre in extent. The bookmakers did not confine themselves to any fixed spot in the enclosure, nor did they use any apparatus such as a stool, desk, or tent, but each bookmaker was generally to be found in or about the same part of the enclosure.

Held, that the bookmakers were not within the meaning of section 3 of the Betting Act, 1853, using a place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto.

Hawke v. Dunn (ante, p. 359) overruled.—POWELL v. KEMPTON PARK RACECOURSE CO., C.A.

5. Common gaming house—User of house for unlawful gaming—Gaming Houses Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 38), s. 4.—The defendant with three friends played for money at the defendant's house a game of cards called "German Bank," which the jury found to be an unlawful game. There was no evidence that they or anyone else had ever played an unlawful game of cards at the defendant's house on any other occasion; and there was evidence to show that the defendant's invitation to his friends to play on this occasion was a casual one.

Held, that the defendant could not be convicted under section 4 of the Gaming Houses Act, 1854, of using the house or room for the purpose of unlawful gaming being carried on therein.

Held, also, that the question whether a particular game of cards is or is not an unlawful game is not for the jury, but for the judge.—REG. v. DAVIES, C.C.R.

6. Money paid in respect of wagering contract—Loan—Gaming Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 9), s. 1.—The defendant and another agreed to fight a boxing match for £500 a side, the money to be deposited with a stakeholder. The plaintiff, at the defendant's request, agreed to lend him £500 upon the terms that the money was to be repaid if the defendant won the match, but not otherwise. The plaintiff accordingly paid the £500 to the stakeholder for the defendant. The defendant won the match and received the stakes. In an action to recover the £500 as money lent,

Held, that the £500 was paid by the plaintiff in respect of a wagering contract within the meaning of the Gaming Act, 1892, and could not be recovered.—CARNEY v. PLIMMER, C.A., 385.

GAS:—

Receivers and managers—Arrears during company's occupation—"Occupier"—Incoming tenant—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), s. 16—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 41), ss. 11, 39—Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act, 1872 (35 Vict. c. cxxiii.), s. 18.—By section 16 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, a gas company is empowered to stop the supply of gas to a consumer who shall neglect to pay the rent due for the same.

A mill company who had been supplied with gas by a gas company owed money for gas supplied. P. and S., having been appointed by the court receivers and managers of the mill company on behalf of the debenture-holders, applied to the gas company for a supply of gas as renters of the gas company, and undertook to pay for all gas consumed by them since the date of their appointment, but asked that the arrears might stand over to be dealt with by the liquidator of the company.

By virtue of section 18 of the gas company's private Act of 1872, in case a consumer should leave the premises where gas had been supplied without payment of the sum due from him, the company should not require from the next tenant payment of the arrears, unless the incoming tenant had agreed with the defaulting consumer to pay the arrears, or unless the incoming tenant should continue the trade or business of the outgoing tenant, and should have paid a consideration for so doing.

Held, that the rights of P. and S. as receivers and managers were merely those of custodians of the mill company's property; they were caretakers for the mill company, the owners, and stood in the same position to the gas company as the mill company; and therefore the gas company were within their rights in refusing a supply of gas until the arrears had been paid.

In re Smith, Ex parte Mason, 41 W. R. 159, [1893] 1 Q. B. 323, applied.—PATERSON, v. GAS LIGHT AND COKE CO., C.A. 39.

See also, Nuisance, 1.

GOODWILL.—See Contract, 6; Inland Revenue, 17; Partnership, 2.

GRAIN.—See Metropolis Management, 10.

GUARANTEE:—

1. Contract—Memorandum in writing—Two documents—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4—Construction—Assignment.—In 1879 the defendants wrote to the plaintiff, by letter dated the 15th of September: "Burton, Balderson. Dear Sir,—We hereby guarantee the safety of the above investments"; and by letter dated the 16th of September: "We acknowledge to have received from you the sum of £710 as under: a mortgage on the estate at T. the property of Mr. Burton, £360; a mortgage on the estate at F., the property of Mr. Balderson, £350." The plaintiff A. advanced to Burton on mortgage of the estate at T. the sum of £360 through the defendants.

In 1891 the plaintiff A. conveyed and transferred to the plaintiff B., in consideration of £300, the benefit of the mortgage.

In 1896 the plaintiffs sued the defendants to recover the sum of £360 from them as guarantors of the mortgage.

Held, (1) that the two letters could be read together and were a sufficient memorandum of the contract within section 4 of the Statute of Frauds; (2) that the defendants guaranteed that the loan would be repaid; and (3) that the plaintiff B. could not sue upon the guarantee, and the plaintiff A. could recover only £60.—SHEERS v. THIMBLEBY, C.A.

2. Contract—Misrepresentation—Pleading—Scotland, law of—Mercantile Law Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 60), s. 6.—The pursuers alleged that the defenders' agent, knowing that D., R., & Co., customers of the defenders, were largely indebted to the defenders and were insolvent, conceived a fraudulent design of obtaining the pursuers' acceptances in favour of D., R., & Co., in order to apply them pro tanto in reducing D., R., & Co.'s debt to the defenders' bank. That in pursuance of this fraudulent scheme D., R., & Co. applied to the pursuers for accommodation, and referred them to the defenders' agent, who falsely assured the pursuers, first, that D., R., & Co. were in a thoroughly sound position financially and only required temporary accommodation; secondly, that the sum due to the defenders' bank was very trifling; thirdly, that D., R., & Co. had made up the losses which they had sustained through another company; and fourthly, that no portion of the proceeds of any acceptances by the pursuers would be applied in extinction of the bank's debt or of any obligation to them. That in reliance on these assurances the pursuers granted acceptances to D., R., & Co., which were applied to the credit of D., R., & Co.'s banking account with the defenders. D., R., & Co. were sequestrated, and the pursuers, as the bills fell due, were compelled to pay them. All the representations relied on were made orally.

Held (reversing the decision of the Second Division), that there was no cause of action; for as to the first three allegations, which undoubtedly came within the Mercantile Law Amendment (Scotland)

Act, 1856, the terms of section 6 of that Act being comprehensive and imperative that no oral representations made with the intent specified in the section should be of any legal effect, however false and fraudulent; and secondly, assuming that the fourth representation was independent of the statute, there was no relevant allegation that the bank did not give full effect to the alleged representation of their officer.—CLYDESDALE BANK v. PATON, H.L.

See also Bankruptcy, 25; Railway Company, 5.

HABEAS CORPUS.—See Practice, 33.

HACKNEY CARRIAGE.—See Metropolis Management, 9.

HEIRLOOMS.—See Settled Land, 8; Trustee, 10.

HERIOT.—See Copyhold.

HIGHWAY:—

1. Extraordinary traffic—Person by whose order traffic conducted—Highways Act, 1878, s. 23.—Where contractors have the direction and regulation of traffic upon a highway which they carry out by using traction engines, regulating the number of wagons attached to each engine and the weight of each wagon, and giving orders as to the time the vehicles shall start, they are persons "by whose order such weight or traffic has been conducted," within the meaning of section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, notwithstanding that their employers indicate the time during which they will be ready to receive the goods which the contractors have undertaken to deliver.—COLCHESTER v. GLOUCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

2. Extraordinary traffic—Person by whose order such traffic has been conducted—Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 23.—The appellant was the owner of a house and park at which he was carrying out building and other operations. Before any materials were ordered by the appellant samples were submitted to him, and if approved the person proposing to supply the material was asked to quote a price for it delivered free at the park. Orders were then given from time to time to the person who was to supply the material to deliver it at the park in such quantities as were required, but before giving such orders there was no contract entered into for the supply of any specified quantity of materials, nor was the appellant bound to take any materials at all. The persons to whom the orders were given employed and paid traction-engine owners to haul the goods to the park. The appellant neither directed nor had any control over the mode of carriage of the materials, though he knew that the delivery would be by traction engines. The carriage of the materials along the road was extraordinary traffic within section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, and damage was thereby caused to the road.

Held, by Lord Esher, M.R., and Rigby, L.J., Lopes, L.J., dissenting, that the appellant was not the person by whose order the traffic was conducted within the meaning of section 23, and was not, therefore, liable for the extraordinary expenses in repairing the road caused thereby.—GERARD (LORD) v. KENT COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A., 531.

See also Nuisance, 1.

HONDURAS, BRITISH, LAW of:

Limitations, Statute of—Registered title—Adverse possession—Lands Titles Registry Act—Consolidated Laws of 1887, c. 106, s. 30; c. 19, s. 5.

Held, with regard to the British Honduras Consolidated Laws of 1887, that the provisions of the Limitation Act (c. 19) apply to lands held under a title registered under the Lands Titles Registry Act (c. 106); and that, consequently, twenty years' adverse possession extinguishes by force of section 5 of the former Act a title registered under the latter Act.—BELIZE ESTATE CO. v. QUILTER, P.C.

HOTCHPOT.—See Settlement, 4; Will, 12-14.

HUSBAND and WIFE.—See Divorce, 2; Married Woman, 4.

INFANT:—

1. Custody—Talfourd's Act (2 & 3 Vict. c. 54)—Custody of Infants Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 12)—Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27), s. 5.—Under section 5 of the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886, the court has, after taking into account the various considerations mentioned in that section, full jurisdiction to override entirely the common law rights of a father in relation to the custody of his infant children.

In "having regard to . . . the conduct of the parents and the wishes as well as of the mother as of the father," the court will not treat the parents in an unequal manner or differently the one from the other, but will take the whole conduct and wishes of both parents into consideration.

The court will in a proper case give a mother the custody of her infant children, notwithstanding that the mother may have been guilty of matrimonial misconduct.—A. AND B., RE, C.A.

2. Maintenance—Guardian and ward—Accounts.—Where the mother is the sole guardian of the heir to large estates the sum allowed the mother for the upkeep of establishment and education of the heir ought to be such sum as prudent guardians would allow to her "as mother." To decide what is a reasonable sum all the circumstances of each case must be considered; the governing consideration being what is for the interest of the heir.

Whether the guardian of a minor heir is a relative or not, strict yearly accounts of the administration of the minor's property ought to be kept.—BARNES v. ROSS, H.L. (Sc.).

See also Bankruptcy, 19; Partition; Settled Land, 6; Solicitor, 4.

INJUNCTION:—

Practice—Crown, action on behalf of—Interlocutory injunction—Attorney-General—Undertaking in damages.—In granting an interlocutory injunction at the instance of the Attorney-General on behalf of the Crown, the court will not, as a general rule, require the Attorney-General to give the undertaking in damages usually required from an ordinary plaintiff as a condition of his obtaining such an injunction.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. ALBANY HOTEL CO., C.A.

See also Contempt; Contract, 4; Copyright, 3; Light; Metropolis Management, 13; Patent, 7, 8; Practice, 8, 43; Trade-Name, 1, 2.

INLAND REVENUE:—

1. Account stamp duty—Voluntary disposition—Death of donor within twelve months—Incidence of duty—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12), ss. 38, 39—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 7), s. 11.—Account stamp duty in respect of property coming within the meaning of section 38 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, is payable by the person delivering the account thereof required by section 39 of that Act, and not out of the estate of the deceased.—FOSTER, RE, THOMAS v. FOSTER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 333.

2. Estate duty—Exemption—Property settled by will or disposition—Property on which probate duty has been paid—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 21 (1).—By a marriage settlement personal property belonging to the wife was vested in trustees upon trust for the wife for life, and after her death for the husband for life, and after the death of the survivor upon trust for such persons as the wife should by deed or will appoint. The wife died before the commencement of the Finance Act, 1894, having by her will exercised the power of appointment in favour of certain beneficiaries. Probate duty was paid by her executors upon the value of the trust fund after deducting the value of the husband's life estate. On the death of the husband after the commencement of the Finance Act, estate duty was claimed by the Crown on the value of the trust fund.

Held, that the case came within the exemption from estate duty conferred by section 21, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act, and that the Crown was not entitled to estate duty in respect of the value on which probate duty had been paid.

Judgment of Vaughan Williams and Wright, JJ., ante, p. 476, affirmed. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. DODINGTON, C.A., 657.

3. Estate duty — Settlement — Apportionment — Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 6-9, 14. —A settlor by a voluntary settlement in 1881 directed the trustees in certain events to set aside various sums out of the trust funds in their hands for the benefit of the settlor's daughters, to be held on trusts subsequently declared. On the respective marriages of his daughters these sums were settled upon them. The plaintiff was the trustee of the voluntary settlement, and was also the residuary legatee and executor of the settlor. On the settlor's death he had paid the estate duty on the whole of the funds comprised in the voluntary settlement.

Held, that he was entitled to recover from the persons taking the benefit of the various settled sums a proportionate amount of the duty paid.—MEYRICK, RE, MEYRICK v. HARGREAVES, Ch.D. Chitty, J., 120.

4. Estate duty—Settlement—Contingent life interest —Subsequent subsisting limitations—Property passing on death—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2, 5.—By a marriage settlement the share of the wife in a certain trust fund, created by the will of her deceased father, was brought into settlement upon trusts to pay the income to the wife during the joint lives of herself and her husband, and after the death of either of them, then to pay the income to the survivor for life, and if the wife should survive her husband, and there should be no issue of the marriage, then upon trust for the wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns. There was no issue of the marriage, and the wife survived her husband, who died in 1895.

Held, that, on the death of the husband no estate duty was payable under sections 1 and 2 of the Finance Act, 1894, for that "subsequent limitations under the settlement continued to subsist" within section 5, sub-section 3, and therefore no property passed on the husband's death. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WOOD, Q.B.D., 663.

5. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Contingent settlement—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 5, sub-section 1 (a)—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 2, sub-section 1.—A contingent settlement of property is a settlement within the meaning of section 5 (1) of the Finance Act, 1894, and the property so settled is liable to settlement estate duty under that section.

A testator devised his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his wife during her life, and after her death in trust for all his children who being sons should attain the age of twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry under that age, in equal shares, and if there should be only one such child the whole to be in trust for that one child, and he directed that the trustees should retain the share of each daughter upon trust to pay the income thereof to her for her life, and after her death in trust for the children of such daughter. The testator died leaving at his death two sons and one daughter, all being under the age of twenty-one and unmarried.

Held, that settlement estate duty was payable under section 5 (1), not only upon the daughter's share, but also upon the whole residuary estate, as the whole was settled within the meaning of the section.—NEW'S TRUSTEE v. HUNTING, C.A., 577.

6. Estate duty—Tenant for life and remainderman —Value of estate—Deductions—Incumbrances created by tenant for life and remainderman under joint power of appointment—Annuities charged upon estate in favour of remainderman during life of tenant for life—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 1, 2, 7.—By the will of a testator who died in 1863 property was limited to trustees (subject to prior charges) upon trust for A. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail. By deed executed in 1887 A. and B. (the tenant in tail) barred the entail and reserved to themselves a joint power of appointment over the property, the limitations in default of the exercise of the power being to A. for life, with remainder to B. in tail. They then joined in creating mortgages by which in exercise of their joint power they appointed the fee simple of the property to the mortgagees to secure sums amounting at the death of A. to £230,000. Part of these sums was applied in redeeming existing incumbrances on the life estate of A. and otherwise for his benefit, the remainder being paid to or for the benefit of B. By a resettlement executed in 1888 the joint power of appointment was preserved, and certain annuities in favour of B. during the life of A. were charged upon the property, and subject thereto it was limited to A. for life, with remainder to B. for life, with remainders in tail. A. died in 1895.

Held, that, in determining the value of the property passing on A.'s death, the whole of the mortgage debt of £230,000 ought to be deducted, but that no deduction ought to be made in respect of the capital value of the annuities which ceased to be payable to B. on the death of A.

Section 7, sub-section (1), of the Finance Act, 1894, does not apply to cases falling under sub-section (7) (b) of the same section.—COWLEY (EARL) SETTLEMENT ESTATE DUTY, RE, Q.B.D., 538.

7. Estate duty—Will—Leaseholds specifically bequeathed—Specific bequest—General personal estate—Vesting — Executor — Assent—Assignment—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 9, sub-section 1.—Leaseholds specifically bequeathed pass to the executor as such, and consequently estate duty upon them is primarily payable out of the general personal estate of the testator, as they do not come within the exception in section 9 of the Finance Act, 1894.

Leaseholds specifically bequeathed vest, upon the assent of the executor, absolutely in the specific legatees, and no deed of assignment by the executors is necessary.—CULVERHOUSE, RE, COOK v. CULVERHOUSE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 10.

8. Income tax—Building society—Borrowing members—Advances—Repayments—Interest and capital—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D.—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), ss. 2, 10.—A building society received subscriptions from its investing members, and from the fund so raised advances were made to its borrowing members, secured by mortgage, and the advances were repaid to the society by instalments.

The Inland Revenue Commissioners claimed income tax under Schedule D. from the society on that portion of these repayments which represented the interest charged by the society on the respective loans.

Held, that the society was liable to pay income tax under Schedule D. upon the sums received by way of interest, although such sums were not "yearly" interest.

London County Council v. Grove, ante, p. 279, followed.—LEEDS BUILDING SOCIETY v. MALLANDAINE, Q.B.D., 501.

9. Income tax—County council—Interest received by county council on loans to other public bodies—Deductions—16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, Schedule D.—The London County Council, under powers given them by various statutes, borrowed large sums of money and created stock on which they paid interest to the stockholders, income tax being deducted by the Bank of England on behalf of the Commissioners of Income Tax before such payment. The London County Council also, under powers given them by various statutes, advanced sums of money by way of loan to certain public bodies from whom they received interest in full without deduction of income tax. The London County Council were held liable by the surveyor of taxes to pay income tax on such last aforesaid interest, and he assessed them under Schedule D. On appeal to the Commissioners, and subsequently to the Divisional Court, but not when before the surveyor, the London County Council contended that if they were so liable they were entitled to certain deductions in respect of income tax paid by them in other transactions.

Held, that the London County Council were properly assessed, and that they were liable to pay income tax on the sums received by them in full without deduction of income tax by way of interest on loans made by them. This was the only question before the surveyor, and therefore the only question the court had jurisdiction to deal with, and any other transactions by the London County Council could not be taken into consideration.

Decision of the Divisional Court, 44 W. R. 599, affirmed.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. GROVE, C.A., 279.

10. Income Tax—Deduction—Assessment of profits or gains—Payment to retiring manager—"Sum employed as capital"—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35) s. 100, Schedule D., Cases 1 and 2, r. 1.—Upon the transfer of an insurance business the transferees agreed to take into their service the transferors' manager at a fixed salary, with liberty to commute the same by payment to him of a gross sum to be calculated upon life tables. The transferees retained the manager's services for a short time and then paid him a gross sum in commutation of his salary. They claimed to deduct that sum in estimating their profits for income tax.

Held, that the agreement to pay the commutation money was in fact part of the consideration for the transfer of the business, that the payment was therefore a "sum employed as capital" and could not be deducted.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, [1896] 1 Q. B. 41, affirmed upon the above ground.—ROYAL INSURANCE CO. v. WATSON (SURVEYOR OF TAXES), H.L.

11. Income Tax—Exemption—Public library—Urban authority—"Building the property of a literary or scientific institution"—Public Libraries Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 53) ss. 4, 11, 12, 14—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 61, No. VI.—The exemption from income tax granted by the Income Tax Act, 1842 (Schedule A., s. 61, No. VI.), to any building "the property of any literary institution" includes buildings appropriated to free public libraries and used solely for the purposes of the libraries, whoever may be the owners of the buildings, and whether they are or are not supported by rates.

So held with regard to the Manchester free public libraries, and the decision of the Court of Appeal, 43 W. R. 438, [1895] 1 Q. B. 673, reversed, Lord Halsbury, L.C., dissenting.—MANCHESTER (MAYOR, &C., OF) v. MCADAM, H.L.

12. Probate duty—Foreign will—English company—Registration of transfer of shares to executor of testator—Executor de son tort—"Taking possession of and administering"—55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 37—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12), s. 40.—A testator, the registered owner of shares and debentures in an English company, was domiciled and died in America. By his will, made according to the American law, these shares and debentures passed to his executors, who requested the company to transfer into their names on the register as holders, in place of the testator, one preference share, one ordinary share, and one debenture. The executors did not obtain probate of the will in England, nor did they intend doing so, and the company was aware of this. The transfer was duly registered in the books of the company in London.

Section 37 of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, provides that if any person "shall take possession of and in any manner administer any part of the personal estate and effects of any person deceased without obtaining probate of the will or letters of administration . . . within six calendar months" he shall be liable to penalties.

Held, that the company had not taken possession of and administered the deceased's estate within the meaning of that section, and that it had not so intermeddled with the estate as to constitute itself an executor de son tort and render itself liable to the penalty imposed by that section.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. NEW YORK BREWERIES CO., Q.B.D., 606.

13. Probate duty—Undistributed residuary estate of English testator—Residuary legatee—Foreign assets.—A domiciled Englishman who died in 1892 (by his will which was proved in England by his executors who had an English domicil) bequeathed one-fourth of his residuary estate to his wife, who died in 1893, before her husband's estate had been fully administered. The one-fourth of the husband's residuary estate included money invested upon mortgages of real estate in New Zealand, which had not been specifically transferred or appropriated to the wife's executors. The Crown claimed probate duty on the wife's one-fourth share in the New Zealand mortgage securities.

Held, that the right of the wife's executors was to have the administration of the husband's estate completed and to have one-fourth of the proceeds paid to them; that, consequently, the wife's interest in her husband's residuary estate was an English asset, and probate duty was payable in England by her executors on one-fourth of the value of the New Zealand mortgages.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 340, [1896] 1 Q. B. 354, affirmed.—SUDELEY (LORD) v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L., 305.

14. Stamp duty—Agreement—Weekly payments—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule.—An agreement entered into by the owner and manager of an hotel provided that the manager should have the entire control of the business of the hotel, and should make certain weekly payments to the owner. The agreement was not for a specified time, but contained provisions for its determination by either party. It was stipulated that the agreement should not operate as a demise of the hotel to the manager, and should not constitute a partnership between the parties.

Held, that the agreement was security for an indefinite period for a sum of money payable at stated periods—viz., weekly—within the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, and that the sum chargeable with duty was the amount of the weekly payment, and not the total sum received yearly under the agreement.—CLIFFORD v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 14.

15. Stamp duty—Annuity secured by bond—"Conveyance on sale"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 54, 60, 87 (2), Schedule 1—Mersey Dock Acts Consolidation Act, 1858.—A dock company had statutory powers to borrow money for certain purposes, and "all money so borrowed by the board of directors was to be secured either by bonds or by annuities." The company having by deed granted a large number of annuities, the question was raised by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue at what rate the instruments by which they were secured to the annuitants should be charged with stamp duty under section 87 (2) of the Stamp Act, 1891, the annuity deeds having been presented to the Commissioners stamped as securities on an ad valorem duty of 2s. 6d. per cent. under the head "Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant, &c."

Held, that, as the annuities were payable for an indefinite period, and could only be redeemed or extinguished by the board purchasing them at the then market price, the deed securing such an annuity was in the nature of a "conveyance on sale" and not a bond to secure the repayment of an advance or loan to the company, and was therefore chargeable at the rate of 10s. per cent. as a contract of sale and purchase.—MERSEY DOCKS CO. BOARD v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 448.

16. Stamp duty—Bond—Company—Reconstruction—New bonds—Secured by mortgage—Bonds to be certified by trustee under mortgage—Certificate signed in England—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 82 (1), (b) (i., ii., iii.).—The A. T. and S. F. Railroad Co. being in arrear with the interest on their bonds, committees were appointed in L., N. Y., and A. to reorganize the company, the bondholders depositing their securities with an executive committee. Certain firms who were termed depositaries were to receive these old bonds for the committee, and give the depositor a certificate of deposit, for which when the time arrived the holders of such were to receive new bonds in the A. T. and S. F. Railway Co. In April, 1896, the new bonds were issued. These new bonds were secured by a general mortgage over all the property of the railway company in favour of the U. T. Co. of N. Y. as trustee for the bondholders. These bonds when issued were delivered to the U. T. Co., and each bond contained this proviso: "This bond shall not be valid for any purpose unless authenticated by the certificate hereon indorsed of the trustee under the said mortgage or deed of trust," and a trustee's certificate was indorsed on the back of each. These certificates were unsigned when the new bonds were delivered by the railway company to the U. T. Co. A certain number of these bonds were forwarded to Messrs. B., who were the depositaries in London, to enable them to make the exchange against certificates of deposit issued. Owing to the expense of insuring these new bonds it was arranged that the U. T. Co. should sign the trustee's certificate in London. Among the bonds which Messrs. B. received was the one now in question, which they delivered to the appellant J. B. in exchange for the certificate of deposit. The respondents were of opinion that the bond was issued in England within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, s. 82, and assessed the duty at £1 1s., the value of the bond being £204 3s. 4d. J. B. appealed.

Held, that the respondents were right, for, as the bond was made operative and valid in England, it was properly said to be issued there.—BARING v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

17. Stamp duty—Conveyance—Agreement for sale of goodwill and trade-marks—Business carried on abroad and in England—Trade-mark registered in England—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59.—An agreement under seal was entered into for the sale of a business carried on in the United States, including the goodwill of the said business and the trade-marks and names used in connection therewith, to purchasers in the United Kingdom. The vendors were manufacturers of soap in America, a large proportion of which they sold wholesale to a syndicate in England. The vendors were also owners of a trade-mark registered in and extensively advertised throughout the United Kingdom, whereby a demand for the soap had been created therein.

Held, that the goodwill and trade-mark were "property" within the meaning of section 59 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and not "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom" within the exception contained in that section, and that therefore so much of the consideration as represented the price paid for the said goodwill and trade-mark was chargeable with conveyance duty under section 59 of the Stamp Act, 1891.—BROOKE v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

18. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Contract for sale—Share in Colonial patent—Licence to use patent—"Property"—"Property locally situate out of the United Kingdom"—Doctrine of ejusdem generis—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59, sub-section 1.—An agreement made in England for the sale of a share in a patent granted in New South Wales and of a licence to use the patent in a particular district of New South Wales is an agreement for the sale of an interest in property within the meaning of section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, and is not within the exception of "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom." It is therefore chargeable with ad valorem duty.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.), ante, p. 61, affirmed.—SMELTING CO. OF AUSTRALIA v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 203.

19. Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Exchange of shares—Ad valorem stamp—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 54, 55, 73.—By an instrument entered into in pursuance of an agreement, a shareholder in one company transferred his shares to another company in exchange for certain shares in the latter company.

Held, that the transaction was a conveyance on sale of the shares under sections 54 and 55 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that the instrument was therefore chargeable with an ad valorem stamp.—COATS, J. & P., v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

20. Stamp duty—Debenture—Principal sum repayable with premium—Stamp Act, 1891, s. 86, Schedule I.—A company issued a series of debentures of £100 each containing an undertaking by the company to pay each registered holder on a specified date "£100, together with a premium thereon at £7 10s." The debentures were marketable securities not transferable by delivery within the meaning of Schedule I. of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Held, that each debenture was a security for the payment of £107 10s., and was liable to ad valorem stamp duty on that amount.—ROWELL v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D.

21. Stamp duty—Marketable security—Bond of foreign company—Security "issued," "offered for subscription," or "assigned or transferred" in the United Kingdom—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 82, sub-section 1 (b).—An arrangement for reconstructing an English company and transferring its business, property, and liabilities to a new company formed in America provided that the debenture-holders of the old company should receive in lieu of their debentures bonds issued by the new company. The holders in London of a debenture of the old company lodged it with the London agent of the new company, who sent it to the officials of the new company in Chicago, and such officials presented it there to a trustee for the debenture-holders and received in exchange from him a bond which they sent to their agent in London, by whom it was given in London to the owners in exchange for their debenture.

Held, that this bond did not come within section 82, sub-section 1 (b), of the Stamp Act, 1891, as having been either "issued," "offered for subscription," or "assigned or transferred" in the United Kingdom.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.), ante, p. 138, affirmed.—CHICAGO RAILWAY TERMINAL ELEVATOR CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 242.

22. Succession duty—Account duty—Insurance—Life policy—Assignment—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss. 2 and 17—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (52 Vict. c. 7), s. 11.—Some years before his death a father made a voluntary assignment of a policy of insurance on his own life to his daughter, and she afterwards paid the premiums; previously to the assignment the premiums were paid by the father. In 1890, on death of the father, the daughter received the money due under the policy.

Held, that the assignee was neither liable to succession duty nor account duty.—LORD ADVOCATE v. ROBERTSON, H.L. (Sc.), 674.

23. Succession duty—"New succession"—Annuity—"Valuable consideration in money or money's worth"—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss. 2, 15, 17, 18.—A testator, a peer, by his will bequeathed his residuary estate to his widow for life, with remainder to his nephew, if living, but, if not, to the person who should then be the testator's right heir at common law absolutely. The nephew died without issue in the lifetime of the testator's widow, and the testator's nieces, having survived the widow, were then the testator's co-heiresses and right heirs at common law. The defendant succeeded to the title, and a deed of settlement was then executed, by which the widow assigned her life interest in certain shares, and the nieces and the defendant assigned all their interest under the will, subject to the life interest of the widow, to trustees upon trust, by clause 1, to pay out of the income (inter alia) an annuity of £15,000 during the widow's life to the defendant for life; and, by clause 2, after the death of the widow, out of the income "to continue to pay the said annuity of £15,000" to the person for the time being holding the title, with trusts over. Upon the death of the testator's widow legacy duty was paid on his estate, and the Crown claimed succession duty in respect of the annuity which the defendant then became entitled to receive under clause 2 of the deed.

Held, that the annuity under clause 2 was not the same as the annuity under clause 1, as the former was payable out of the estate of the nieces and the latter out of the life estate of the widow, the annuities being also limited in favour of different persons, and that therefore there was a "succession" within section 2 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, in respect of the annuity under clause 2 of the deed; that the deed did not create an "alienation not conferring a new succession" within the meaning of section 15; that the deed was not a "contract made for valuable consideration in money or money's worth" so as to come within the exemption in section 17; and that the payment of legacy duty upon the testator's estate on the death of his widow did not bring the case within the exemption in section 18, as the legacy duty was not paid "in respect of the same acquisition of the same property."

Held, therefore, that the defendant was liable to pay succession duty.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WOLVERTON (BARON), C.A., 236.

24. Succession duty—Partnership deed—Contract for valuable consideration in money or money's worth—Succession Duty Act, 1851 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), s. 2.—A father admitted his son into partnership for a term of five years. The assets of the business were then valued at about £62,000, of which two-thirds was to be deemed the father's share, and one-third the son's; and one condition of the partnership was that in the event of the father dying within five years the son was to take the whole of the business and pay to the father's executors or administrators £10,000. By a contemporaneous deed the son agreed to pay to the father and his executors a rent-charge of £139 per annum in respect of the freehold property of the partnership.

The son brought no capital into the business, and the father died before the term of the partnership had expired.

The Inland Revenue Commissioners claimed succession duty from the son in respect of the then estimated value of the business, less the £10,000 to be paid to the father's representatives, and less the son's one-third share of the business, on the ground that although in form the partnership arrangement was a sale of part of the business to the son, it was substantially a settlement by the father under which at his death the son benefited, the property being admitted worth more than £10,000 at that date.

Held, that, taking all the circumstances in consideration, the £10,000 to be paid by the son was a fair commercial value to place upon the business for the purposes of the partnership. The transaction could not be regarded, therefore, as in substance a "settlement," and the son was not liable to pay succession duty on acquiring the whole of the business on the death of his father.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BROWN, Q.B.D., 446.

See also Company, 16; Crown.

INNKEEPER:—

Duty to provide accommodation—Traveller—Right to remain in inn.—A common innkeeper is under no legal obligation to receive into his inn a person who is not a traveller, or to permit to remain in his inn, after reasonable notice to quit, a person who, though he came to the inn as a traveller, has ceased to be a traveller.—LAMOND v. RICHARD, C.A., 289.

INSURANCE:—

1. Accident—Contract—Renewal—Continuation of old contract—New contract—Policy money—Insolvency—Creditors' deed.—Accident policy renewable yearly so long as the assured pays the specified premium in advance and the insurance company consent to receive it, and requiring the assured at each renewal to give notice of any change in his state of health since the payment of the last premium, with power for the company in such case to determine the policy,

Upon the payment of the premium for each year, an entirely new contract arises for that year only, and the amount payable under it on the accidental death of the assured in the current year for which a premium has been paid is not affected by any assignment or other obligation made or entered into by the assured in any previous year and not extending to after-acquired property.—STOKELL v. HEYWOOD, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

2. Burglary—Policy signed and sealed—Payment of premium—Condition precedent—Recital that premium had been paid—Estoppel—Waiver.—On the 14th of December, 1895, the plaintiff signed a proposal form addressed to the defendant company for an insurance against loss by burglary, the form stating that no insurance would be considered in force until the premium was paid. The first premium was stated to be 9s. 11d., to the 1st of January, 1897, and 9s. 9d. annually afterwards. On the 18th of December a protection note was given to the plaintiff, reciting the proposal and declaring the plaintiff to be provisionally protected, subject to the conditions contained in the form of policy used by the company, for seven days from that date. The seven days expired on the 25th of December, and on the night of the next day the plaintiff suffered a loss by burglary. On the 27th of December, at a meeting of the directors of the company, who were ignorant of the loss, a policy was duly signed and sealed insuring the plaintiff from the 14th of December, 1895, to the 1st of January, 1897, the policy reciting that the first premium, 9s. 11d., had been paid, and one of the provisoes therein stated that no assurance by way of renewal or otherwise should be held to be effected until the premium due thereon should have been paid. No premium was ever paid, and the policy never left the company's office.

Held, that the company must be taken to have waived the prepayment of the premium, and that they were therefore liable on the policy.—ROBERTS v. SECURITY CO., C.A., 214.

3. Fire—Contract of indemnity—Remedies of assured against third parties—Right of insurer to subrogation—Renunciation of remedies by assured—Right of insurer to recover value of remedies renounced.—A policy of fire insurance being a contract of indemnity, the insurer is entitled to recover from the assured, not merely the value of any benefit received by him by way of compensation from other sources in excess of his actual loss, but also the full value of any rights or remedies of the assured against third parties which have been renounced by him and to which, but for such renunciation, the insurer would have a right to be subrogated.—WEST OF ENGLAND FIRE INSURANCE CO. v. ISAACS, C.A.

4. Marine—Barratry of master—Master part-owner of ship—Barratry as against mortgagee of master's interest.—An act of a master and part-owner of a ship, which would be barratrous as against his co-owners, is barratrous as against the mortgagee of his interest in the ship—SMALL v. UNITED KINGDOM MARINE MUTUAL INSURANCE ASSOCIATION, C.A.

5. Marine—Capture—Total loss—Notice of abandonment—Recovery after action brought.—A ship insured under a policy covering war risks was, whilst carrying contraband of war destined for one belligerent government, captured by a cruiser of the other. The shipowners thereupon gave the underwriters notice of abandonment, which was refused, and the shipowners brought an action on the policy.

The war coming to an end, the prize court of the captors ordered the ship to be returned to her owners.

Held, that the return of the ship after action brought did not disentitle the owners to recover as for a total loss.—RUYS v. LONDON ASSURANCE CORPORATION, Q.B.D.

6. Marine—Freight—Commencement of risk—Time of engagement of goods—Loading port.—By a policy on freight "at and from any port or ports of loading on the west coast of South America to any port or ports of discharge in the United Kingdom" the freight was to be covered "from the time of the engagement of the goods."

Goods were engaged for the vessel which was to earn the freight, and were ready for shipment in her at the time of her loss, which occurred before she arrived at her first loading port on the west coast of South America.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (Lord Esher, M.R., Kay and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.), affirming the decision of Gorell Barnes, J., [1896] p. 154, that the "engagement" clause must be construed with reference to the voyage described in the policy, and, therefore, as the vessel had not arrived at her first loading port on the west coast of South America, the risk had not attached.—THE "COPERNICUS," C.A.

7. Marine—Policy on freight—Exception—Claim consequent on loss of time—Delay caused by peril of the sea—Frustration of adventure.—A policy of marine insurance against total loss of freight contained the following exception: "Warranted free from any claim consequent on loss of time, whether arising from a peril of the sea or otherwise."

While the ship was proceeding on a voyage under a charter, her main shaft broke by perils of the sea, and in consequence thereof she was delayed for so long a time as to frustrate the objects of the adventure, and the owners thereby lost their chartered freight. In an action by the owners against the underwriters,

Held, that the claim was within the warranty, and that the defendants were not liable.—BENSAUDE v. THAMES AND MERSEY MARINE INSURANCE CO., C.A., 114.

8. Marine—Premium—Liability of assured—Custom whereby broker is liable—Company's policy—Promise by assured to pay premium.—The general custom in the business of marine insurance, whereby the broker and not the assured is liable to the underwriter for the premium, is not limited to the case of a Lloyd's policy, but applies also to the case of a company's policy containing a promise on the part of the assured to pay the premium.—UNIVERSO INSURANCE CO. OF MILAN v. MERCHANTS' MARINE INSURANCE CO., C.A., 625

9. Marine—Reinsurance—Description of voyage in policy—"To any port or ports, place or places, in any order"—"For thirty days after arrival at final port"—Meaning of.—The plaintiffs effected a policy of reinsurance on a vessel with the defendants. The risk clause was "at and from Newcastle, N.S.W., to any port or ports, place or places, in any order, on the west coast of South America, and for thirty days after arrival in final port, however employed." The vessel sailed with a cargo from Newcastle, N.S.W., to Valparaiso, and there discharged the whole of it. She remained at Valparaiso for thirty days, and while there loaded partly with ballast and partly with sugar, the latter being part of her cargo for the United Kingdom. She then sailed for a port on the west coast of South America in order to take on board the remainder of her cargo, but while proceeding there she was stranded and became a total loss.

Held, that the words "final port" in the risk clause were not confined to the port of discharge, but included the final port of loading for the homeward voyage, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to recover.—CROCKER v. STURGE, Q.B.D., 271.

10. Marine—Salvage—Absence of sea peril—Towage services—Award—Conclusiveness of judgment of Admiralty Division as to supervening of sea peril.—The plaintiffs' ship, while insured by a time policy, sailed from port with an insufficient supply of coal, and by reason thereof she sailed in an unseaworthy condition. The coal having run short, she was towed by a trawler and a tug to her port of destination. There was no rough weather, neither did any accident or casualty happen to the ship. The Admiralty Division awarded salvage to the trawler and the tug. The plaintiffs having brought an action to recover from the underwriters the amount which they had been adjudged to pay,

Held, that the judgment of the Admiralty Division was not conclusive to show that some peril of the sea must have supervened; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.—BALLANTYNE v. MACKINNON, C.A., 70.

11. Marine—Warranty—Amount insured.—A warranty in a time policy that a vessel shall not be insured beyond a named amount means that it shall not be effectively insured to a larger amount; such a warranty is not broken by the owner taking out a new policy to cover the probable deficiency upon a policy effected with an underwriter who becomes insolvent, although the total nominal amount insured is thereby made to exceed the amount limited by the warranty.

A time policy upon hull and machinery of a steamship valued at £12,000 contained a proviso, "Warranted £2,400 uninsured." The owner effected time policies to the total amount of £9,600, one of the policies being effected with a syndicate to the amount of £5,000. During the currency of the policies the syndicate stopped payment, and eventually the large majority of its members became insolvent. The owner, estimating that the syndicate policy was not effective for more than £2,000, took out further policies upon the ship for £3,000. The ship was lost, and the total amount that the owner could in the most favourable event recover upon all the policies was less than £9,600.

Held, that there had been no breach of the warranty.—TRIESTE GENERAL INSURANCE CO. v. CORY, Q.B.D.

12. Securities—Contract to insure payment of debenture at maturity—Postponement of date of maturity by special resolution of debenture-holders—Liability of insurer.—The plaintiff, the holder of a debenture in a company which matured for payment on November 4, 1895, effected a policy of insurance with the defendants which, after reciting that the debenture matured on that day and that the plaintiff had paid a premium for insurance until that date, guaranteed to the plaintiff the due payment of the principal money secured by the debenture, if the debtors should make default for more than three calendar months in payment of any principal money due "under the debenture." Subsequently, by a special resolution of the debenture holders, which was neither assented to nor dissented from by the plaintiff, the date for payment of the debentures of the company was postponed. The plaintiff's debenture was not paid off on November 4, 1895, nor in three calendar months after that date.

Held, that, assuming the special resolution to be valid, the contract was nevertheless one of insurance against the default of the company to pay the amount of the debenture on the original date; that there had been a default by the company to pay money due under the debenture within the meaning of the policy; and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover the amount of the policy from the defendants, who were entitled on payment to be subrogated to the plaintiff's rights as modified by the special resolution.—FINLAY v. MEXICAN INVESTMENT CORPORATION, Q.B.D.

See also Bankruptcy, 33; Inland Revenue, 22.

INTEREST.—See Bankruptcy, 27; Settlement, 2; Will, 13.

INTERPRETATION ACT, 1889.—See Local Government, 17.

INTESTATES' ESTATES ACT:—

Escheat—Equitable interest—Proceeds of the sale of real estate directed to be sold under will—Beneficial interest ineffectually disposed of—Intestates' Estates Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71), ss. 4, 7.—Under sections 4 and 7 of the Intestates' Estates Act, 1884, the law of escheat applies to proceeds of the sale of real estate directed to be sold under the will.—WOOD, RE, ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. ANDERSON, Ch.D. Romer, J.

See also Administration, 7.

JOINT TENANCY:—

Freeholds—Leaseholds—Severance on marriage of female joint tenant—Leases by one joint tenant and husband of other joint tenant.—The marriage of one of two female joint tenants is not in itself a severance of the joint tenancy as regards either freeholds or leaseholds. In re Butler's Trusts, 36 W. R. 817, 38 Ch. D. 286, followed as regards the leaseholds.

The grant of a lease by one joint tenant and the husband of the other joint tenant is not such a disposition of the property by the husband as to sever the joint tenancy. The rule laid down in Robinson v. Preston, 4 K. & J. 505, 6 W. R. Ch. Dig. 87, as to the purchase of property by two or more persons, followed.—PALMER v. RICH, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 205.

JUSTICES:—

1. Bias—Hearing of an application for renewal of licence—Circular sent to magistrates to attend.—The justices of the Tower Division of the county of London refused to renew a licence to a certain public-house. Against their decision K., an aggrieved party, appealed to the Quarter Sessions. Prior to the hearing of the appeal the chairman of the Tower Bench issued a circular to all the magistrates of the county of London requesting them to attend on the day fixed for the hearing of the appeal, and informing them that on that day six appeals ralating to one licensed house in the Tower Division would be heard. The appeal was heard and dismissed. K. then obtained a rule nisi directed to the justices of the county of London, to show cause why their decision dismissing the appeal should not be set aside on the ground of bias.

Held, that, as the circular did not ask those justices who attended to vote in any particular way, and as no interested justices took part in the proceedings except as mere spectators, the proceedings were not vitiated, and therefore a mandamus ought not to issue commanding the justices to hear and determine the application.—REG. v. LONDON JUSTICES, KERFOOT, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 58.

2. Jurisdiction—Poor Law—Rating—Enforcement of, by distress-warrant—"Occupation" of rated property.—On a summons before justices to enforce a poor rate of a parish, the justices have jurisdiction, before issuing a warrant of distress, to inquire whether the person affected by the rate is in reality the principal person in occupation of the rated property.—REG. v. BAGSHAWE (DERBY JUSTICES), Q.B.D.

3. Jurisdiction—Public Health—Local Government—Insufficient water-closet accommodation—Non-compliance with sanitary notice—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 37 (3).—The respondent was summoned before a magistrate for non-compliance with a notice served upon him by a sanitary authority under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 37, sub-section 3, requiring the respondent to provide additional water-closet accommodation at premises of which he was the owner.

Held, that the magistrate was bound by the decision of the sanitary authority that there was not sufficient water-closet accommodation at the respondent's premises; and that, on proof of non-compliance by the respondent with the notice, it was the duty of the magistrate to convict the respondent.—ST. JOHN, HACKNEY, VESTRY v. HUTTON, Q.B.D., 92.

4. Jurisdiction—Search warrant—Information—Reasonable suspicion of felony—Sufficiency of information.—The information on which a search warrant for goods is applied for need not allege the actual commission of a larceny. It is sufficient if the information alleges, either directly or by fair intendment, that the informant has reasonable grounds for suspecting that a larceny has been committed.

The judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., (ante, p. 112, [1896] 2 Q. B. 418), affirmed.—JONES v. GERMAN, C.A., 278.

5. Licensing law—Refusal to renew—Appeal to quarter sessions—Costs—"Party"—Jurisdiction to order objector to pay costs—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49) s. 31, sub-section 5. —A person, who had duly served notice of his intention to object to the renewal of a licence at the general annual licensing meeting, appeared before the licensing justices and opposed the renewal, which was refused. The licence holder appealed to quarter sessions, having served notice of appeal on the objector, and the licence was renewed. The objector did not appear on the appeal.

Held, that the objector was a "party" within section 31, sub-section 5, of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and the quarter sessions had jurisdiction to order him to pay the costs of the appeal.

Reg. v. Justices of Gloucestershire, 41 W. R. 379, approved.—REG. v. KENT JUSTICES, C.A., 4.

6. Married woman—Appeal—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), ss. 5, 11.—The only mode of appeal from the decision of a court of summary jurisdiction on an application made for an order under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, is under section 11 of that Act, to the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division. A court of summary jurisdiction has no power in such a case to state a case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Divisional Court.—MANDERS v. MANDERS, Q.B.D., 287.

7. Married woman—Summary jurisdiction—Application by wife for separation—Costs—County court—Jurisdiction — Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), ss. 4, 5.—Section 5, sub-section (d), of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, gives the court of summary jurisdiction power to make provision for the payment of the costs of either party upon an application under the Act by a married woman against her husband.

Held, that this provision gives the court of summary jurisdiction exclusive jurisdiction over these costs, and that no action can be maintained in a county court by a wife or her solicitor to recover these costs from the husband.—CALE v. JAMES, Q.B.D., 317.

8. Married woman—Summary jurisdiction—Maintenance—Desertion—Cohabitation—Parties not living under same roof—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), s. 4.—There may be cohabitation without the parties necessarily living under the same roof.

A husband from time to time visited his wife, who was in service, and she had a child by him. She left service, and he refused to receive her, and said if she sent her boxes to the house where he was living they would be returned.

Held, that there had been cohabitation giving justices jurisdiction to hear a summons by the wife for desertion under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895.

Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 17 W. R. 264, L. R. 1 P. & D. 697, and Reg. v. Leresche, 40 W. R. 2, [1891] 2 Q. B. 418, considered and explained.—BRADSHAW v. BRADSHAW, P.D. & Ad.D., 142.

9. Married woman—Summary jurisdiction—Persistent cruelty causing wife to live apart—Continuing offence—Limit of time—Six months—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 30), ss. 4, 8—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11.—The offence of persistent cruelty or wilful neglect, causing a wife to leave and live separately and apart from her husband within the meaning of section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, is not a continuing offence, but is complete when the wife leaves the husband, and complaint must be made or information laid within six calendar months from that time, as required by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, which is incorporated by section 8 of the first-named Act.—ELLIS v. ELLIS, P.D. & Ad.D., 144.

10. Prohibition—Jurisdiction—Railway Clauses Act, 1863, s. 6—Interpretation.—Where the jurisdiction of justices depended upon a particular interpretation of a statutory offence under the Railways Clauses Acts, and the justices adjourned the hearing of a summons for such an offence for the question as to their jurisdiction to be determined, an application for a writ of prohibition against the justices is a just and convenient mode of procedure.

The offence of failing to erect and maintain a lodge or watchman at a level crossing over a turnpike road or public carriage road mentioned in section 6 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1863, applies to any turnpike road or public carriage road, and is not limited to such similar roads as are specifically mentioned in the special Act authorizing the construction of the particular railway.—REG. v. LONGE, Q.B.D.

See also Adulteration, 4; Common; Factory, 1; Master and Servant, 3; Metropolis Management, 12; Poor Law, 8, 9; Vaccination, 1, 2; Water, 2.

LANDLORD and TENANT:—

1. Lease—Assignment by tenant—Landlord's licence to assign—Landlord requiring consideration for licence—Deposit of money to secure performance of a contract between landlord and tenant—"Fine, or sum of money in the nature of a fine, payable for or in respect of such licence"—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 3.—Where by a lease the lessee is forbidden to assign the premises without the licence of the lessor, the lessor is, notwithstanding section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, entitled to require, as a condition of granting such licence, that the lessee shall deposit in his hands a sum of money by way of security for the completion of improvements which the lessee has agreed to make upon the premises; such a deposit not being a "fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine payable for or in respect of such licence" within the meaning of that section.—COSH'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 117.

2. Lease—Breach of covenant—Sufficiency of notice—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14 (1).—The notice "specifying the particular breach complained of" required to be served on a lessee under section 14 (1) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, as a condition precedent to the enforcement of a right of re-entry or forfeiture, must not specify the breach complained of by reference merely to the particular covenant which has been broken, but must give sufficient details to enable the lessee to understand with reasonable certainty what he is required to do to remedy the breach.—FLETCHER v. NOKES, Ch.D. North, J., 471.

3. Lease—Building agreement—Power of landlord to determine—Option to tenant to purchase—Interest of tenant after exercise of option.—A. entered into an agreement with B., by which B. was to build upon A.'s land, and A. was, upon the works being carried out, to demise the land to B. for ninety-nine years, and the agreement contained an option to B. to purchase the freehold. It was thereby provided (inter alia) that B. should forthwith proceed with the works, and completely finish on or before a certain day, and if B. should not perform the several agreements on his part, A. might determine the agreement and re-enter. A., being dissatisfied with B.'s progress, gave notice to B. to determine the agreement, B. having shortly before given notice to A. of B.'s intention to purchase.

Held, (1) that B. had made default in performing his part of the agreement; (2) that the option of purchase was, notwithstanding, well exercised; (3) that the contract so made did not in itself before completion put an end to the leasing parts of the agreement, but created fresh rights and liabilities between the parties, and the new relation of vendor and purchaser between them; (4) that assuming that A.'s notice to determine had put an end to B.'s rights so far as they arose directly from the building agreement, A. had not thereby put an end to the contract for sale or to B.'s rights thereunder; but (5) that after the exercise of the option, and pending completion, A.'s power, if any, to determine B.'s occupation, and B.'s rights and liabilities under the building agreement, became, as between A. and B., superseded and not enforceable.—RAFFETY v. SCHOFIELD, Ch.D. Romer, J., 460.

4. Lease—Company—Mining lease—Distress for rent—Express power to seize chattels of lessee on adjoining mine—Bill of sale—Registration—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), ss. 4, 6—Voluntary winding up—Debenture-holders' action—Priority of landlord to debenture-holders.—A power in a lease of a coal mine, which has no separate shaft and can be worked only through a neighbouring colliery, authorizing the lessor to distrain for rent in arrear on chattels of the lessee upon "adjoining or neighbouring collieries" is not a bill of sale within the Bills of Sale Act, 1878.

A distress under such a power made on chattels of the lessee, a limited company, before the commencement of its winding up, and before judgment has been given in a debenture-holders' action or a receiver effectually appointed, is good as against the debenture-holders.

Decision of Stirling, J., ante, p. 217, reversed on this point.—ROUNDWOOD COLLIERY CO., RE, C.A., 324.

5. Lease—Contract by lessee to purchase reversion—Power of distraint pending completion.—A lease is not determined at law by a contract by the lessee to purchase the reversion; but, in equity, the landlord's right to distrain is suspended pending completion of the contract, so long as the contract is subsisting and enforceable by action for specific performance; if, however, the contract is released or abandoned, or the lessee by unreasonable delay loses his right to specific performance, the landlord may then distrain.—ELLIS v. WRIGHT, C.A.

6. Lease—Covenant by lessee to pay all taxes, rates, and duties imposed in respect of the premises—Cost of new drainage—Liability of lessee.—By indenture of lease a tenant covenanted that he would "pay the land tax, sewers rate, and all other taxes, rates, duties, assessments, and impositions, parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, which now are or shall at any time during this demise be assessed or imposed on, or in respect of, the said demised premises, or of the rent hereby reserved." The vestry of the parish having, under the provisions of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, required the landlord to lay down new drainage on the demised premises, the latter executed the necessary works.

Held, that the landlord was entitled under the covenant to recover from the tenant the expenses the landlord had incurred in complying with the order of the vestry.—BRETT v. ROGERS, Q.B.D., 334.

7. Lease—Covenant by lessor to pay water rate—Water supplied for domestic use—Water supplied for trade purposes—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 3—The New River Company's Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict, c. clx.), ss. 35, 38, 40.—A covenant by the lessor of premises intended to be used as a café that he will pay all water rate "now or hereafter to be imposed or assessed upon the said premises, or on the lessor or lessees in respect thereof."

Held, not to apply to a sum payable by the lessees, in virtue of a special contract under section 40 of the New River Company's Act, 1852, for the supply of water for trade purposes.—FLOYD v. LYONS & Co., C.A., 435.

8. Lease—Covenant not to sub-let—Forfeiture—Relief—Protection of under-lessee—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 4.—The court has jurisdiction under section 4 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892, to grant relief to an under-lessee on forfeiture of the superior lease by the lessee, even where the forfeiture has been incurred by reason of the breach of a covenant not to assign without licence, against which breach no relief could have been obtained under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881. But such relief will only be granted where the under-lessee can prove that he is blameless and has exercised all precautions which a reasonable, cautious, and careful person would use.

L. became assignee of a sub-lease of a term of twenty-one years less twelve days; the original lease contained a covenant not to assign or sub-let without consent. The sub-lease was made without consent, but L. had no actual notice of the covenant, and his contract did not give him a right to call for the title of the original lessee. L. laid out a large sum of money on the property.

Held, that L. was guilty of negligence in precluding himself from investigating his lessor's title, and was not entitled to relief against forfeiture incurred by the lessee through breach of covenant.—IMRAY v. OAKSHETTE, C.A., 681.

9. Lease—Covenant running with land—Covenant by lessee to buy exciseable liquors only from lessor or his assigns—Assign of lessee not named—Assign whether bound—Proviso for abatement of rent on observance of covenant—Assign of lessee whether entitled to benefit of covenant after lessor has assigned his wine and spirit business.—A covenant by the lessee of a hotel (the assign of the lessee not being named) to buy exciseable liquors only of the lessor or his assigns runs with the land, and is binding upon the assign of the lessee. Such assign, therefore, if in fact he has bought exciseable liquors only of the assigns of the lessor's wine and spirit business, is entitled to the benefit of a proviso for an abatement of rent on due observance of the covenant.—WHITE v. SOUTHEND HOTEL Co., C.A., 434.

10. Lease—Mining lease—Compensation clause—Subsidence of surface—Injury to buildings—Damages.—Mines were granted by deed, with a proviso that the grantee and his assigns should make reasonable compensation for all damage occasioned to the surface or to buildings thereon by reason of the working of the mines.

Held, that damage by subsidence was not covered by the proviso, and consequently that the grantee and his assigns were liable in an action for damages for injury done to the surface by subsidence.

Davis v. Treherne, 6 App. Cas. 460, followed.

A lessee of mines is not liable in damages to the owner of buildings on the surface who has acquired a right to have the buildings uninjured by underground workings, for injury occasioned to the buildings during the currency of the lease, but which in fact arose, not from any act of the lessee, but from an excavation made by the lessee's predecessor in title before the date of the lease.—GREENWELL v. LOW BEECHBURN COAL Co., Q.B.D.

11. Mortgage—Tenant's fixtures — Removability—Rights of mortgagee in possession against owner of the fixtures.—A landlord demised certain premises to the plaintiff, who during his tenancy erected certain tenant's fixtures thereon. Prior to the determination of the tenancy the landlord agreed to give the tenant, on the expiration of his tenancy, permission to leave his fixtures on the premises, with a view to their being purchased by the incoming tenant, or, in the event of their not being purchased, to enter and remove them. Subsequent to the erection of the fixtures by the plaintiff, but prior to the said agreement, the landlord mortgaged the premises to the defendants, who, after the determination of the plaintiff's tenancy, became mortgagees in possession. The defendants, who were not parties to the said agreement, and had no knowledge of it, refused to permit the plaintiff, after he had quitted the premises at the termination of his tenancy, to remove the fixtures, claiming that they were entitled to them under the mortgage deed. In an action for the delivery up of the fixtures, and for damages for their wrongful detention,

Held, that as the defendants were mortgagees in possession under a deed subsequent to the erection of the fixtures, the agreement between the landlord and the defendant could not affect their rights as to the fixtures under their mortgage deed.—THOMAS v. JENNINGS, Q.B.D., 93.

12. Negligence—House let in dangerous condition—Defective staircase—Injury to tenant's workman—Liability.—There is no implied obligation upon the landlord of an unfurnished house towards his tenant not to let the house in a defective or dangerous condition. Consequently, the landlord is not liable in an action for negligence brought against him by the tenant for injuries sustained by reason of such defective condition; a fortiori the landlord is not liable in such an action brought against him by a workman employed by the tenant.—LANE v. COX, C.A., 261.

13. Notice to quit—Agreement for three years—Tenant from year to year—Commencement of tenancy.—The defendant went into possession of certain premises under an agreement for three years by which he agreed to pay a yearly rent of £50, such rent to commence as from the 9th of May, 1891, and the first half-quarter was to become due and payable on the 24th of June, and after that on the usual quarter days. At the end of the three years he stayed on, and continued to pay the rent quarterly as before. On the 28th of September, 1896, notice to quit was served on him for the 25th of March, 1897.

Held, that the notice to quit was bad, as the tenancy did not commence on the 25th of March.—SIMMONS v. UNDERWOOD, Q.B.D.

14. Notice to quit—Yearly tenancy—Six calendar months—Notice given on customary half-year—Notice insufficient.—In a lease for a yearly tenancy, determinable on the 13th of May in any succeeding year, it was expressly provided that six calendar months' notice to quit should be given by either side. In that part of the country (county Durham) it was admittedly the custom for tenants of small holdings to pay rent on the 22nd of November and on the 13th of May in each year; and notice to quit given after the 13th but before the 22nd of November was commonly accepted as a full six months' notice expiring on the 13th of May following.

On the 21st of November, 1895, a notice to quit on the 13th of May, 1896, having been served on the tenant under the lease above mentioned, Held, that, notwithstanding the custom, the notice was invalid, it not being a six calendar months' notice as required by the terms of the lease.—TRAVERS v. MASON, Q.B.D., 77.

15. Underlease—Covenants to repair—Measure of damages.—Where an under-lessee is liable to his immediate lessor for breach of his covenant to keep the demised premises in repair, all the circumstances must be considered and the damages assessed at such a sum as reasonably represents the damage which the covenantee has sustained. Should the under-lessee have notice that the underlessor is liable over to his superior landlord, that is one of the circumstances to be considered.

The official referee, in such a case, estimated the amount at the cost of doing the repairs, less an abatement for the term of years still to run in the underlease. The immediate reversion, on the expiration of the underlease, consisted only of a few days.

Held, that he had properly assessed the damages, and the fact that the orginal lessee might not have to repair as required in the head lease was not a matter which could be gone into.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 56, [1895] 2 Ch. 377, affirmed.—CONQUEST v. EBBETTS (EBBETTS v. CONQUEST), H.L., 50.

LANDS CLAUSES ACTS:—

1. Taking lands — part of building — Material detriment to remainder—New access to building—Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 68 —Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 92 —Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Act, 1892 (56 & 57 Vict. c. lxxix.), s. 42—Costs of special case—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), ss. 7, 20.—A railway company's special Act provided that the owners of houses or other buildings, whereof parts only were required for the purposes of the Act, might, if such portions could be severed from the remainder of such properties without material detriment thereto, be required to sell to the company the portions only of the premises so required, without the company being obliged to purchase the whole.

The railway company gave notice to treat for a portion of a factory. The notice to treat comprised a portion of land over which lay the only access for vehicles from the public highway to the factory. The sole purpose for which the railway would use the land was to build a viaduct to carry the railway, and sufficient access to the remainder of the land could be provided through an archway of the viaduct. At the arbitration the company contended that the provision of such access was an accommodation work which they would be bound to make under section 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845; and, whether so bound or not, they undertook to make and maintain the access in question and to grant a perpetual right of way through the archway.

Held, that, in considering whether the portion proposed to be taken could be severed from the remainder without material detriment thereto, the arbitrator was entitled to take into consideration the obligation imposed upon the company under 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, to make and maintain accommodation works for providing access to the remainder of the land.

Held, also, by Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith, L.J., that, apart from section 68, the company had power to grant a perpetual right of way through the archway; and that therefore the arbitrator was entitled to take that into consideration.

The costs of a special case stated by an arbitrator appointed under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, are now, by section 20 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, in the discretion of the court.

Holliday v. Mayor, &c., of Wakefield, 20 Q. B. D. 699, 36 W. R. Dig. 8, upon this point held to be no longer applicable.—GONTY AND MANCHESTER RAILWAY CO. ARBITRATION, RE, C.A., 83.

2. Compensation—Costs—Land compulsorily taken —Costs of arbitration—Offer made by company—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 34.—A railway company seeking to acquire land under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, an arbitration took place under that Act to determine the amount of compensation to be paid by them to the owner of the land. The company had previously made an offer of the sum of £11,000. Part of the landowner's claim was in respect of damage that would be caused to the residue of his land, which was building land, by cutting it off from the natural outfall for its drainage. When the parties came before the arbitrator, it was agreed between them that a right should be reserved to the landowner of making a sewer, for the purpose of draining his land, under the railway and land of the company; and consequently no claim in respect of such damage as before mentioned was ultimately submitted to the arbitrator. The arbitrator awarded the sum of £10,029 to the landowner.

Held, that, although the sum awarded was less than the amount of the company's offer, the company were liable under section 34 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to pay the costs of the arbitration to the landowner, on the ground that the award was not in respect of the same subject-matter as that in respect of which the offer was made.—MILES v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A.

LEASE.—See Landlord and Tenant, 1-10; Mortgage, 6; Solicitor, 18, 19; Trustee, 4; Will, 21-23.

LIBEL:—

1. Consolidation of actions — Actions against different defendants for same libel—Time for making order—Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 64), s. 5.—An order may be made under section 5 of the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, consolidating actions by the same plaintiff against different defendants in respect of the same libel before the defences in the actions have been delivered.—STONE v. PRESS ASSOCIATION, C.A., 641.

2. Counter-claim for damages against informer.—No counter-claim can be maintained by the publishers of a libellous work against a person informing the individuals libelled of the publication and who bring actions against the publishers resulting in the recovery of damages.—SAUNDERS v. SEYD CREDIT INDEX CO., C.A.

3. Privileged occasion—Excess of privilege—Defamation—Malice.—The appellant acted for some time as agent to an insurance company at his own offices. After some correspondence as to a change of terms upon which the parties could not agree the company's secretary sent to persons who insured through the appellant a circular stating that the agency of the appellant at his offices had "been closed by the directors." The appellant having brought an action for libel against the company the judge ruled that the statement was capable of a defamatory meaning, but that the occasion was privileged. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, that the statement was a libel, that it was untrue, and that the defendants had exceeded the privilege, but did not find actual malice.

Held, that judgment must be for the company, on the grounds that the statement was not capable of a defamatory meaning, that it was true, that the occasion was privileged, that the finding of the jury as to excess of privilege was insufficient, and that there was no evidence of malice for the jury.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, [1895] 2 Q. B. 156, affirmed.—NEVILL v. FINE ART AND GENERAL INSURANCE CO., H.L.

See also Practice, 29, 51.

LICENSING LAW:—

1. Closing hours—Person found drunk on licensed premises during closing hours—Penalty—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 12.—A person who is found drunk on licensed premises during closing hours when the premises are actually closed to the public, and who is neither a lodger nor inmate in the house, may be convicted under section 12 of the Licensing Act, 1872, of "being found drunk on licensed premises," as such premises do not cease to be licensed premises when they are actually closed to the public during closing hours.—REG. v. PELLY, Q.B.D., 504.

2. Constable demanding admission to licensed premises—Private room—Refusal by keeper of licensed premises—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 16.—Section 16 of the Licensing Act, 1874, does not give a police-constable power to demand admission to a private room upon licensed premises, unless some reason is shown for supposing that violations of the Act are being, or are about to be, committed.—DUNCAN v. DOWDING, Q.B.D., 383.

3. Conviction—Selling liquor without a licence—Protection order—Licensing Act, 1872, s. 3.—The licence-holder of certain licensed premises remained on the premises and continued to sell liquor after a protection order had been granted in respect of the premises to another person.

Held, that the licence-holder was not liable to conviction for selling liquor without having a licence under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872.—ANDREWS v. DENTON, Q.B.D., 500.

4. Licence — Intoxicating liquors — Exemption—Children of soldiers who served in Peninsular War—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 3—56 Geo. 3, c. 67.—The benefit granted by 56 Geo. 3, c. 67, to the children of the officers and men who served his Majesty in the Peninsular War to set up and exercise a trade "in any city, town, or place within this country, without let, suit, or molestation, notwithstanding any statute, law, ordinance, custom, or provision to the contrary," does not exempt this class of persons from the provisions of the general public statutes, but has reference only to customs, charters, bye-laws, and the like, existing in particular localities.

Held, therefore, that K., the son of a soldier who had served in the Peninsular War, was properly convicted for having sold intoxicating liquors without obtaining a licence as required by section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872.—KILLIN v. SWATTON, Q.B.D., 235.

5. Sale during prohibited hours—Bonâ fide traveller—Consumption off the premises—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), ss. 9, 10.—The provisions of section 10 of the Licensing Act, 1874, as to the sale of intoxicating liquor to a bonâ fide traveller during prohibited hours do not exempt a licensed victualler from being convicted under section 9 for selling intoxicating liquor during prohibited hours if the sale was for consumption off the premises; and it is no defence in such a case that the defendant truly believed that the person supplied with liquor was a bonâ fide traveller. — MOUNTIFIELD v. WARD, Q.B.D., 288.

See also Vendor and Purchaser, 8.

LIGHT:—

Access — Photographic studio — Injunction—Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 3.—A photographer is entitled to the uninterrupted access of such a light as will enable him to enjoy his studio for photographic purposes, and his right will not be affected by the fact that he has not enjoyed the light required for that particular purpose for the period of twenty years.—LAZARUS v. ARTISTIC PHOTOGRAPHIC CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 614.

See also Limitations, Statute of, 2; Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

LIMITATIONS, STATUTE of:—

1. Joint debt—When time begins to run—Rights of co-debtors inter se.—As between co-debtors the Statute of Limitations begins to run, not from the accrual of the joint debt to the creditor, but from the time when one of the co debtors is damnified by being compelled to pay more than his just share of the common debt. Section 14 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, is intended only to give protection against the common creditor, and does not affect the rights and liabilities of the co-contractors inter se.

Wolmershausen v. Gullick, [1893] 2 Ch. 514, approved.—GARDNER v. BROOKE, C.A. (Ir.).

2. Light — Obstruction — Administrator — Injury committed by deceased person—Continuing injury— 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 2.—Where a person more than six months before his death erected a building which obstructed the plaintiff's ancient lights, and the plaintiff within six months of the grant of administration of the deceased person's estate, but more than six months after the death, brought an action against the defendants as administrators of the estate,

Held, following Woodhouse v. Walker, 28 W. R. 765, 5 Q. B. D. 404, that the action might be maintained, and was not barred by section 2 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42.—JENKS v. CLIFDEN (VISCOUNT), Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 424.

3. Mortgage—Conveyance subject to mortgage—Person claiming under a mortgage—Real Property Limitation Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4, c. 28)—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 2.—In 1886 the owner of an undivided moiety of land which for the previous eleven years had been in the possession of the owner of the other moiety, mortgaged his moiety, and in 1890 conveyed his moiety, subject to the mortgage, to the plaintiff, the land still continuing in the possession of the owner of the other moiety. The plaintiff subsequently paid off the mortgage, and in 1896 brought an action to recover possession of the moiety.

Held, that the plaintiff on paying off the mortgage did not become a "person claiming under a mortgage" within the meaning of 7 Will. 4, c. 28, and that that Act does not confer a new right of entry on the mortgagee where, at the date of the mortgage, the land is held adversely to the mortgagor by another person in whose favour the statute has, at the date of the mortgage, already begun to run against the mortgagor.—THORNTON v. FRANCE, C.A.

4. Settlement—Power of appointment—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), ss. 1-3, 20—"Person through whom another person is said to claim"—"Appointee"—"Other estate, interest, right, or possibility"—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), ss. 1, 2, 9.—A tenant from year to year, under a verbal agreement, of settled land remained in possession for more than twelve years from 1876 without paying rent or giving any acknowledgment. Under the settlement the land was limited to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to such uses as A. should by deed or will appoint. This power of appointment was exercised by A.'s will. A. was barred shortly before his death. B., who succeeded A., died without having recovered the land in 1891. On an application to determine whether the estate of A.'s appointees, which thereupon came into possession, was barred,

Held, that the limitation to the appointees must be read into the settlement which created the power; and, applying the principle laid down by Tindal, C.J., in James v. Salter, 3 Bing. N. C. 544 (p. 553), that the case fell within the latter part of section 2 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, and that B. being the person last entitled to a particular estate, and not being in possession or receipt of the profits of the land when his interest determined by his death in 1891, the appointees had a further period of six years from that time to bring their action; and therefore that their estate was not barred.

The words "other estate, interest, right, or possibility" in section 20 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, and the word "appointee" in section 1 of the same Act, discussed and considered.—DEVON (EARL) SETTLED ESTATES RE, WHITE v. DEVON, Ch.D. Chitty, J., 25.

See also Bankruptcy, 12; Company, 11; Estoppel; Executor, 1; Railway Company, 1; River, 1; Solicitor, 3; Trustee, 2, 9.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT:—

1. Arbitration—Paving expenses—Apportionment—Award of arbitrator—Remedy of local authority—Proceedings to enforce award—Jurisdiction of High Court—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 150—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 12.—An award of an arbitrator under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, fixing the proportion of paving expenses payable by an owner of premises to the local authority is not enforceable under section 12 of the Arbitration Act, 1889.—WILLESDEN LOCAL BOARD v. WRIGHT, C.A.

2. Building plans—Refusal by district council to sanction—Action of mandamus.—An action of mandamus will not lie against a district council to compel them to approve building plans which they have bonâ fide in the exercise of their discretion refused to approve.—SMITH v. CHORLEY DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 417.

3. Bye-law — Old building — Reasonableness — Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 157—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 23.—Under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as amended by section 23 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, rural sanitary authorities are empowered to make bye-laws with regard to (inter alia) cesspools in connection with buildings.

Held, that it was no defence to a summons for contravention of such a bye-law that the building in question had been erected before an order had been made by the Local Government Board under section 276 of the Public Health Act, 1875, extending the powers of section 157 to the rural sanitary authority.

The bye-law provided that a cesspool to be constructed in connection with a building should be at least 50 feet distant from a dwelling-house or building in which persons were employed.

Held, that the bye-law was reasonable.—SIMMONS v. MALLING DISTRICT COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 603.

4. County council—Bye-law—Validity—Prohibition of use of profane or obscene language—Bye-law made "for good rule and government," and "for prevention and suppression of nuisances"—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 23—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 16.—The respondent was charged under a bye-law made by a county council under section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which was as follows: "No person shall, in any house, building, garden, land, or other place, abutting on, or near to, a street or public place, make use of any violent, abusive, profane, indecent, or obscene language, gesture, or conduct, to the annoyance of any person in such street or public place."

The facts were sufficient to justify a conviction if the bye-law was valid, but the justices declined to convict.

On a case stated,

Held, that the bye-law was made for "good rule and government," and "for prevention and suppression of nuisances," within the meaning of section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and therefore was valid under section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, and the respondent ought to be convicted.—MANTLE v. JORDAN, Q.B.D.

5. Drainage—Single drain connecting different houses with public sewer—Liability to repair—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 13, 41—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.—In an urban district in which Part III. of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, had been adopted several houses belonging to different owners were connected with the public sewer by a single drain, constructed previously to the adoption of that Act.

Held, that the drain was a "single private drain" within the meaning of section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, and that the local sanitary authority were entitled to recover from the owner of one of the houses his proportion of the cost incurred by them in re-laying the drain.

Self v. The Hove Commissioners, 43 W. R. 300, [1895] 1 Q. B. 685, followed.

Hill v. Hair, 43 W. R. 651, [1895] 1 Q. B. 906, disapproved.—EASTBOURNE (MAYOR) v. BRADFORD, Q.B.D., 31.

6. Drainage—Surface water from road—Right to discharge into natural watercourse—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 15, 16, 17, 308.—The plaintiffs were the owners of an estate in the neighbourhood of a certain town, part of which estate was laid out for building, and which included a portion of the course of a small stream. Three roads upon this estate, situated within the natural watershed of the stream, and originally laid out by the plaintiffs, had been taken over by the defendants, the urban district council, after they had constructed a system of drains and sewers for them under the powers of the Private Streets Works Act, 1892. In the scheme originally proposed by the defendants the surface water from these roads was allowed to flow into the sewers; but, the Local Government Board having refused to sanction any scheme which did not provide a separate system for carrying off the surface water, the defendants had provided such a system by drains which discharged the surface water into the stream. The defendants' drains were furnished with catch pits, the best known method of intercepting sand and silt. The plaintiffs nevertheless objected that the water so discharged carried with it a great quantity of sand, silt, and other solid matter washed off the roads, and was much more in quantity than would have naturally flowed into the stream, and that its discharge into the stream would injure the plaintiffs by causing floods and silting up the stream. They accordingly brought an action to restrain the defendants from permitting any water, sand, silt, or other solid matter to flow through their drains into the stream.

Held, that sections 15, 16, and 17 of the Public Health Act, 1875, authorized the defendants in doing what the plaintiffs complained of; and that the plaintiffs must be content with the remedy by way of compensation afforded by section 308.—DURRANT v. BRANKSOME DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A.

7. Member having personal interest in subject-matter of proceedings—Local Government Act, 1894, s. 46.—The fact that one of the members of a public body has a personal interest in the subject-matter of the proceedings will not vitiate the acts of such body unless it be sitting in a judicial capacity.

A local board fulfilling the duties cast on them by the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 26 (1), is not sitting in a judicial capacity.—MURRAY v. EPSOM LOCAL BOARD, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 185.

8. Nuisance—Abatement—Action by local authority—Consent of Attorney-General—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 107.—Proceedings by a local authority under section 107 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to enforce the abatement of a nuisance from which the local authority suffers no damage, can only be taken with the consent of the Attorney-General.

Wallasey Local Board v. Gracey, 35 W. R. 694, 36 Ch. D. 593, approved.—TOTTENHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. WILLIAMSON, C.A.

9. Nuisance—Railway company—Manure carried by—Unloading of at station—Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 52), s. 107.—The Great Northern Railway Co. carried for delivery to customers, and loaded and unloaded, manure at their station at Lurgan. The local authority obtained an order from the justices under section 107 of the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878, prohibiting the company loading or unloading the manure at any part of their station or line that was less than one hundred yards from any dwelling-house.

Held, that this did not constitute a nuisance within the Act, and that the order of the justices was wrong.—GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO. v. LURGAN TOWN COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D. (Ir.).

10. Nuisance — Sewer — Diversion of.—A local authority in exercise of their statutory powers diverted the sewage of one drain or sewer into another. The other sewer was already surcharged with sewage, and damage was thereby occasioned to an individual occupier.

Held, that the act of the local authority was not a mere omission to perform their statutory duties, but a committing of a legal wrong; and that the individual injured thereby had a good cause of action for damages.—DENT v. BOURNEMOUTH CORPORATION, Q.B.D.

11. Paving expenses — National school — Charge upon the premises—Enforcement of charge by sale or mortgage—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 150, 257.—The trustees of a National school, the site of which had been conveyed to them under section 6 of the School Sites Act, 1841, are liable as "owners" under section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to be charged with the expenses of making up roads adjoining their land; and until payment such expenses are a charge upon the premises under section 257 of the same Act.

So held, affirming the decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 231.

But such charge cannot be enforced by sale or mortgage of the premises.

So held, reversing the decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 231.—HORNSEY DISTRICT COUNCIL v. SMITH, C.A., 581.

12. Public Health—Farmer keeping cows on his premises — "Cowkeeper" — Licence from County Council—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 20, 141.—A person who, being the occupier of a farm within the county of London, keeps upon his premises cows, the milk of which is used not for sale, but for fattening calves, is not a "cowkeeper" within section 141, and therefore not a "dairyman" within section 20, of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and, consequently, does not require a licence from the London County Council for the keeping of such cows.—UMFREVILLE v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

13. Public health—Drain or sewer—Single drain draining several houses—Liability of corporation to repair—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 15, 41—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.—The owner of several houses, each draining into a common drain at the rear of the houses and thence at one end into the public sewer in the road, applied for a mandamus to the corporation to repair and maintain the said drain as being a sewer. No application had previously been made to them under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875, on complaint of the existence of a nuisance.

Held, that the corporation was liable to repair and maintain the drain, and that their general liability under section 15 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to keep in repair all sewers belonging to them was not taken away by section 19 of the Amendment Act of 1890, which extends section 41 of the Act of 1875, and which was adopted by the corporation in their local Acts.

Held, further, that, as a general rule, in such cases as this, a mandamus was not the proper remedy, but that complaint should be made to the Local Government Board under section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875.—REG. v. HASTINGS (MAYOR OF), Q.B.D., 109.

14. Public health—Paving charges—Duty imposed by Act of Parliament—Trespass—Memorial to Secretary of State—West Hartlepool Extension and Improvement Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 113), ss. 80, 349—Public Health Act, 1875, s. 268.—Where the Legislature has imposed on any persons duties the discharge of which requires entry on lands, these duties are imposed irrespective of the ownership of the lands in question, and acts done in due discharge of such duties do not constitute a trespass.

The judge, being of opinion that under the circumstances of the case the defendant had a grievance on account of certain charges made against him for paving and sewering streets,

Held, following Walthamstow Local Board v. Staines, [1891] 2 Ch. 606, 40 W. R. Dig. 131 (which was decided on section 268 of the Public Health Act, 1875, with which section 349 of the local Act was practically identical), that the proper course for the defendant was by way of appeal to the Secretary of State by memorial for relief.—WEST HARTLEPOOL (MAYOR) v. ROBINSON, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 312.

15. Public health—Sewers—Duty of local authority to drain district—Remedy for default—Mandamus—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 15, 299.—The obligation imposed on a local authority by section 15 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to make such sewers as may be necessary for draining their district cannot be enforced by mandamus, the only remedy being that provided by section 299—viz., by complaint to the Local Government Board.

Robinson v. Mayor, &c., of Workington, ante, p. 453, followed.—PEEBLES v. OSWALDTWISTLE URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 454.

16. Public Health—Sewers—Sewers not sufficient to drain district—Special damage—Action against local authority—Statutory remedy—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 15, 19, 299.—Where a local authority has neglected to make such sewers as are necessary for effectually draining their district, and special damage is thereby caused to an individual, no action will lie against them, the sole remedy being by complaint to the Local Government Board as provided by section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875.—ROBINSON v. WORKINGTON (MAYOR OF), C.A., 453.

17. Public Health—Sewers—Street—Statute, Repeal of—Adoption of repealing Act—Interpretation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 63), s. 38—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 151, 257—Notice under section 150—Effect of adoption of Private Streets Works Act, 1892, after a notice has been given under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875.—Notices under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring the owner of a house to sewer and make up the street in which his premises are situated, are valid if duly given while that Act is in operation, and can be enforced notwithstanding that before the works required are actually done the local authority has adopted the Private Streets Works Act, 1892, section 25 of which excludes the operation of section 150 of the Public Health Act.

Decision of North, J., ante, p. 612, affirmed.—HESTON DISTRICT COUNCIL v. GROUT, C.A., 697.

18. Public health—Tenant for life—Remainderman—Expense of sanitary repairs—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 11, 117, 121.—The expenses of sanitary repairs ordered by the local authority under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, are payable out of corpus, and are not borne by the tenant for life.—LEVER, RE, CORDWELL v. LEVER, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 172.

19. Public health—Service of notices by post—"Prepaid letter"—Evidence of service—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 257, 267.—In order to prove that notices have been duly served by post under section 267 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is not sufficient for the evidence adduced to show that the letter containing the notice "was properly addressed and posted"; it must also show that the letter was prepaid.—WALTHAMSTOW DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HENWOOD, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 124.

20. Sewer—Street sewers—New street—Main outfall sewer—Expense of constructing—Building plans—Refusal of local authority to approve—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 15, 150, 157, 277.—An owner of land in a rural sanitary district, who proposed to lay it out as a building estate and to erect on it blocks of houses arranged in streets, deposited with the local authority plans of the proposed buildings, from which it appeared that each of the houses was to be drained with a separate drain ending in the middle of one of the proposed new streets. The local authority refused to approve the plans unless the owner would undertake to construct at his own expense the sewers with which the drains were intended to communicate, and also the necessary main outfall sewer,

Held, affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division, 44 W. R. 646, [1896] 2 Q. B. 219, that the local authority were not entitled to attach such a condition to their approval.—REG. v. TYNEMOUTH RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A.

21. "Street" — Urban authority — Vesting of "street" in urban authority—Subsoil—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 39, 149.—The Public Health Act, 1875, which by section 149 vests certain streets in the urban authority, does not vest the subsoil.

Therefore, where a local Act authorized the urban authority to erect and maintain "in any street or public place, or on land belonging to them or under their control," lavatories for the use of the public,

Held, that the urban authority had no power to excavate the soil and erect lavatories below the surface of a street which had vested in them within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, [1894] 2 Q. B. 867, affirmed.—TUNBRIDGE WELLS (MAYOR) v. BAIRD, H.L.

See also Criminal Law, 2; Justices, 3; Water, 3.

LONDON BUILDING ACT, 1894.—See Metropolis Management, 1-4, 6.

LUNACY:—

1. Committee out of jurisdiction—Appointment—

CORRECTION.—Ante, column 66, "INLAND REVENUE. 5. Estate duty"—for "NEW'S TRUSTEE v. HUNTING, C.A., 577," read ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. FAIRLEY, Q.B.D., 589.

Security.—A lunatic widow had real estate in Russia, where her son resided; her daughter resided in England. The court appointed the son and daughter joint committees of the lunatic's estate, on the security of their bond and that of the other children of the lunatic.—HOPPER, RE, C.A.

2. Lunatic—Payment out—Foreign Subject—Lunatic ward of foreign court entitled to fund in court in this country—Jurisdiction.—An application was made on behalf of a lady who had been found a lunatic by the Royal Bavarian Court and had been made a ward of that court by her next friend, who was a judge of that court, that a fund standing to her credit in the Chancery Division might be paid out to the Deposit Commission of the Bavarian court. The lunatic was the daughter of a German father and an English mother, and she herself and her nearest living relatives were domiciled German subjects.

Held, that there was jurisdiction to make an order for such payment out, and that the order ought to be made.

In re Barlow's Will, 35 W. R. 737, 36 Ch. D. 287, distinguished.—SPURRIER'S SETTLEMENT, RE, DE HAYN v. GARLAND, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 342.

3. Pauper lunatic—Maintenance—Adjudication of settlement—Subsequent maintenance order by justices—Action to enforce order—Jurisdiction of judge to go behind order—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 287.—In the case of an action brought under section 314 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, for the recovery of money ordered to be paid under section 287 for the maintenance of a pauper lunatic, the court is bound to take judicial notice of a previous order of adjudication of settlement, and for future maintenance of the same lunatic, which was still in force at the time when the order upon which the action is brought was made.—SUFFOLK LUNATIC ASYLUM COMMITTEE v. STOW UNION, Q.B.D., 620.

4. Person detained as lunatic—Certificates that lunatic may safely be discharged—Discretion of Lunacy Commissioners to act on such certificates—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 49.—The Commissioners in Lunacy are not bound to act upon the certificates of two medical practitioners who have been authorized by them, under section 49 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to make an examination of a person detained as a lunatic, and who after examination have duly certified that the person so detained may safely be discharged, but, notwithstanding such certificates, the commissioners have, under section 49, a discretion to grant or refuse an order for the discharge of the lunatic.—REG. v. LUNACY COMMISSIONERS, Q.B.D., 505.

5. Receiver in lunacy—Pauper lunatic—Poor Law—Guardians levying distress—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 299.—Where a receiver in Lunacy of funds of a lunatic in a pauper asylum had been appointed, an injunction was granted to restrain the guardians from levying a distress against trustees of the fund to enforce a magisterial order for payment of the fund to the guardians.

Sub-section 2 of section 299 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, operates only as a discharge to trustees of a lunatic's property; and In re Newbegin's Estate, 36 Ch. D. 477, is not an authority that a magistrate's order under sub-section 1 in respect of property in the hands of the trustees cannot be enforced.—WINKLE v. BAILEY, Ch.D. North, J.

MANDAMUS.—See Charity, 1; Local Government, 2, 15; Police; Practice, 38, 39.

MARRIED WOMAN:—

1. Bankruptcy—Married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1 (5)—Notice of intention to suspend payment—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4 (1) h.—By section 1 (5) of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, it is enacted: "Every woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband shall, in respect of her separate property, be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole."

Held, that a woman does not cease from "carrying on a trade" until she has paid all debts incurred by her in respect of her trading.

By section 4 (1) h of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, it is enacted that "If the debtor gives notice to any of his creditors that he has suspended, or is about to suspend, payment of his debts," he commits an act of bankruptcy.

Held, that a circular issued by the debtor's solicitors to her creditors summoning them to a meeting and requesting them to send in their accounts is equivalent to a notice of intention to suspend payment.—DAGNALL, RE, SOANES, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 79.

2. Restraint on anticipation — Costs — Appeal—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 65), s. 2.—The court has no jurisdiction under section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, to order the payment of costs of an appeal by a married woman, being the defendant in the action, out of separate property which she is restrained from anticipating.

Hood-Barrs v. Cathcart (No. 3), 42 W. R. 633, [1894] 3 Ch. 376, approved.—HOOD BARRS v. HERIOT (No. 3), H.L., 507.

3. Restraint on anticipation—Limitation not containing words "separate use"—Estate "without impeachment of waste"—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75).—Income accrued due after judgment in respect of property subject to a restraint on anticipation cannot be taken in execution or by the appointment of a receiver.

Hood-Barrs v. Heriot, 44 W. R. 481, [1896] A. C. 174, distinguished.

Hood-Barrs v. Cathcart, 42 W. R. 628, [1894] 2 Q. B. 559, and Whiteley v. Edwards, 44 W. R. 530, [1896] 2 Q. B. 559, followed.

A restraint on anticipation may be validly annexed to the separate estate created by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, though the words "for her separate use" do not occur in the limitation; and even to an estate expressed to be granted "without impeachment of waste."—LUMLEY, RE, HOOD-BARRS, EX PARTE, C.A., 147.

4. Separation deed—Covenant against molestation—American divorce proceedings — Molestation, what amounts to.—A husband and wife were married in 1868. In 1880 they entered into a deed of separation, by which the husband covenanted not to molest the wife. In 1896 he served on her notice of his intention to commence divorce proceedings in El Paso, Texas, the ground alleged being the wife's desertion since 1880. In an action by the wife for an injunction to restrain him from taking any proceedings in the Texan action,

Held, that under the circumstances the proceedings were vexatious and unreasonable, and amounted to molestation, and that an injunction could be granted to prevent him taking any steps in the action in England.—HUNT v. HUNT, Q.B.D.

5. Separate estate—Marriage settlement prior to Married Women's Property Act, 1882—Will of father made subsequent thereto—Contingent interest under will—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 5 and 19.—By a marriage settlement made prior to the Married Women's Property Act a fund was settled upon a lady for life to her separate use without power of anticipation, and after her decease, in the event of her surviving her husband, for herself, her executors, administrators, and assigns, but in the event of the husband surviving her, as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to her next-of-kin. By his will made subsequently to the Act her father bequeathed a third of his residuary estate to the trustees of the settlement to be held upon the trusts therein expressed and declared.

On a summons taken out by the lady asking for a declaration that her contingent interest under the will was held by her to her separate use,

Held, that the incident of separate use was added by the statute, and that her contingent interest under the will was therefore disposable by her.—WILLIAMS, RE, WILLIAMS v. GRANT, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

6. Separate estate—Restraint in anticipation—Proviso for cessor of married woman's interest—Erroneous admission made by her by deed that cessor had taken place—Invalidity of admission.—A married woman had a life interest in property restrained from anticipation, but subject to a proviso for the cessor of her life interest and a gift over to her husband, in case she should succeed in her own right to certain property. The married woman, in order to enable her husband to make arrangement with a creditor, executed a deed-poll containing an admission that the cessor of her life interest had taken place. This was not the fact, but the married woman believed it to be the fact when she executed the deed. She afterwards claimed to be entitled to her life interest as no cessor had in fact occurred.

Held, that the married woman being restrained from anticipation, her interest was not bound by the admission contained in the deed-poll.—BATEMAN v. FABER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

7. Separate estate—Restraint on anticipation—Removal of Restraint—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 39.—Upon the application of a married woman the court made an order under section 39 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, binding her life interest under her marriage settlement, notwithstanding restraint on anticipation, by approving a scheme for discharging her debts and liabilities, the court being of opinion that the scheme was for the benefit of the married woman, within the meaning of the section.—KEOWN-BOYD v. GILMOUR, C.A.

8. Separate estate—Restraint on anticipation—Power of court to remove restraint, when exercised—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 39.—Though the words "where it appears to the court to be for her [the married woman's] benefit," in section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (which enables the court to bind the interest of the married woman in any property, notwithstanding that she is restrained from anticipation), are not to be construed as applying only to pecuniary benefit, yet the court will not exercise its power under that section unless, when all the circumstances of the case are considered, a good case is made out for so doing.

Decision of Chitty, J., 44 W. R. 474, affirmed.—POLLARD'S SETTLEMENT, RE, C.A., 18.

9. Separate estate—"Sum of money not exceeding £200 under any will"—Several sums exceeding £200 in the aggregate—Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 93), s. 7.—A married woman, married after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, became entitled under a will to a sum of £180, and also, under the same will, to a share of residue exceeding £20 in value.

Held, that section 7 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, was applicable to each sum separately, and consequently that each sum was, by virtue of that section, the separate property of the married woman.—DAVIES, RE, HARRISON v. DAVIES, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

10. Settlement—Petition—Settled Estates Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 18), s. 50—Examination of married woman—Affidavit of no settlement—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 71), ss. 1, 5.—The separate examination under section 50 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, is no longer necessary in the case of a married woman (party to a petition under that Act for confirming a contract of sale) who was married before 1883, but acquired her interest in the settled hereditaments after that date, and an affidavit of no settlement will not be required.

In re Standish, 25 W. R. 8, followed.—BATT'S SETTLED ESTATE, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 614.

11. Will—Legacy and share of residue "to be paid" to married woman with restraint upon anticipation—Absolute unfettered gift.—A bequest of a fund in trust for a married woman "to be paid to her for her separate use without power of anticipation," there being no further indication that the income only is to be paid to her during coverture, will be construed as a direction that the corpus is to be forthwith paid to her, and the words "in restraint of anticipation" will be disregarded.

In re Bown, 33 W. R. 58, 27 Ch. D. 411, followed. FEARON, RE, HOTCHKIN v. MAYOR, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 232.

See also Justices, 6-9; Practice, 37; Settlement, 3; Trustee, 3.

MASTER and SERVANT:—

1. Dismissal—Public elementary school established under trust deed—Appointment and dismissal of schoolmistress by committee of management—Validity.—Where the plaintiff, a schoolmistress of a public elementary school established under a deed of trust, had been dismissed from her employment by an irregularly constituted committee of management by whom she was appointed, instead of by the trustees of the school, she was held to have no right to an injunction to restrain the committee from so dismissing her, notwithstanding the terms of the deed.—POTTLE v. SHARPE, C.A.

2. Employers' Liability Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 42), s. 1, sub-section 1—Defect in condition of machinery—Absence of safeguard.—The temporary absence of a movable guard or shutter which had been provided to afford protection from a circular saw held to be a defect in the condition of machinery within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1, of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880.—TATE v. LATHAM, C.A., 400.

3. Justices — Summary jurisdiction — Dispute —

Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 4.—Section 4 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, gives jurisdiction to courts of summary jurisdiction to hear and determine disputes under the Act provided that the amount claimed does not exceed £10.

On the 16th of November, 1896, a workman wrongfully left the employment of his employers, intimating that he did not intend to return. On the 16th of December the employers brought an action in a court of summary jurisdiction to recover £10 damages in respect of the absence of the workman from his work from the 16th of November to the 28th of November. They recovered the amount claimed. Subsequently the employers brought a second action against the workman to recover £10 damages in respect of his absence from work between the 30th of November and the 12th of December.

Held, that the court of summary jurisdiction had no jurisdiction to hear and determine the second action.—JAMES v. EVANS, Q.B.D., 654.

4. Negligence of servant—Effective cause of injury—Intervention of wrongful act by third party.—The defendant, who was a grocer, kept a van, which he sent out with a man to drive and a boy to deliver goods at the customers' houses. The boy was expressly forbidden to drive. The driver negligently left the van for a short time in charge of the boy, who drove the van for a few yards in order to turn it round, and while so doing injured the plaintiff's trap.

Held, that the driver's negligence in leaving the van in charge of the boy was an effective cause of the injury, and that the defendant was liable for that negligence.—ENGELHART v. FARRANT, C.A., 179.

See also Arbitration, 1; Contract, 4; County Court, 5.

MAYOR'S COURT.—See Practice, 40.

MERGER.—See Settlement, 8.

METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT:—

1. Building—New building—Wall within twenty feet of centre of highway—Application for consent of county council after erection—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 13 (1) (4).—By the London Building Act, 1894, s. 13, sub-section (1), "No new building or structure, or any part thereof, shall be erected at any less distance than the prescribed distance from the centre of the highway without the consent in writing of the London County Council"; and by sub-section (4) the council may, in any case where they think it expedient, consent to the erection of such building at a distance less than the prescribed distance.

Held, that such consent must be given in the same way as the consent to the building itself—namely, before the erection takes place—and that it does not apply to a building already executed.

The court has power to compel the council to hear and entertain an application for their consent to the retention of an illegal structure already erected. — REG. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, WEBSTER, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 605.

2. Building—Party wall—Wall extending above adjoining building—Wall dividing a building of the warehouse class extending to more than 250,000 cubic feet—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 59 (1), 75.—By the London Building Act, 1894, s. 75, it is enacted that buildings of the warehouse class above a certain size shall be divided by party walls.

Held, that it was not intended that a wall which was a party wall for the purposes of the section up to a certain height should necessarily continue to be a party wall above that height, so as to be subject, as to the upper portion, to the provisions of the Act with regard to party walls.—DRURY v. ARMY AND NAVY CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, Q.B.D.

3. Building—Party structure notice—Adjoining owner—Possession of premises under building agreement—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 90, s. 5, sub-sections 29, 32.—The defendant, who was owner of premises in London, desiring to do certain work upon a wall dividing his premises from the adjoining premises, duly served C. O. with the notice required by section 90 of the London Building Act, 1894, to be served by a "building owner" upon the "adjoining owner," but omitted to give any such notice to the plaintiff, who at the time the notice was served on C. O. was in possession of the adjoining premises under a building agreement with C. O. for a lease to the plaintiff for a long term of years. By such agreement the grant of the lease was made conditional upon the production of a surveyor's certificate, and it was stipulated that nothing in the agreement should be construed into a demise at law of the premises. At the time the defendant commenced work the plaintiff had erected the buildings, and was in possession thereof under a lease granted pursuant to the agreement. On motion to continue, until trial of the action, an injunction obtained by the plaintiff ex parte to restrain the defendant from proceeding with the work to the wall,

Held, that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was in possession of the adjoining premises under the agreement "otherwise than as a tenant from year to year or for any less term, or as a tenant at will," and was therefore owner within the meaning of sub-section 29 of section 5 of the Act, the defendant was not entitled to exercise any rights under the Act, assuming him to have any, in respect of the wall in question without having served on the plaintiff a notice under section 90 of the Act; that the plaintiff's rights in this respect had not become merged in the lease on the granting of the lease pursuant to the agreement; and, consequently, that the injunction must be continued.—LIST v. THARP, Ch.D. Chitty, J., 243.

4. "Building structure or work"—Notice to district surveyor—Temporary seating—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 78, 145, 200 (11*b*).—A large public building was used for the purpose of holding exhibitions and shows therein. At some of the exhibitions and shows it was necessary to provide seating accommodation for the spectators, but at others no such accommodation was required. The owners of the hall had caused to be constructed certain wooden seating which could be temporarily fixed up in the hall when it was required. When not in use it was taken down and stored away.

Held, that the wooden seating was not a "building structure or work" within section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894, and that it was not necessary to give notice under that section to the district surveyor before it was placed in position in the hall.—VENNER v. MCDONELL, Q.B.D., 267.

5. Bye-law—Slaughter-houses—Validity of bye-law—Improper slaughtering of cattle by servant contrary to instructions—Liability of occupier.—Bye-laws made under the repealed Slaughter-houses (Metropolis) Act, 1874, but kept in force by section 142, sub-section 2 (b), of the Public Health (London) Act,

1891, make it an offence for the licensed occupier of a slaughter-house to slaughter sheep in the pound of the slaughter-house or in view of other sheep. During the absence of the respondent, the licensed occupier of a slaughter-house, his foreman, in direct disobedience of his orders and in order to save himself trouble, slaughtered a sheep in the pound in view of other sheep:

Held, that the bye-law was good and that the respondent was guilty of an offence under it, for he was liable for the act of his servant, that act having been committed within the general scope of his employment, although contrary to the orders of his master.—COLLMAN v. MILLS, Q.B.D.

6. County council—Dangerous structure—Notice to remove or repair—Recovery of expenses—Ministerial duty of county council—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 103, 106.—The powers and duties conferred upon the London County Council by sections 103 and 106 of the London Building Act, 1894, are ministerial, and may be delegated to, and are exercisable by, the duly authorized servants and representatives of the council.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. HOBBIS, Q.B.D., 270.

7. Drain—Liability to repair—Sewer made without approval of Metropolitan Board of Works or of vestry—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 68, 69, 250—Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), ss. 47, 48, 61.—The fact that the requisite sanction for the making of a sewer in the metropolis was not obtained from the vestry or Metropolitan Board of Works does not prevent it, when made, from being a sewer within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts, and as such vested in the vestry and repairable by them.

In 1866 the owner of a block of houses in the metropolis laid down a pipe for the purpose of carrying off the drainage from them, which he connected with a sewer belonging to the vestry in a neighbouring street. No order for this work was given by the vestry, nor was the same sanctioned or approved of by the vestry or the Metropolitan Board of Works.

Held (affirming the judgment of a Divisional Court), that the pipe so laid was a sewer within the meaning of section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and was consequently vested in the vestry and repairable by them.—REG. v. VESTRY OF ST. MATTHEW, BETHNAL GREEN, C.A.

8. Drain—Sewer—Combined system of drainage—Rain-water pipe.—A drain for the drainage of four houses by combined operation was constructed under the order of a vestry. A pipe which carried off rain-water from the roof of a fifth house was, without the sanction of the vestry, turned into and connected with this drain.

Held, that the rain-water pipe was a drain within section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and that its unauthorized connection with the drain belonging to the four houses converted the latter from the point of junction and onwards into a sewer.—HOLLAND v. LAZARUS, Q.B.D.

9. Hackney carriage—Railway station—"Place"—Whether railway station is a "place"—London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 33), s. 17, sub-section 2.—Section 17 of the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853, imposes a penalty upon the driver of any hackney carriage who refuses to drive to any "place within the limits of the Act" to which he shall be required to drive any person hiring or intending to hire such carriage.

Held, that a railway station is a "place" within the meaning of this section, and that the driver of a hackney carriage who refuses to drive the person hiring such carriage into a railway station, within the limits of the Act, is liable to the penalty.—KIPPINS, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 188.

10. London—Grain duty—"Grain brought into the port of London for sale"—Manufacture of grain into other articles—Metage on Grain (Port of London) Act, 1872 (c. c.), s. 4.—The Metage on Grain (Port of London) Act, 1872 (c. c.), s. 4, which entitles the corporation of London to a duty "in respect of all grain brought into the port of London for sale," applies only to grain brought in for sale as grain, and not to grain brought in to be ground into meal, or manufactured into other articles of commerce, and then sold.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 55, [1895] 2 Q. B. 652, affirmed.—COTTON v. VOGAN, H.L.

11. Nuisance order—Recovery of costs and expenses—Limitation of time—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 11, 117.—An action brought in the county court under section 11 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, to recover costs and expenses incurred in respect of a nuisance order is subject to the limitation of time imposed by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, in respect of making complaints and laying informations, and must therefore be commenced within six months from the time when the costs and expenses were incurred.

Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell, 25 W. R. 135, 1 Ex. D. 514, followed.—HAMMERSMITH VESTRY v. LOWENFELD, Q.B.D., 60.

12. Nuisance—Sewer—Jurisdiction of justices—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 2, sub-section 1 (b).—By the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 2, sub-section 1 (b), "Any pool, ditch, gutter, watercourse, cistern, water-closet, earth-closet, privy, urinal, cesspool, drain, dung-pit, or ash-pit so foul or in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious or dangerous to health . . . shall be nuisances liable to be dealt with summarily under this Act."

The appellants, as the sanitary authority, summoned the respondents to abate a nuisance from "foul smells" arising from a surface sewer ventilator constructed by them in a roadway within the appellants' district.

Held, that the provisions of section 2, sub-section 1 (b), of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, did not apply to public sewers, and that the justices were right in refusing to make the order on the ground that they had no jurisdiction to deal with the complaint.—FULHAM VESTRY v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D., 620.

13. Nuisance—Vacant land—Deposit of filth—Removal—Duty of landowner—Injunction—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 13, 35, 138.—The defendant was the owner of a piece of vacant land in the metropolis. Costermongers and others used the land for the deposit of offal and other kinds of filth, so that it became a nuisance to the neighbourhood. The Attorney-General, at the relation of the vestry of the parish, brought an action to restrain the nuisance.

Held, that there is a common law liability on the owner or occupier of land to abate a nuisance upon his land, and that the Attorney-General was entitled to an injunction to enforce the performance of such duty by the owner or occupier.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. TOD-HEATLEY, C.A., 394.

14. Public Health—Unsound meat—Sale or exposure for sale—Seizure subsequent to sale—Purchase by a customer—Liability of seller to penalty—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 47, sub-sections 2, 3.—The respondent, a meat salesman, to whom meat had been consigned to sell on commission, sold a portion of it to H. While the meat was on H.'s premises it was seized and condemned by a magistrate under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 47, as being diseased and unfit for the food of man.

The respondent was summoned under sub-section 2 of section 47 of the Act, and it was proved that the meat was unsound at the time of the sale to H. The alderman before whom the summons was heard dismissed it.

Held, that the summons was rightly dismissed, and that the summons ought to have been drawn under sub-section 3.—BILLING v. PREBBLE, Q.B.D., 187.

15. Sewer—Drain—Combined drain laid with sanction of Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers—Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 112.—The "Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers" mentioned in section 112 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, are the commissioners who were created under that title in 1848 by the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 112, and do not include any previously existing commissioners. Therefore no drain laid before 1848 can come within the definition of "drain" given in that section.

Judgment of Hawkins, J., ante, p. 173, affirmed. —APPLEYARD v. LAMBETH VESTRY, C.A., 370.

16. Sewer—Drain—New sewer—House insufficiently drained—Liability of owner to make new drain—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 69, 73.—Where a vestry, acting under section 69 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, provide a new sewer in substitution for an old sewer, they are not entitled under section 73 to charge the owner of a house which was drained into the old sewer with the expenses of connecting his house with the new sewer, on the ground that the drain connecting the house with the old sewer is an insufficient drain.

Vestry of St. Marylebone v. Viret, 13 W. R. 1064, followed.—ST. MARTIN-IN-THE-FIELDS VESTRY v. WARD, C.A., 81.

17. Street music—Refusal to go away from neighbourhood—Metropolis Street Music Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 55), s. 1.—It is not an offence under section 1 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 55, for a street musician to refuse to move away from a neighbourhood when requested to do so by a householder, unless the complainant has at the same time given the man a reason why he requires him to cease playing near his house.

Semble, it makes no difference that in fact the householder had a reasonable and sufficient cause of complaint.—SHIELDS v. HOWARD, Q.B.D., 138.

18. Street—New street—Adjoining owner—Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 112.—A private roadway existed before 1855. No new buildings were erected which had access to it after that date.

Held, that the roadway was not a new street within the meaning of section 112 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, and the adjoining owners were not liable to be charged with the expense of paving it under section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855.—ARTER v. HAMMERSMITH VESTRY, Q.B.D., 398.

19. Street—"New street"—Paving expenses—Apportionment—Road partially built along—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 105 —Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), ss. 77, 112.—The respondents were the owners of two plots of land in and abutting that part of a road lying within the district of the appellant vestry, the road having been formed or laid out after 1862. So much of the road as was within the district of the appellant vestry was 200 yards long, and the present proceedings related to such portion only; on one side of such portion of the road was only one house, and on the other, one house, a church, and a hall. The rest of such portion of the road was unbuilt upon. The vestry, having paved such portion of the road, summoned the respondents before the magistrate for the payment of the sums apportioned by order of the vestry in respect of the land of which the respondents were owners towards the paving expenses. The magistrate dismissed the summons on the ground that such portion of the road was not a new street within the meaning of section 77 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102).

Held, that such portion of the road was not a "new street." The Legislature appeared to contemplate that in order that a road should be a street within the Metropolis Management Acts of 1855 and 1862 it must be composed wholly or partially of houses.—ST. MARY, BATTERSEA, VESTRY v. PALMER, Q.B.D., 110.

20. Vestry—Committee—Approval of acts of committee—Ratification—Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 58.—A committee appointed by a vestry under section 58 of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, resolved that a notice be served under section 85 of the Act upon the owner of premises requiring him to abate a nuisance thereon arising from defective drainage. The notice not having been complied with, the committee resolved that proceedings should be taken for the recovery of penalties, and a summons was issued against the owner. Section 58 provides that the acts of the committee shall be submitted to the vestry for their approval.

Held, that the fact that the vestry had not approved of the service of the notice until after the issue of the summons did not render the service of the notice invalid.—FIRTH v. STAINES, Q.B.D., 575.

See also Poor Law, 7; Practice, 38.

MILK.—See Adulteration, 3, 4.

MINE:—

Abandoned mine—Obligation to fence—"Owner and every other person interested in the minerals"—Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77), ss. 13, 13 (2), 41—Derbyshire Mining Customs and Mineral Courts Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. clxiii.).—By section 13 of the Act of 1872 the owner and person interested in the minerals of a mine shall fence an abandoned mine, but by sub-section 2 of the same section, where the abandonment has occurred before the passing of the Act, it need only be done under certain conditions or on notice from an inspector on the ground that it is specially dangerous.

The appellant was the lord of the manor of H. and freeholder of the soil of a mine, which had not been worked for over thirty years, and the workers of which or their representatives could not be traced. Notice was served on him to fence on the ground that the entrance was specially dangerous. By the Derbyshire Mining Act, 1852, the appellant was entitled to dues of lot and cope and a third meer, and this Act further only gave the worker the right to mine, and conferred no title on the soil. The appellant, having failed to comply with the terms of the notice, was summoned and convicted.

Held, that the appellant was a person interested in the minerals, and that on abandonment the mine reverted to him as owner; and that, therefore, being liable to fence, he was rightly convicted.—DEVONSHIRE (DUKE) v. STOKES, Q.B.D.

See also Canal; Landlord and Tenant, 4, 10.

MISREPRESENTATION.—See Company, 19, 23; Guarantee, 2.

MORTGAGE:—

1. Costs — Practice — Foreclosure action — Mortgagees' costs—Administration proceedings combined with foreclosure action—Executor's costs—Costs relating to the security.—So far as administration proceedings are necessary to enable mortgagees to realize their security, mortgagees will be entitled to add to their security their administration costs in the action so far as they relate to their security, and be paid the same in priority to the administration costs of the mortgagor's executor.—BANKS, RE, DAWS v. BANKS, Ch.D. Romer, J., 206.

2. Equitable mortgage by deposit—Declaration of trust — New Trustee — Vesting declaration — Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 12, sub-sections (1) (3); 50.—Real estate was conveyed in 1883 to A. in fee, who sold it again, and afterwards repurchased it on the 26th of August, 1887. In 1890 A. made an equitable mortgage of the property to B. by deposit of the deed of conveyance of the 26th of August, 1887. On the 20th of February, 1894, A. made a second equitable mortgage by depositing with a bank the deed of conveyance of 1883, and this deposit was accompanied by a memorandum in which A. declared that during the continuance of the loan then advanced by the bank he held the property on trust for the bank, and thereby further gave the bank power to appoint a new trustee in his place and to make a declaration vesting the property in such new trustee. The bank had then no notice of B.'s prior equitable mortgage. On the 22nd of February, 1896, A. executed a legal mortgage of the same property to C., who, however, took with notice of the bank's equitable mortgage. On the 23rd of March, 1896, the bank (having then become aware of B.'s equitable mortgage) executed a deed appointing the manager of the bank a new trustee in the place of A., and containing a declaration vesting the property in such new trustee.

Held, (1) that, by reason of the power of appointing a new trustee and the above-mentioned vesting declaration, the bank could, by virtue of section 12, sub-section (1), of the Trustee Act, 1893, vest the legal estate in the new trustee, and that neither section 12, sub-section (3), nor section 50 of the same Act prevented this;

(2) That C., the legal mortgagee, having taken with notice of the bank's equitable mortgage, only took the legal estate subject to the power of the bank to divest it; and

(3) That the bank had got in the legal estate, not by means of a conveyance from a bare trustee, but by means of the declaration of trust which the bank stipulated for when it advanced the money, and, consequently, that the bank was entitled to priority over B.'s prior equitable mortgage.—LONDON AND COUNTY BANKING CO. v. GODDARD, Ch.D. North, J., 310.

3. Foreclosure — Receiver — Form of order.—The form of order in a foreclosure action where a receiver has been appointed should charge the mortgagees with all the rents and profits in the hands of the receiver at the date of the chief clerk's certificate, and also "with such a sum, if any, as they submit to be charged with," in respect of rents and profits coming to the receiver's hands between the dates of the certificate and foreclosure absolute.—SIMMONS v. BLANDY, Ch.D. North, J., 296.

4. Power of sale—Mortgage by tenants in common — Purchase by one co-tenant — Private tender — Validity of sale.—No fiduciary relationship exists between tenants in common and real estate; and should one collect the rents of the whole, he does so as owner.

Where a mortgagee sells under a power of sale, in compliance with the terms of the power and in good faith, the sale cannot be impeached.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, 44 W. R. 454, [1896] 1 Ch. 762, affirmed.—KENNEDY v. DE TRAFFORD, H.L., 671.

5. Power of sale—Surplus proceeds—Money in hands of first mortgagee—Interest—Discretion of court.—Where upon the realization of mortgaged property the first mortgagee receives and retains more money than is sufficient to satisfy his claim under his mortgage, the court will order him to pay to the second mortgagee simple interest upon the surplus moneys so retained by him, unless there are circumstances in the particular case before the court which render such an order unjust.

The fact that the second mortgagee has wilfully abstained for four years from taking proceedings to enforce his claim to the surplus moneys retained by the first mortgagee is not a circumstance upon which the court will deprive him of interest.—ELEY v. READ, C.A.

6. Receiver—Manager—Contract—Sale of lease and business—Mortgage for unpaid purchase-money.—A., who was the owner of leasehold premises (on which the business of a private hotel was carried on) and furniture, entered into a contract for the sale of such lease, furniture, and the goodwill of the business to B. A portion of the purchase-money remained unpaid, and a draft assignment of the lease and mortgage to secure the unpaid purchase-money were prepared, but never executed. In an action for specific performance of the contract, a motion was made for a receiver and manager of the premises, furniture, and business.

Held, that such a receiver and manager might be appointed with power to take possession and carry on the business, but not to include any chattels other than those which would pass by an assignment of the lease.—POOLE v. DOWNES, Ch. D. Stirling, J.

7. Right to redeem—Remainderman.—A widow to whom a testator devised the equity of redemption in certain hereditaments durante minore ætate of her two sons, mortgaged her interest under the will to the person to whom the testator had previously mortgaged the hereditaments.

Held, that, after the death of the widow, the sons were not entitled to redeem the mortgage effected by the testator until they both attained the age of twenty-one, unless they obtained the mortgagee's consent as owner of the widow's limited interest.—PROUT v. COCK, Ch.D. North, J., 157.

8. Tender — Cheque — Authority of mortgagee's solicitor—Payment under protest.—A mortgagee's solicitor is not authorized to accept a cheque in payment of the debt due in respect of the mortgage unless he is expressly empowered to do so. The tender, therefore, of a cheque to a mortgagee's solicitor not having such express authority is not a good tender even though he consent to accept the cheque.—BLUMBERG v. LIFE INTERESTS SECURITIES CORPORATION, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 246.

See also Company, 39; Fixture, 1; Limitations, Statute of, 3; Practice, 41; Settlement, 7.

MORTMAIN:—

Charity—Metropolitan Consolidated Stock—Charge on lands, rents, and property—Pure or impure personalty.—Metropolitan Consolidated 3½ per Cent. Stock issued under the Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 102), is impure personalty, as it confers on the holders an interest in land within the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 42), s. 10 (3).—CROSSLEY, RE, BIRRELL v. GREENHOUGH, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 615.

NATAL, LAW of:—

Water—Watercourse—Right to construct—Right to divert streams—Grant of land—Construction of reservation.—Where in a grant of land a right is reserved to make watercourses over it for the public use and benefit by order of Government,

Held, that such reservation may include, and in the circumstances of this case will include, a right to divert water from streams in the land and to use the water so diverted.—REMFRY v. SURVEYOR-GENERAL OF NATAL, P.C.

NEGLIGENCE.—See Landlord and Tenant, 12; Master and Servant, 4; Poor Law, 5; Railway Company, 7; Solicitor, 22.

NEW SOUTH WALES, LAW of:—

11 Vict. No. 4, s. 7—Malicious prosecution—Mens rea.—By section 7 of 11 Vict. No. 4, a sale of wool under a lien, "with a view to defraud," without the written consent of the holder of the lien, is made an offence; a like sale of stock is also made an offence, independently of a like intent.

In an action for malicious prosecution thereunder, it appeared that the plaintiff had sold stock on which the defendant bank had a lien, without intent to defraud and with the bank's oral assent.

Held, on the construction of the above section, that an intent to defraud was not an element of the statutory offence charged, that this was matter for decision by the judge, and that a verdict must be entered for the defendant.

An intention to offend against the penal provisions of an Act constitutes mens rea; and was proved by the plaintiff's knowledge that there was no written consent.—BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES v. PIPER, P.C.

NUISANCE:—

1. Highway—Breach of statutory duty—Special damage—Right of action—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), ss. 11, 29.—A gas company, in laying down a main along the side of a public road, filled up the trench so carelessly and defectively that the wheel of the vehicle in which the plaintiff was driving sank into the trench, whereby the vehicle was upset and the plaintiff injured. A jury having found not only that the company were guilty of negligence in the filling up of the road, but also that they left the road in such a state as to constitute a nuisance and a danger to those using the road,

Held, that, as the company had left the road in a condition which amounted to a public nuisance, they were liable to the plaintiff, notwithstanding the provisions of section 11 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847. — GOODSON v. SUNBURY GAS CO., Q.B.D.

2. Obstruction of street—Tramways—Snow and salt.—A tramway company after a heavy fall of snow cleared their track by means of a snow-plough and heaped up the snow upon the sides of the streets; they then scattered salt upon the rails and in the vicinity; the town council did not take any immediate steps to remove the briny slush so produced, and it was left upon the streets,

Held, that a legal nuisance had been committed which was not sanctioned by either the special or the general Tramways Acts, and that the default, if any, of the town council did not affect the primary liability of the tramway company.—OGSTON v. ABERDEEN DISTRICT TRAMWAYS CO., H.L. (Sc.).

See also Local Government, 8-10; Metropolis Management, 11-13; Practice, 43.

OPTION.—See Landlord and Tenant, 3; Patent, 8.

PARTITION:—

Practice—Infant plaintiffs—Sale in lieu of partition—Sale depending upon result of inquiries—Form of judgment.—Form of judgment in an action for sale in lieu of partition where the plaintiffs are infants entitled to one undivided one-third share, and where the execution of the sale depends upon the result of the inquiries directed by the order, the infants, in the event of a sale, being declared trustees of their shares for the purchaser and their next friend being appointed to convey the infants' shares.—DAVIS v. INGRAM, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 459.

PARTNERSHIP:—

1. Administration—Spanish firm—Separate estate of deceased partner—Lex fori.—A rule of Spanish law that the separate estate of a deceased partner cannot be proceeded against by a creditor of the partnership until the joint assets are first judicially proved insufficient, is a rule of procedure, and does not prevent the creditor of a Spanish firm obtaining administration in this country of the separate assets in this country of a deceased partner. The rule as to administration is a matter of the lex fori.—DOETSCH, RE, MATHESON v. LUDWIG, Ch.D. Romer, J., 57.

2. Articles—Death of one partner—Purchase of business by surviving partner—Valuation—Goodwill—Profits.—Two persons agreed to carry on the business of a brewery for twenty-one years under partnership articles, which provided that, on the death of a partner without nominating a son to succeed him (which event happened), "the property, stock, goods, and effects of the said partnership" were to be valued, and the surviving partner was to have the option to purchase at such valuation.

The articles further provided that immediately on the determination of the partnership by any of the contingencies mentioned in the articles the partners should join in making up a final account of all the property, joint-stock, money, goods, and effects belonging to the partnership, and that after such account should have been so made up "the property, stock, goods, and effects then employed or used in carrying on the said business" should be valued as therein mentioned.

The partnership was continued upon the same articles by a deed of covenant for a further period of seven years and afterwards without any written or verbal agreement. One partner died, and the surviving partner exercised his option to purchase the business at the valuation.

Held, that, although the articles said nothing about goodwill in terms, yet the words "then employed or used in carrying on the said business" could not be construed in so narrow a way as to exclude the goodwill in valuing the business; and that therefore the goodwill must be valued separately.

Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S. 150, applied.

Held also, that the executors of the deceased partner were entitled to a share of profits down to the date of the valuation.

Decision of Stirling, J., 74 L. T. N. S. 343, affirmed.—PAGE v. RATCLIFFE, C.A.

3. Receiver—Salary—Security—Premiums paid to guarantee society—Liability.—Where in an action for dissolution of partnership one of the partners is appointed receiver, or receiver and manager, without a salary, and has to find security for his fidelity, he is properly allowed out of the assets the amount paid by him as premiums to a guarantee society for furnishing such security.

It is otherwise, however, where he is appointed with a salary, as in that case he is bound to pay out of his own pocket whatever expenses are reasonably incurred by him in finding security, whether by bond or sureties or through a guarantee society. —HARRIS v. SLEEP, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 536.

4. Receiver and manager—Salary—Allowances—Services rendered for benefit of estate outside the duty of a receiver.—On a dissolution of partnership one of the partners was appointed by the court receiver and manager without salary. He carried on the business successfully, and ultimately purchased it under an order of the court. He, during the continuance of the business, being a skilled mechanic, did work as an ordinary workman and included in his accounts an item of £2 per week for services rendered by himself as a workman.

Held (reversing Kekewich, J.), that though the receiver and manager had committed a technical irregularity in not asking for wages at the time of his appointment, yet he was entitled to be paid for work done by him for the benefit of the estate, to do which was no part of his duty. The allowance of £2 per week was therefore allowed.—HARRIS v. SLEEP (No. 2), C.A., 680.

See also Bankruptcy, 6, 9, 19, 26, 29; Contract, 6; Inland Revenue, 24; Solicitor, 22; Trade-mark, 4; Trustee, 9; Vendor and Purchaser, 7.

PATENT:—

1. Action for infringement—Discontinuance—Costs of particulars of objections — Certificate — Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 29, sub-section 6.—The plaintiff in a patent action by written notice discontinued the action before the pleadings were closed. By reason of the provisions of sub-section 6 of section 29 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, the taxing-master refused to allow the costs of the defendant's particulars of objections, because no certificate had been granted as required by that sub-section. The defendant took out a summons asking for a certificate.

Held, that in the absence of information which would enable the court to certify that the particulars were reasonable and proper, the court would not enter upon any kind of trial of the action to obtain such information. That the case came within the provisions of sub-section 6 of section 29, and that there being no certificate no costs of the particulars of objection could be allowed.—WILCOX v. JANES, Ch.D. Romer, J., 474.

2. Anticipation—Variation between provisional and complete specifications — Disconformity— Objects of invention as stated in provisional specification—Abandonment of parts of invention claimed in provisional specification—Application of invention to subsequent discoveries by other persons.—In a provisional specification the nature of the invention need not be described otherwise than roughly, though it must be described fairly, and the manner in which the invention is to be carried into effect need not be described. A patentee is not bound in his provisional specification to detail the advantages of his invention, and in stating in such specification his chief objects, he should not be taken to imply, where the invention consists of several parts, that he obtains all these objects in every part of his invention, or that some parts of it may not have other advantages not expressly mentioned.

Although a patented invention may, in consequence of subsequent discoveries made by other inventors, prove more valuable and have a wider field of usefulness than was contemplated by the patentee at the date of his invention, yet the patentee is entitled to the full benefit of the use of his invention if taken and applied for the purposes of these subsequent discoveries; and if the subsequent discoveries take place after the date of the provisional and before the date of the complete specification, there is nothing improper in the patentee referring to them in the complete specification, and thus showing the manner in which his invention could be best applied to them.

The antecedent existence of an invention, not shown to have been brought to any successful result, and which was so far similar that, if subsequent in date to the patent, it would have been held a colourable and clumsy imitation for the purpose of effecting the same result, does not invalidate the patent by anticipation.—PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. v. EAST LONDON RUBBER CO., Ch.D. Romer, J.

3. Assignment — Application for extension of period of protection by assignee—Patents Act, 1883, s. 25.—Although the effect of section 25 of the Patents Act of 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), is to confirm an assignee's right to petition for prolongation of his patent, he cannot succeed without showing that the original inventor has been inadequately remunerated.—IN RE HOPKINSON'S PATENT, P.C.

4. Disclaimer—Amendment of specification—Practice—Petition for revocation pending—Application for leave to amend—Discretion of court—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 19.—The granting or refusing leave to apply to amend a specification by way of disclaimer, under section 19 of the Patents Act, 1883, is still a matter for the judicial discretion of the court, and this discretion has been in a way interfered with by Moser v. Marsden, 12 Rep. Pat. Cas. 24, and Deeley v. Perkes, [1896] A. C. 496.—DELLWICK'S PATENT, RE, Ch.D. Chitty, J.

5. Disclaimer—Revocation—Patent Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 19, 26.—Where, on a petition for revocation of a patent the judge holds that all the claims are bad and orders the patent to be revoked and this order is entered on the Register of Patents, the Court of Appeal, it it is of opinion that one claim is valid, may reverse the order below and order that the patent be revoked, unless within three months, or such further time as the court may allow, the patentee obtain leave to amend his specification by disclaiming all the claims except the valid one.—DEELEY v. PERKES, H.L.

6. Infringement — Patent applicable to United Kingdom only—Foreigner resident abroad sending infringing goods by post to England—Order from an English purchaser—Goods the property of the purchaser from the time of dispatch—Agency of post-office — Jurisdiction.— A person who manufactures abroad goods according to a patent applicable only to the United Kingdom, and who, in compliance with an order received from an English customer, sends such goods by post to such customer, does not infringe the English patent.

Decision of North, J., reversed (Rigby, L.J., dissenting.)

Coombes's case, 1 Lea Cr. C. 388, discussed.—BADISCHE ANILIN UND SODA FABRIK v. JOHNSON, C.A., 481.

7. Infringement,— Subsequent threats—Claim for injunction to restrain such threats—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 32.—The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendants for the infringement of their patent.

The plaintiffs then published a circular to the effect that their patent was being infringed, and that they were bringing a large number of actions against specified alleged infringers, including the action against the defendants.

The defendants delivered a defence and counter-claim. The defence was, that the goods complained of as infringements of the patent were manufactured and sold under a licence granted by the plaintiffs to predecessors of the defendants. By their counter-claim they claimed an injunction to restrain the plaintiffs from publishing, or representing by circulars, &c., that the defendants were not authorized to make and sell such goods.

The plaintiffs contended that, though they had given a licence to certain persons to use their patent, there were no rights under the circumstances to assign to the defendants without the plaintiffs' consent, a consent that had never been granted.

Upon motion for an interlocutory injunction,

Held, that the case was not within section 32 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, because of the proviso at the end of that section, in this case an action having been bonâ fide brought even before the circular was issued; that there was no analogy between this case and that where a tenant sued his landlord, for in this case the question between the parties was whether the defendants were licensees at all; and that, although the publication of the circular complained of might greatly damage the defendants, they had no equity to restrain the plaintiffs from stating that they were taking proceedings.—DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. v. SEDDON PNEUMATIC TYRE CO., C.A.

8. Licence to use implied—Exclusive licensee with option of purchase—Slander of title—Allegation of infringement — Advertisement — Threatening legal proceedings—Present interest of exclusive licensee—Damages for infringement — Injunction — Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 32.—A clause in the agreement between the owners of a patent and a company, whereby it was agreed (inter alia) that the latter should have an option to purchase the patent, provided that if the option was not exercised within a certain time a royalty should be paid as from a certain date on all articles manufactured by the company having such option,

Held, that a licence to use the patent as from the date mentioned was implied upon the terms that if the option to purchase was exercised nothing was to be paid for so doing, but if the option was not exercised a royalty was to be paid.

The exclusive licensees of a patent with an option of purchase have sufficient interest in the patent to rebut the presumption that an advertisement issued or statement made by them containing a threat that persons using a certain process in manufacturing certain articles alleged to be so used in infringement of the patent may be liable to proceedings at law, is not issued or made in good faith; it is not necessary that such an interest should be a present vested interest, and the fact that such exclusive licensees may never be entitled to recover damages in respect of alleged present infringements of the patent is immaterial.

When the owner of a patent has brought an action against an alleged infringer of the patent, the exclusive licensees of the patent with an option of purchase, who have threatened alleged infringers of the patent with legal proceedings or liability, can claim the protection afforded to a person making such threats, under the proviso in section 32 of the Patents Act, 1883, and an injunction cannot be obtained against them under the section.

An injunction will not be granted restraining a defendant from making a statement alleged to be for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff in his trade when such statement, though not literally true, is true in substance and in fact; it is always necessary for the plaintiff to prove express malice on the part of the defendant when such statement is made in defence of the defendant's property.—INCANDESCENT GAS LIGHT CO. v. NEW INCANDESCENT GAS LIGHTING CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J.

9. Threats—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, s. 32.—A letter containing a threat of legal proceedings, written with the intention o being understood to refer to patent claims of the defendants, and the natural effect of which, under the circumstances, was to be so understood, but which contained no express reference to any such patent rights,

Held, to be a threat under section 32 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883.—DOUGLASS v. PINTSCH'S PATENT LIGHTING CO., Ch.D. Romer, J., 108.

PENALTY.—See Contract, 2.

PENSION.—See Bankruptcy, 20; Police.

POLICE:—

Pension—Cancellation — Constable—Incapacity by infirmity—Police authority—Attendance for medical examination—Collateral purpose—Illegal stoppage of pension—Mandamus—Police Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 45), s. 1 (a), (b); s. 5, sub-sections 1, 3, 4, 7; s. 12.—The power conferred upon a police authority by the Police Act, 1890, s. 5, of requiring a pensioner to attend to be examined by a medical practitioner selected by them at a particular time and place, for the purpose of satisfying them that his incapacity to serve continues, cannot be exercised by the police authority for any collateral purpose.

A police authority has no power under section 5, sub-section 4, of the Act to cancel a pension without requiring the pensioner to serve again.

A police authority has power to fix the time and place for the examination of the pensioner by the medical practitioner whom they may select under the provisions of section 5 of the Police Act, 1890.

A police authority, on the 12th of July, 1894, resolved that their former chief constable, to whom they had granted a pension on the ground of incapacity by infirmity, should attend at Warwick on a specified day and hour for the purpose of being examined by two doctors as to his state of health, and that if he failed to do so his pension should be cancelled.

The pensioner had been declared bankrupt in 1891, and in 1892 a warrant had been issued for his arrest, on the ground that he being out of England had not attended his adjourned examination in bankruptcy. He had been residing in Portugal since April, 1892; but in March, 1893, he had come to England for a day or two, and had been examined by a doctor, selected by the police authority, who had certified his continuing incapacity. He did not attend in compliance with the resolution of the 12th of July, 1894, and the police authority cancelled his pension.

Held, upon the evidence, that the police authority had used their statutory power of requiring the pensioner's attendance at Warwick, not for the purpose of satisfying themselves as to his continued incapacity, but for the purpose of assisting the Bankruptcy Court; and, consequently, that they had exceeded their jurisdiction, and the pensioner was entitled to a mandamus calling upon the police authority to show cause why they should not pay him the arrears of his pension.—REG. v. LORD LEIGH, KINCHANT, RE, C.A.

POOR LAW:—

1. Costs—Limitation of time—Judgment ordering guardians to pay costs—Taxation—Debt, claim, or demand incurred or become due—Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 49), s. 1.—Where guardians of the poor are ordered by a judgment of the court to pay costs, the time within which, under section 1 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 49, it is lawful for them to pay such costs is to be reckoned, not from the date when the judgment was delivered, but from the date when the costs were taxed.

The decision of the House of Lords in Guardians of West Ham v. Churchwardens, &c., of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, [1896] A. C. 477, held to apply to the case of an order for the payment of costs made by the Supreme Court.—MANCHESTER, &c., RAILWAY CO. v. DONCASTER UNION, C.A., 82.

2. Husband and wife—Maintenance—Non-liability of husband to maintain adulterous wife—Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 122), s. 33.—In 1862 the appellant married F. H. M. They lived together a few months and then the husband joined the Marines. Nothing more was heard of him, and in 1889 F. H. M. married R. G., and lived with him as his wife. On hearing the appellant was alive the wife still continued to live with R. G.

F. H. M. became chargeable to the T. Union in 1886, and the guardians applied for an order against the husband, the appellant, which the magistrates made.

Held (quashing the order of the magistrates), that the wife was guilty of adultery, and that the appellant could not be compelled to support F. H. M. his wife.—MITCHELL v. TORRINGTON UNION, Q.B.D.

3. Limitation of time for payment of debt of guardians—Jurisdiction of House of Lords over costs—Costs of appeal in House of Lords—Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 49), ss. 1, 4.—An order of this House for payment of the costs of an appeal without specifying the amount does not constitute a "debt, claim, or demand lawfully incurred or become due" within the meaning of the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859, ss. 1, 4, until the amount has been certified by the Clerk of the Parliaments under the Standing Orders, and the time for payment limited by that Act runs from the date of the certificate and not from the date of the order.

This House has an inherent jurisdiction, independent of statute, over costs in proceedings before itself.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, [1895] 1 Q. B. 662, reversed.—WEST HAM UNION (GUARDIANS OF) v. ST. MATTHEW, BETHNAL GREEN (CHURCHWARDENS, &c., OF), H.L.

4. Loan to guardians—Contract—Loan for fixed period payable by instalments—Act of Parliament—Construction—Effect of proviso—Implied alteration of contract—Poor Law Loans Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 11), s. 2.—The plaintiffs in 1875 borrowed from the defendants money which it was agreed should be repaid with interest at 4¼ per cent. by sixty equal specified half-yearly instalments in respect of principal and interest. In 1895 the plaintiffs applied for and obtained from the Local Government Board an order enabling them to redeem the balance of the said loan and to borrow at 3 per cent. interest so much money as might be necessary for that purpose. The defendants were not served with any notice of the plaintiffs' intention to apply for such order, and did not appear to oppose it.

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled, under section 2 of the Poor Law Loans Act, 1871, to compel the defendants to receive repayment of the balance of the said loan at any time prior to the expiration of the period fixed by the contract for the loan.

Decision of North, J., ante, p. 90, reversed.—WEST DERBY UNION v. METROPOLITAN LIFE ASSURANCE CO., SAME v. PRIESTMAN, C.A., 388.

5. Negligence of poor law official—Non-liability of guardians—Lord Campbell's Act.—Guardians of the poor are not answerable in damages in their corporate capacity for injuries caused by the negligence of their officials in the treatment of poor patients received into the workhouse hospital.—DUNBAR v. ARDEE GUARDIANS, Q.B.D. (Ir.).

6. Rating—Appeal—Consent of guardians—Assessment committee as respondents—Costs—Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864 (c. 39), s. 2.—Where the assessment committee of a union receive notice of a poor-rate appeal under section 1 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, they have no authority to appear as respondents to the appeal unless they obtain the consent of the guardians after sending notice to every guardian, as required by section 2. If they do appear without such consent and the appeal is dismissed "with costs to the respondents" they are not entitled to costs, although throughout the proceedings they receive notices to attend from the appellants and are treated by them as respondents.

The decision of the Court of Appeal ([1895] 1 Q. B. 38) affirmed.—WEST HAM UNION v. ESSEX (JUSTICES OF) AND LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, H.L.

7. Rating—Arrears—Right of distress—Change of occupation—Receivers and managers appointed by the court—No order for delivery of possession of premises —Poor Law Act (43 Eliz. c. 2), s. 2—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 161 —Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 41), s. 16.—The appointment of receivers and managers of the business of a company by an order which does not direct the company to deliver up to them the possession of its premises does not produce a change of occupation within the meaning of section 16 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869; nor does the existence of an equitable charge protect the goods subject thereto from a distress for rates. Leave will, therefore, in such a case, be given to the overseers to distrain for rates in arrear upon goods on the premises.

Richards v. Overseers of Kidderminster, 44 W. R. 505, [1896] 2 Ch. 212, discussed.—MARRIAGE, NEAVE, & CO., RE, C.A., 42.

8. Rating — Exemption — County council — Joint occupation by county council and justices.—Premises which are jointly occupied by a county council for administrative purposes and by justices for judicial purposes are rateable in respect of the occupation by the county council.

The principle laid down in Greig v. University of Edinburgh, L. R. H. L. (Sc.) 348, as to exemption from rateability, followed. — WORCESTERSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. WORCESTER ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE, C.A., 309.

9. Rating—Exemptions—County council offices—User for administrative purposes—Joint occupation with quarter sessions.—Premises were occupied as to one part by a county council exclusively for the purpose of the administrative business of the county; another part of the premises was occupied by the county council jointly with the quarter sessions.

Held, that occupation for the administrative business of the county was not occupation for a "Crown" purpose so as to exempt the county council from being rated for the relief of the poor; that as to the part of the premises occupied jointly with the quarter sessions the county council must be rated in proportion to the extent of their occupation.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Cave and Wills, JJ.), 44 W. R. 666, affirmed.—MIDDLESEX COUNTY COUNCIL v. ST. GEORGE'S UNION COMMITTEE, C.A., 215.

10. Rating—Exemption—Society instituted for the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts—Supported by voluntary contributions—Art Union—6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, s. 1.—The Art Union of London is a society instituted for the purposes of the fine arts exclusively, but it is not a society supported by voluntary contributions within section 1 of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, as the subscribers get an equivalent for their subscriptions, and consequently the society is not exempt from liability to be rated to the poor and other local rates in respect of the premises occupied by it.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (42 W. R. 690, [1894] 2 Q. B. 609) reversed.—SAVOY OVERSEERS v. ART UNION OF LONDON, H.L., 31.

11. Rating—Lighthouse—Dues.—In assessing the rateable value of the lighthouse, the dues received in respect of it cannot be taken into consideration.—LANCASTER (COMMISSIONERS OF PORT OF) v. OVERSEERS OF BARROW-IN-FURNESS, Q.B.D.

12. Rating—Property other than land — Land—Brickfield—43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1—Lighting and Watching Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90), s. 33.—By section 33 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, the owners and occupiers of houses, buildings, and property (other than land) rateable to the relief of the poor in any parish, shall be rated at and pay a rate in the £ three times greater than that which the owners and occupiers of land shall be rated at and pay for the purposes of the Act.

Held, that "property other than land" meant things ejusdem generis with "houses and buildings," and did not include a brickfield; and that a foreman's cottage, together with all the sheds and machinery for brick-making erected on the property (at any rate, so long as that property was assessed as a whole), must be considered as merely ancillary to the brickfield, and therefore the owners of the brickfield were not liable to be rated at the higher rate.—RUTTER v. CRAYFORD OVERSEERS, Q.B.D., 542.

13. Rating—Public park—Beneficial occupation.—The respondents, a county council, were empowered by statute to acquire, and did acquire, certain hereditaments to be held and maintained by them in perpetuity as a park for the use and recreation of the public. There was no duty imposed on the respondents to provide a park for the use of the public.

The necessary expenses of maintaining the park exceeded any revenue which could be derived from it.

The respondents were rated to the relief of the poor in respect of the park.

Held, that there was no beneficial occupation in respect of which the rate could be supported.

Hare v. Overseers of Putney, 7 Q. B. D. 223, approved and followed.

London County Council v. Erith, 13 App. Cas. 562, distinguished.—LAMBETH (CHURCHWARDENS) v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, H.L.

14. Rating—River—Occupation of land—Value of land enhanced—Floating pontoons—Liability to be rated.—The T. P. company are occupiers and owners of about nine acres of land on the Tyne, which is here a tidal river. A creek was excavated on the land, and in it were placed two pontoons, into which ships could be received for repairing purposes. They were attached to piles and "dolphins" by means of shackles which could be easily detached, and joined to the land by a moveable gangway. They could be towed out; but, as a matter of fact, had not been moved except for repairing purposes for ten and four years respectively. They were rated as being in occupation of land over which they floated, and to which they were attached, and also that the occupation of the land was enhanced by reason of their being attached and used in connection therewith.

Held, that they were rightly rated on the latter ground, and were within the principle of Reg. v. Morrison, 1 Ell. & Bl. 150.—TYNE PONTOON CO. v. TYNEMOUTH UNION, Q.B.D.

15. Rating — Tithe rent-charge — Assessment — Deductions—Liability to repair chancel—Tenant's profits.—In assessing the rateable value of tithe rent-charge issuing from a rectory the tithe-owner is not entitled to a deduction for money expended in repairs to the chancel of the parish church.

On an appeal against an assessment of tithe rent-charge a court of quarter sessions is not justified in allowing a deduction in respect of tenant's profits unless it finds as a fact that the allowance made for expenses of collection is insufficient to cover tenant's profits.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Wills and Wright, JJ.), ante, p. 223, affirmed.—ST. ASAPH (DEAN AND CHAPTER) v. LLANRHAIADR-YN-MOCHNANT OVERSEERS, C.A., 375.

16. Rating—Valuation list—Notice of objection—Assessment committee—Appeal—Union Assessment Committees Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 103), ss. 18, 19—Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), ss. 11, 32.—The Union Assessment Committees Act, 1862, s. 18, provides that any person who may feel himself aggrieved by the valuation list of any parish may give to the assessment committee a notice in writing of his objection, and by section 19 the assessment committee shall not hear any objection unless notice of the objection has been given aforesaid. The Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1859, s. 32, gives a right of appeal to quarter sessions from any decision of the assessment committee on an objection made before them.

Held, that the assessment committee had no power to entertain any objection unless notice thereof in writing was given; and that an appeal to quarter sessions only lay from a decision of the assessment committee on an objection, notice of which had been given in the prescribed manner to the committee.—REG. v. LONDON JUSTICES, Q.B.D., 247.

17. Settlement—Computation of time—Period of residence in a hospital—Poor Removal Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 66), s. 1—Divided Parishes Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 34.—The Divided Parishes Act, 1876, s. 34, enacts that "where any person shall have resided for the term of three years in any parish in such manner and under such circumstances in each of such years" as would have created a status of irremovability, he shall be deemed to be settled therein.

Held, that the expression "term of three years" meant three consecutive years.

Dorchester Union v. Weymouth Union, 16 Q. B. D. 31, approved.

The Poor Removal Act, 1846, s. 1, provides that, in computing the period of residence which shall render a person irremovable from a parish, the time during which such person "shall reside as an inpensioner in Greenwich or Chelsea Hospitals, or shall be confined in a lunatic asylum . . . or as a patient in a hospital . . . shall for all purposes be excluded."

Held, that the proviso included the temporary residence of a patient in a hospital, and was not limited to cases of compulsory confinement.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 302) affirmed.—ST. OLAVE'S UNION v. CANTERBURY UNION, C.A., 530.

See also Justices, 2; Lunacy, 5.

POST OFFICE:—

Die for making fictitious stamp—Possession—Without lawful excuse—Post Office (Protection) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 76), s. 7 (c).—The respondent had in his possession a die for a fictitious stamp which he used for the purpose of making a representation of a postage stamp in a newspaper published in the interest of stamp collectors. The die was made abroad to the respondent's order.

Held, that the respondent had committed an offence within section 7 (c) of the Post Office (Protection) Act, 1884, which provides that a person shall not, unless he shows a lawful excuse, have in his possession a die for making a fictitious stamp.—DICKINS v. GILL, Q.B.D.

POWER:—

1. Appointment—Appointment for all purposes—Lapse.—The question whether a general power of appointment has been so exercised by the donee as to take the fund subject to the power away from the persons entitled in default of appointment for all purposes, is one of intention to be gathered from the dispositions of the fund made by the donee.

J. K., a donee of a general power of appointment, by will of a sum of £5,000 (as to which, in default of appointment, there was a gift over to other persons by the donor of the power), exercised the power by appointing the fund directly in equal shares between eight nephews and neices, to whom she also gave legacies out of her own estate which, both in her will and codicil, she distinguished from the £5,000. She appointed an executor; but her own estate was more than sufficient to pay all her debts and legacies. A nephew and a niece died in her lifetime.

Held, following In re Davies' Trusts, 20 W. R. 165, L. R. 13 Eq. 163, that J. K. had not indicated an intention to make the £5,000 her own for all purposes; and that the persons entitled in default of appointment under the limitation in the instrument creating the power took the shares appointed to the nephew and niece who had died in the donee's lifetime.—BOYD, RE, KELLY v. BOYD, Ch.D. Romer, J., 648.

2. Appointment—Fraud on power—Severance of good from bad appointment—Appointment bad pro tanto.—By a settlement made on the marriage of J. V. with his first wife, the funds were settled after the husband's and wife's life interests (in default of joint appointment, which happened) as the survivor should appoint among the children of the marriage, of whom there were three. The wife died and J.V. married again.

By an agreement the children (none of whom were emancipated) agreed to assign on the death of J. V. a portion of the fund for the benefit of the wife and children of the second marriage.

By his will and codicil J. V. gave the funds to one child only, subject to annuities to the others, and to a request to settle £100 a year on the wife and children of the second marriage.

Held, (1) that the above-mentioned agreement was not enforceable; (2) that the exclusion of the two children from sharing in the corpus was not, but the request to settle £100 a year was, a fraud on the power, and that the appointment was bad to that extent.—VIANT v. COOPER, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

3. Appointment—Life interest—Forfeiture clause—Fraud on power—Lapse—Remoteness.—Property was vested in trustees of a marriage settlement "to pay the income thereof to the wife for her life, and after her death in trust for all and every or such one or more exclusively of the other or others of the child or children of the marriage at such ages, days, or times, for such estates or interest, and if more than one in such shares and proportions, and with, under, and subject to such powers, provisions, conditions, and limitations as the said wife should by deed or will appoint." There was issue of the marriage three daughters, and the wife by deed-poll appointed two-thirds in trust for two daughters absolutely; "And as to the remaining one equal third part thereof upon trust to pay the said income thereof to the" remaining daughter H. E. S., "if not at my death a member of the Roman Catholic Church or of any sisterhood, during her life, or until she shall become a member of the Roman Catholic Church or of any sisterhood, without power of anticipation during any coverture; and subject as aforesaid, as to the capital and income thereof, for the" other two sisters in equal shares.

After the death of her mother H. E. S. became a member of an Anglican sisterhood.

Held, (1) that the appointment was not a fraud on the power; (2) that the appointment was not void for remoteness, and that the gift over took effect.—WAINWRIGHT v. MILLER, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 652.

See also Deed; Limitations, Statute of, 4; Settled Land, 9; Settlement, 1; Will, 19.

PRACTICE:—

1. Administration action—Costs—Defendant trustees—Severance of defence—Apportionment of costs—Discretion of court—Appeal—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 1.—In an action to administer the estate of a deceased testator, in which the two trustees and executors S. and I. were defendants, the defendants were represented by one firm of solicitors until a certain date, when they severed, and the defendant I. appeared in person. Some time afterwards I. instructed another solicitor to act for him. The action coming on for hearing on further consideration, Kekewich, J., gave the trustees one set of costs only out of the estate, and directed that it should be paid to S. exclusively.

Held, on appeal, that, there being no evidence that I. had acted unreasonably in severing, the costs were not in the discretion of the judge, and therefore the appeal was competent.

Further, that the proper order to be made was that one set of costs should be given, to be apportioned by the taxing-master, but so as to give to I. only costs for work actually done by him.—ISAAC, RE, CRONBACH v. ISAAC, C.A., 262.

2. Appeal—Chambers—"Matters of practice and procedure"—Judgment under Order XIV.—Appeal to Court of Appeal—Judicature Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 16), s. 1, sub-section 4.—An appeal against an order of a judge at chambers giving leave to the plaintiffs to enter final judgment under Order XIV., r. 1, is an appeal in a "matter of practice and procedure" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 4, of the Judicature Act, 1894, which must be brought to the Court of Appeal.—CANNON BREWERY CO. v. GILBY, C.A.

3. Appeal—Court of Appeal—Criminal cause or matter—Poor rate—Distress warrant—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 47.—Where justices ordered a distress warrant to be issued to enforce payment of a poor rate, under a local Act which gave them power to order imprisonment in default of distress, but stated a case for the opinion of the court, Held, that the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division on the case was in a criminal cause or matter, and that no appeal lay to the Court of Appeal.—SEAMAN v. BURLEY, C.A., 1.

4. Appeal — Court of Appeal — Jurisdiction — "Criminal cause or matter" — Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 47.—By a local Act it was provided that, "if it shall at any time be proved to the satisfaction of any two justices, after hearing the parties, that the illuminating power of the gas supplied by the corporation in the said township did not, when so tested as aforesaid, equal the illuminating power by this Act prescribed," the corporation shall forfeit the sum not exceeding £20 as such justices shall determine, to be paid to the local board.

Upon an information and complaint by the local board under the above provisions, the justices convicted the corporation and imposed a penalty of £10, and stated a case for the opinion of the High Court.

Held, that the judgment of the High Court upon the case was a judgment in a "criminal cause or matter," within the meaning of section 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873, from which no appeal would lie to the Court of Appeal.—SOUTHPORT (MAYOR) v. BIRKDALE DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A.

5. Appeal — Trial — Judgment and finding of official referee—Notice of motion—Ord. 39, rr. 3 and 4—Ord. 40, r. 6.—Upon an appeal from the judgment and finding of an official referee, by way of asking for a new trial, the respondent took the preliminary objection that the application was out of time.

Held, that the case came within ord. 39, rr. 3 and 4, and that the objection was good.—FORREST v. TODD, Q.B.D.

6. Assignment of debt—Absolute assignment in writing — Assignment to agent to collect—Right of assignee to sue—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6.—A foreigner resident abroad assigned to the plaintiff a debt, due to him from the defendant, by a deed which purported, in consideration of £50 paid by the plaintiff, to absolutely assign the debt. If fact, the assignment was made to the plaintiff in order to enable him to sue in England in his own name to recover the debt for the benefit of the assignor, and the plaintiff had not paid any sum by way of consideration to the assignor.

Held (reversing the judgment of Bruce, J.), that there was an absolute assignment in writing within section 25, sub-section 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, which entitled the plaintiff to sue in his own name.—WIESENER v. RACKOW, C.A.

7. Consolidation of actions—Application by plaintiff—Ord. 49, r. 8.—The court has power to make an order for the consolidation of actions at the instance of a plaintiff as well as at the instance of a defendant.—MARTIN v. MARTIN, C.A., 260.

8. Contempt—Breach of injunction—Attachment—Service of copies of affidavits with notice of motion—Proof of service of order—Consent order—Ord. 52, r. 4.—Upon a motion to commit for breach of an injunction the fact that the injunction was granted upon a consent order agreed to by the defendant's counsel will not relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving either that such order has either been served upon or has been otherwise brought to the knowledge of the defendant.—HALL v. TRIGG, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 703.

9. Costs—Appeal—House of Lords—Stay of execution.—The plaintiff, a foreigner residing abroad, on instituting his action, deposited £350 by way of security. On judgment being given for the defendants, £308 13s. 10d. of this sum was paid over to the defendants by way of costs, and the balance returned to the plaintiff, who, being successful on his appeal, claimed the return of the costs.

Held by the Court of Appeal, that, in the circumstances, a stay would be granted, unless the plaintiff's solicitors gave an undertaking to refund any costs in the event of the defendants' appeal to the House of Lords being successful.—THE RATATA, C.A.

10. Costs—Consultations with counsel—Shorthand notes of evidence—Expenses of witnesses.—Where a taxing-master had directed (1) that fees for consultations should be ascertained by the number of consultations allowed; (2) that costs of witnesses should be ascertained at a uniform rate of fourteen days' subsistence when the witness was examined twice, and seven days when examined only once,

Held, that the first direction was right, and that the master need not inquire into the length of the consultations and the importance of the occasions on which they were held, but that the second direction was erroneous, for that the case of each witness properly called should be considered, and a reasonable allowance made having regard to the character of his evidence and the probability of his having to be recalled.—COMMISSIONER FOR RAILWAYS v. O'ROURKE, P.C.

11. Costs—Order as to costs made by judge at chambers—Power of judge at trial to interfere—Ord. 14, r. 9.—Where on an application under order 14 the judge at chambers has made an order as to costs, the judge at the trial has no jurisdiction to interfere with those costs.—KOOSEN v. ROSE, C.A., 337.

12. Costs—Parties—Husband and wife—Separate actions by—Ord. 16, r. 1—Ord. 18.—Where the defendants contemplated erecting premises which would if completed, it was alleged, interfere with the ancient lights of two messuages, one of which belonged to a husband and the other to his wife, separate actions were brought by husband and wife claiming (inter alia) an injunction and damages. The title of the wife did not appear. On a motion for an injunction the defendants admitted the right of the plaintiffs, and had previously offered to amend their plans accordingly. They objected, however, to paying two sets of costs.

Held, that, if it should turn out that the wife was not entitled to her separate use, the taxing-master should disallow any extra costs occasioned by bringing two actions instead of one.—HEIMBS v. NEWCASTLE CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

13. Costs—Security for costs of appeal—Appeal against order for attachment—Ord. 58, r. 15.—Where an appeal is brought against an order for a writ of attachment, the court will not, in its discretion, as a general rule, order security for the costs of the appeal to be given.—HOOD BARRS v. HERIOT (No. 2), C.A., 17.

14. Costs—Sequestration—Discretion—Ord. 43, r. 7.—When an application is made for leave to issue a sequestration for non-payment of costs the court or judge should be satisfied that the application is reasonable, but it is not necessary to point to any particular property which may be made available for the payment of the costs by sequestration.

When the court or judge to whom the application is made has exercised a discretion and made an order, that order ought not to be interfered with by a superior court unless it is shown that there has been an improper exercise of the discretion or some miscarriage of justice.—HULBERT v. CATHCART, H.L.

15. Costs—Solicitor—Plaintiff made party without authority—Motion to strike out name—Action discontinued—Judicature Act, 1875 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 77), s. 21—R. S. C., ord. 26, r. 1; ord. 78, r. 2.—When a plaintiff is made a party to an action without his authority there is jurisdiction to order the solicitors so using the plaintiff's name to pay the plaintiff's costs, although before a motion for that purpose and to strike out the plaintiff's name from the writ can be made, the action has been discontinued.—GOLD REEFS OF WESTERN AUSTRALIA v. DAWSON, Ch.D. North, J., 285.

16. Costs—Taxation—Costs of Appeal—Meaning of.—The expression "costs of the appeal" means extra expenses first incurred in the litigation started by the notice of appeal.

Held, accordingly, that the costs of briefs of the pleadings and evidence used in the court of first instance, although such briefs were utilized and necessary for the appeal, were not "costs of the appeal."—KEVANS v. JOYCE, C.A. (Ir.).

17. Costs—Taxation—Taxation in district registry—Jurisdiction of judge—Order for retaxation before taxing-master in London—Grounds for making such an order—Question of principle.—Where costs have been taxed in a district registry, a judge in chambers, if satisfied that the registrar, whether or not he has gone wrong on any question of principle, has taken an exaggerated or erroneous view of the case, has jurisdiction to order that the bill, or part of it, be referred for retaxation to some other person of greater skill and experience (e.g., to one of the taxing-masters in London).—STEVENS v. GRIFFIN, C.A., 658.

18. Default of pleading—Motion for final judgment against one defendant in absence of other defendants—Cause of action severable—Company—Rectification of register—Ord. 27, r. 12.—Upon motion for final judgment against one of several defendants upon admission of the plaintiff's claim by such defendant, it is not necessary to serve the other defendants with notice of the motion, the cause of action being severable.—MACMILLAN v. AUSTRALASIAN TERRITORIES, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

19. Discovery of documents—Action for fraudulent conspiracy—Ord. 31, r. 12.—An order for discovery of documents may be made against a defendant in an action for fraudulent conspiracy. The objection that the production of any document would tend to criminate the defendant can be made by him in his affidavit in answer.

Redfern v. Redfern, 39 W. R. 212, [1891] P. 139, distinguished.

Allhusen v. Labouchere, 27 W. R. 12, 3 Q. B. D. 654, approved.—SPOKES v. GROSVENOR RAILWAY HOTEL CO. (No. 1), C.A., 545.

20. Discovery of documents—Action by shareholder to recover damages for company—Company joined as defendant—Right of plaintiff to discovery from company—"Other party"—Ord. 31, r. 12.—Where a shareholder in a company brings an action on behalf of himself and the other shareholders to recover damages for the company, and the company is joined as a defendant to the action, an order may be made against the company at the instance of the plaintiff for discovery of documents, though no relief is sought against the company.—SPOKES v. GROSVENOR RAILWAY HOTEL CO. (No. 2), C.A., 546.

21. Discovery—Documents—Affidavit of documents—Objection to produce—Conclusiveness of affidavit.—In an action against directors for an alleged fraudulent misrepresentation in the prospectus of a company to the effect that more than 12,000 cyclists in London alone had enrolled themselves as annual subscribers to the company, the defendants made an affidavit of documents in which they said that they had in their possession 12,500 applications by persons wishing to be enrolled as annual subscribers to the company, but they objected to produce these documents on the ground that they formed no part of the evidence supporting the defendants' case, and did not support or tend to support the plaintiff's case, and contained nothing impeaching the defendants' case.

Held, that, there being nothing to show that the affidavit erroneously represented or misconceived the nature of the documents, they were protected from production.—FRANKENSTEIN v. GAVIN, C.A., 547.

22. Discovery — Production of books — Common order—Liberty to seal up irrelevant entries—Form of order giving liberty to cover up without sealing.—A party to an action, who has obtained against his opponent the common order for production and inspection of books and documents, giving liberty to the opponent to seal up such parts of the books as do not relate to the matters in question, is not entitled to insist upon the actual sealing up of such parts of the books where so doing would interfere with the conduct of the opponent's business or be oppressive; and the covering up upon oath of the irrelevant parts of such books is a sufficient compliance with the order. — GRAHAM v. SUTTON, CARDEN; & Co., C.A.

23. Discovery—Production of documents—Crown —Crown Suits Act, 1865, ss. 13, 16.—The Crown is not bound to give discovery to a subject, although it has the same right of discovery against a subject as another subject has.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE CORPORATION, C.A.

24. Discovery—Production of documents—Sealing up—Inspection by judge — Jurisdiction—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 31, r. 19a, sub-rule 2.—The word "privilege" in ord. 31, r. 19*a*, sub-rule 2, is not to be construed in a narrow sense so as to exclude the case of an objection to discovery based on the ground of irrelevancy. It includes any ground on which inspection is sought to be resisted.—EHRMANN v. EHRMANN (No. 2), Ch.D. Stirling, J.

25. Discovery of documents — Interrogatories — Action for forfeiture of land.—The defendant in an action to recover possession of land on a forfeiture for breach of a covenant contained in a lease, cannot be ordered to make an affidavit of discovery of documents or to answer interrogatories.

Seaward v. Dennington, 44 W. R. 696, disapproved. —MEXBOROUGH (EARL) v. WHITWOOD DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 564.

26. Discovery—Inspection of documents—Documents referred to in affidavits—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 31, rr. 15-18.—In the course of proceedings to set aside an award on the ground of misconduct of an arbitrator an affidavit was sworn by the arbitrator for the purpose of being used by the party in whose favour the award had been made. The affidavit was not filed, but a copy of it was handed to the other party. It contained a reference to certain letters. On an application for inspection of the letters,

Held, that the case was within ord. 31, r. 15, and that there was power to make an order for inspection under rule 18.—FENNER AND LORD'S ARBITRATION, RE, C.A., 486.

27. Discovery—Interrogatories—Criminal or penal proceedings — Right to discovery — Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), ss. 3, 10. —Section 3 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, makes it an offence to cause or knowingly to permit any sewage matter to flow into any stream; and by section 10 the county court of the district has power, by summary order, to require any person to abstain from the commission of such offence, and any person making default in complying with any such requirement shall pay such sum not exceeding £50 for every day during which he is in default, as the court may order, and such penalty shall be enforced in the same manner as any debt adjudged to be due by the court.

Held, that proceedings instituted in the county court for an order requiring a person to abstain from causing or permitting sewage to flow into a river were not proceedings of a criminal or penal nature, and that an order for discovery might be made against such person.—DERBYSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. DERBY (MAYOR), C.A., 3.

28. Discovery — Production of documents—Documents in possession of former solicitor—Solicitor's lien—Dispute as to bill of costs—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 31, r. 14.—The principle that it is not a good defence on a summons for production of documents to say that the documents are in the possession of a former solicitor of the person called on to produce, who has a lien on them for his bill of costs, applies also to a case where it is alleged, in addition, that the bill of costs is disputed and that there is a good defence to it. An order for production will be made in such a case, with liberty to apply, in order to prevent any hardship.

Rodick v. Gandell, 10 Beav. 270, and Vale v. Oppert, 23 W. R. 780, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 340, applied.—LEWIS v. POWELL, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 438.

29. Discovery—Production of documents—Libel in newspaper—Original manuscript—Ord. 31, r. 18.—In an action for libel in a newspaper the defendants in their defence admitted the publication, and pleaded an apology, and paid a sum of money into court. In their affidavit of documents the defendants stated that they had in their possession certain documents relating to the matters in question in the suit, among them being a manuscript which they objected to produce on the ground that it was the original contribution to them, and was that which was published by them.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to production of the manuscript.

Hennessy v. Wright, 36 W. R. 879, 24 Q. B. D. 445, followed.—HOPE v. BRASH, C.A., 659.

30 Evidence—Letters of request to take evidence before foreign tribunal—Discretionary power of court. —In order to justify the court, in the exercise of its discretion, ordering the issue of letters of request to a foreign tribunal to take evidence, there must be clear proof that the evidence abroad which is sought to be obtained is material to the case in issue, and is not merely such as incidentally might be useful on a collateral matter.—EHRMANN v. EHRMANN, C.A., 149.

31. Evidence—Order to examine person making statements deposed to in affidavit filed on motion—Ex parte application — R. S. C., Ord. 37, r. 5. — Where, in an affidavit filed on behalf of the plaintiffs on a motion, which by consent stood over, statements were deposed to as having been made by a person to the deponent, and which were material for the purposes of the plaintiffs' case, leave was, on an ex parte application, given to the plaintiffs to examine such person before an examiner, the deposition to be given in evidence as if it were an affidavit.—TURNER PNEUMATIC TYRE CO. v. DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE CO., Ch.D. Stirling, J.

32. Garnishee order—Prior charge on interest of judgment debtor—Tenants' rents.—A garnishee order only binds the attached debt to the extent to which the judgment debtor himself can deal with it.—O'CONNOR v. IRELAND, Q B.D. (Ir.).

33. Habeas Corpus—Prisoner—Witness—Order on governor of prison.—Where a plaintiff moved ex parte for an order on the governor of a prison to produce a prisoner in court at the trial, but the time of hearing was uncertain, the court made the order in the form given in Seton, 5th ed., p. 89, but directed that the same should not be drawn up until the case was in the paper for trial.—JENKS v. DITTON, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

33A. Interpleader—Seizure of goods in execution—Claim by holder of bill of sale—Order for sale—Application of proceeds—Jurisdiction of judge—Ord. 57, r. 12.—Goods were in June, 1897, seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa. for £60; they were claimed by the holder of a bill of sale, given on 2nd of May, 1897, to secure a loan of £130, repayable by seventeen monthly instalments, with interest at 60 per cent. On an interpleader summons by the sheriff, the judge ordered a sale of the goods, and payment out of the proceeds to the bill of sale holder of the amount of his debt, with interest only up to the date of payment, and of the surplus (if any) to the execution creditor.

Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that the judge had jurisdiction under ord. 57, r. 12, to make the order for repayment at once of the principal due to the bill of sale holder together with interest at the agreed rate, up to the date of payment only; and that such order was "just," within the meaning of that expression in ord. 57, r. 12.—FORSTER v. CLOWSER, C.A.

34. Judgment — Administration — Priorities — Judgment creditor—Liberty to sign judgment under R. S. C., ord. 14, not acted upon—R. S. C., ord. 41, rr. 3, 4.—Where a creditor has obtained an order under R. S. C., ord. 14, in the usual form, giving him liberty to sign final judgment against the debtor's administratrix, but had never acted upon the order by actually signing judgment, Held, that he was not a judgment creditor entitled to priority over ordinary creditors in administration of the debtor's estate.—GURNEY, RE, CLIFFORD v. GURNEY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 92.

35. Judgment—Consent judgment—Setting aside—Common mistake—Mistake of one party induced by the other—Approbating and reprobating.—Where a consent order does not correctly express the agreement come to between the parties it may be set aside on the same grounds and in the same circumstances as a contract in similar terms between the parties.

The party complaining of mistake is not disentitled to succeed because he has previously taken proceedings (unsuccessfully) to enforce the order in the sense in which he understood it.

A consent order set aside on the ground of mistake common to both the parties, or induced by one of them.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 462), affirmed.—WILDING v. SANDERSON, C.A. 675.

36. Judgment—Motion for — Dismissal—Renewal of application—Ord. 14, r. 1.—Where, on an application to enter final judgment under ord. 14, r. 1, unconditional leave to defend has been given in consequence of a technical defect in the writ, the plaintiff may, after the defect has been cured, make a second application for final judgment.—DOMBEY & SON v. PLAYFAIR, C.A.

37. Judgment debtor—Married woman—Inquiry as to separate estate—Examination of third person—Ord. 42, r. 32.—Judgment having been recovered against a married woman and not having been satisfied, the master ordered that an inquiry be held as to her separate estate and that the judgment debtor do attend to be examined.

Held, that the order was made under ord. 42, r. 32, and that therefore, following Irwell v. Eden, 35 W. R. 511, 18 Q. B. D. 588, there was no power to compel the attendance and examination of any person other than the judgment debtor.—HOOD BARRS v. HERIOT (No. 1), C.A., 1.

38. Mandamus—Metropolis management—Sewer—Drain — Liability to repair — Vestry—Alternative remedy—Action for declaration of right—Ord. 25, r. 5.—The owner of premises in the metropolis alleged that a defective drainage pipe on his premises was a sewer within the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and therefore repairable by the vestry. The vestry denied that the pipe was a sewer.

Held, that a prerogative writ of mandamus ought not to be issued to the vestry directing them to repair the pipe. The proper proceeding was for the owner of the premises to bring an action against the vestry for a declaration of right and for a mandamus.—REG. v. CAMBERWELL VESTRY, Q.B.D., 335.

39. Mandamus — Vaccination Acts — Refusal of guardians to enforce—Application by urban sanitary authority—No legal right to performance of the duty sought to be enforced.—The District Board of Works for L. as the urban sanitary authority applied for a mandamus to compel the guardians of the poor of that district to put in force the provisions of the Vaccination Acts.

Held, that, as the urban sanitary authority had no specific legal right to the enforcement of any statutory duty by the guardians, the remedy sought was inapplicable and must be refused, because it had always been held that a clear legal or equitable right to the performance of the duty which it was desired should be enforced was necessary to support an application for a mandamus.—REG. v. LEWISHAM GUARDIANS, Q.B.D., 346.

40. Mayor's Court—Jurisdiction—Part of cause of action arising outside the City—Prohibition.—The defendants contracted with the plaintiffs that on the incorporation of a company which it was proposed to form they would transfer to him shares in the company of the value of £6,000. The proposed company was formed and incorporated. The plaintiff brought an action in the Mayor's Court for specific performance of the contract.

Held, that the Mayor's Court had no jurisdiction, on the ground that the incorporation of the company, which was a part of the cause of action, took place outside the City—viz., at Somerset House.—BOWLER v. BARBERTON DEVELOPMENT SYNDICATE, C.A., 162.

41. Originating summons—Mortgage—No offer to redeem—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 54 (a), r. 1.—Under ord. 54 (a), r. 1, a mortgagor may apply by originating summons for the determination of a question of construction arising under the mortgage deed without offering to redeem.

Where the mortgagor of a reversionary interest applied under ord. 54, r. 1, for the determination of the question whether, according to the true construction of the mortgage deed she was entitled to redeem during the period fixed by the deed for the continuance of the loan,

Held, that the court was bound to decide the question, and ought not to put the mortgagor on the terms of offering to redeem.—NOBBS v. LAW REVERSIONARY INTEREST SOCIETY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

42. Parties—Adding defendants—Alternative relief—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, rr. 7, 11.—The plaintiffs, who were shipowners, instructed the defendants, who were shipbrokers, to procure a charter. The defendants effected a charter in the name of B., P., & Co., as charterers. Default was made in loading the chartered cargo. B., P., & Co. having asserted that the defendants had acted without their authority, the plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendants for breach of warranty of authority. It subsequently appeared that the defendants probably had authority to make the charter on behalf of B., P., & Co.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an order adding B., P., & Co., as defendants to the action. —BENNETTS v. MACILWRAITH, C.A., 17.

43. Parties—Joinder of defendants—Nuisance—Injunction—Ord. 16, r. 4.—A plaintiff cannot join independent tortfeasors as co-defendants in an action for damages.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (44 W. R. 50) affirmed.—SADLER v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., H.L., 51.

44. Parties—Joinder of plaintiff—Consent of person to be joined—"His own consent in writing"—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 11—Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 34.—The provision of ord. 16, r. 11, that "no person shall be added as a plaintiff . . . without his own consent in writing thereto," makes it necessary that the consent should be actually written and signed by the person to be joined; and a consent written and signed by his solicitor in his presence and with his approval is not sufficient.—FRICKER v. VAN GRUTTEN, C.A., 53.

45. Parties—Pauper—Leave to sue in formâ pauperis—Affidavit—Case and opinion of counsel made an exhibit—Right of defendant to inspect exhibit—Ord. 16, rr. 23, 24.—Where a plaintiff has been admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, the defendant is not entitled to inspect the case laid before counsel and his opinion thereon, which have been produced to the judge upon the application for leave to sue in formâ pauperis, even though they have been made an exhibit to the affidavit filed upon that application.

In re Hinchcliffe, 43 W. R. 82, [1895] 1 Ch. 117, distinguished.—SLOANE v. BRITAIN STEAMSHIP CO., C.A., 203.

46. Parties—Representation order under ord. 16, r. 32—Will—Construction—Res judicata—Acquiescence.—An order appointing a person to represent a class for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of the court does not affect a member of the class who has a distinct and independent right in the subject-matter of the litigation, and does not make the judgment binding on him.

Where the court has construed a will for the purpose of determining the title to a fund passing under the will, and the same question of construction is raised afterwards in regard to another fund passing under the same will, the court is bound by the precedent created by its former decision.—LART, RE, WILKINSON v. BLADES, Ch.D. Chitty, J., 27.

47. Parties—Third party procedure—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 48—Breach of trust—Claim to follow trust money—Indemnity.—In an action to make the defendant liable for breach of trust by him and his deceased co-trustee, T. G. T., who was a solicitor, the defendant alleged that the trust money sought to be recovered was paid to the deceased as a member of the firm of solicitors acting for the trustees, and obtained an order for leave to serve a third party notice under ord. 16, r. 48, on the surviving members of the firm.

The notice claimed indemnity from them against the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the firm became liable for the misapplication of the money by T. G. T. On an application to discharge the order, Held, that the defendant's right (if any) to recover from the applicants a sum equal to the lost trust fund was not a right depending on his liability in the action, but an independent right, and therefore that the notice was not a claim for indemnity within ord. 16, r. 48, and must be discharged.—WYNNE v. TEMPEST, Ch.D. Chitty, J., 183.

48. Payment into court before defence—Defence denying liability—Joinder of issue—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 22, rr. 1, 4, 6, and 7.—In an action by the holder of a bill of lading for short delivery the defendants paid money into court, and served on the plaintiff a notice stating that the money paid in was enough to satisfy the plaintiff's claim. A month later they delivered a defence denying liability, on which the plaintiff joined issue.

Held, that the defence and the joinder of issue ought to be struck out, and that the only question for the court was as to the amount of damages.—DUMBLETON v. WILLIAMS, C.A.

49. Payment into court—Issue—Method of leaving issue to jury—Ord. 22, r. 22—Judicature Act, 1875, s. 22.—Ord. 22, r. 22, is not ultra vires as a contravention of section 22 of the Judicature Act, 1875.—WILLIAMS v. GOOSE, C.A., 308.

50. Pleading—Statute of Frauds—Ord. 19, rr. 15, 20.—The plaintiffs brought an action upon a written guarantee signed by the defendant. The defendant did not plead the Statute of Frauds. At the trial the plaintiffs gave evidence of a verbal contract, and in answer to the case so set up the defendant sought to rely upon the Statute of Frauds.

Held, that, if the evidence was admissible at all, the defendant was not debarred from relying on the statute by the fact that he had not pleaded it in the first instance, and that the judge should have directed the necessary amendments to be made in the pleadings.

But semble, that the evidence was not admissible. Morrell v. Cowan, 7 Ch. D. 151, approved.—BRUNNING v. ODHAMS, H.L.

51. Pleading—Striking out allegation—Libel—Publication abroad—No civil remedy in foreign country, but only criminal remedy at instance of the State—Plea of the foreign law.—Where an act has been committed abroad which if done here would by English law give rise to a right of action, an action may be brought in this country unless by the law of the place where it was done the act complained of is either justified or excused. It is therefore no defence to show that the law of the place where a libel was published provides for no civil action, but only for criminal proceedings at the instance of the State, in respect of such publication.—MACHADO v. FONTES, C.A., 565.

52. Pleadings—Striking out pleading—Frivolous and vexatious—Abuse of process of court—Affidavit evidence.—Though the court will not in general, on an application to strike out a pleading, inquire into the truth or falsehood of the allegations pleaded, yet an affidavit will be admitted to show that the allegations which a party denies by his pleading have been previously so admitted by him as to make his pleading a mere abuse of the process of the court; and in that case the pleading may be struck out.

Hildige v. O'Farrell, 8 L. R. (Ir.) 158, 30 W. R. Dig. 169, distinguished.—REMMINGTON v. SCOLES, C.A., 580.

53. Receiver—Ejectment action—Disputed title—Defendant in possession—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 8.—In a pending action to recover possession of land the court has jurisdiction, under section 25, sub-section 8, of the Judicature Act, 1873, to appoint a receiver, although the title is legal and the tenant is in possession.

But a case must be made to justify such appointment; and the Court of Appeal discharged an order for a receiver made by Kekewich, J., as made on insufficient grounds.—FOXWELL v. VAN GRUTTEN, C.A.

54. Stay of proceedings—Vendor and purchaser—Ord. 25, r. 4.—A summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act asking for relief, to which it is plain from the contract that the tenant cannot be entitled, will be stayed as frivolous and vexatious.—BARTLETT AND BERRY'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. North, J.

55. Writ—Service—Foreign corporation—Agent—Clerk—Admiralty—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 9, r. 8.—The defendants, a foreign corporation, had their name on the door of an office of their agents in London, and issued business cards and advertisements directing the public to apply to them there respecting the carriage of goods by their steamers running between Tilbury and Ostend. The rent of the office was paid by the agents of the defendants, and the clerks, including the manager, employed in the office were the servants of the agents.

The plaintiffs, owners of cargo in a foreign ship, commenced an action for damages by collision against the defendants, and served the writ of summons on the managing clerk at the office in London.

On motion by the defendants to set aside the service,

Held, that the service of the writ was not on "the . . . clerk . . . of such corporation" within the meaning of ord. 9, r. 8, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, and must therefore be set aside, but without costs, as the defendants had held themselves out as having an office in London.—"PRINCESS CLEMENTINE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

56. Writ—Specially-indorsed writ—Recovery of land and mesne profits—Ord. 3, r. 6—Ord. 14, r. 1—Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 214.—The plaintiffs issued a specially-indorsed writ under ord. 3, r. 6, claiming possession of certain lands held over by the defendant, who had been tenant to the plaintiffs, after the termination of his tenancy, and £80 for mesne profits. On an application under ord. 14, r. 1, for leave to sign final judgment for £80 and for possession, the accompanying affidavit stated that the £80 was claimed as double value for six months in consequence of the defendant having refused to deliver up possession.

Kennedy, J., gave the requisite leave and directed mesne profits "to be calculated up to the date of the plaintiffs obtaining possession."

Held (affirming Kennedy, J.), that, notwithstanding the terms of the affidavit, the writ was specially-indorsed so as to bring it within order 14, and that the learned judge has jurisdiction to make the order giving mesne profits up to the time of possession being obtained.—SOUTHPORT TRAMWAYS CO. v. GANDY, C.A., 684.

See also Administration, 4-6; Admiralty, 3; Arbitration, 2; Bankruptcy, 22; County Court, 6; Partition; Probate, 8-11; Railway Company, 4; Trustee, 3.

PRINCIPAL and AGENT:—

Liability of agent—Warranty of authority—Contract by public servant on behalf of Crown.—A public servant of the Crown who makes a contract on behalf of the Crown is not personally liable upon an implied warranty of authority to make such a contract.—DUNN v. MACDONALD, C.A., 355.

See also Company, 7; Contract, 7; Corporation, 1.

PRINCIPAL and SURETY:—

Bill of Exchange—Securities for—Double insolvency Doctrine of Ex parte Waring.—In order that the doctrine in Ex parte Waring, 19 Ves. 345, should apply, both estates must be insolvent and both must be under judicial administration or liquidation.—BELFAST WAREHOUSE CO., RE, CARMICHAEL, EX PARTE, C.A. (Ir.).

See also Bankruptcy, 23, 27.

PROBATE:—

1. Administration — Persons entitled abroad — Urgency—Limited grant to stranger—Court of Probate Act, 1875 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73.—Where the next-of-kin of an intestate resided in the interior of Bolivia where a communication would take two months by letter and six weeks by telegram to reach them, and there were heavy transactions (shipments and bills) of the deceased's firm requiring to be immediately dealt with, the court, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, made a limited grant to a member of the firm of chartered accountants in whose hands the books of the firm had been placed.—IN THE GOODS OF SUAREZ, P.D. & Ad.D., 704.

2. Administration — Revocation of grant — Subsequent order upon administrator to file account.—A grant of administration which had been made as upon intestacy was subsequently revoked, and probate granted to an executor of a will which had recently been discovered.

Upon application by the executor for an account showing how the administrator had dealt with the estate, objection was taken that the court had no jurisdiction, in view of the fact that the grant had been revoked, and the registrar so held and dismissed the application. But, upon appeal, Barnes, J., upon the authority of Taylor v. Newton, 1 Lee 15, reversed the registrar's decision with costs, and ordered the defendant to furnish to the plaintiff within fourteen days after probate should be exhibited to him an account showing how he had disposed of the estate.—JENKINS, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

3. Administration with will annexed — French domicil of testatrix — English domicil of origin — Will made in English form in execution of a power.—The testatrix, whose domicil of origin was English, but who married a Frenchman, and though living apart from him for many years, died domiciled in France, made a will in exercise of a power of appointment. The will, which was in English form and described the testatrix as of English domicil, was invalid according to the law of France.

The court made a grant of administration with the will annexed to her daughter the residuary legatee for life, the executors of the will having renounced probate thereof.

In the Goods of Hallyburton, L. R. 1 P. & D. 90, followed.—HUBER, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

4. Administration with will annexed—Minors—Guardians—Probate Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77), s. 73—Limited grant—Form of order.—In making a limited grant, under section 73, of administration with the will annexed, in favour of the guardian appointed on behalf of minors, who, if of age, would be entitled to administer the estate of the deceased.

Held, that the best form of limitation would be "until one of the minors comes of age and applies."

A limited grant, under section 73, made without notice to the person primarily entitled.—LILLEY, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

5. Company executors—Administration with the will annexed to nominee—Company sole surety.—A testator appointed a limited company trustees and executors of his will. The court on motion, upon evidence of the sufficiency of the company and its power to act, granted letters of administration with the will annexed to a nominee of the company with the company as sole surety.—HUNT, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 236.

6. Practice—Appointment of receiver pendente lite—Jurisdiction—Pending suit—Caveat—Warning—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 8.—Notwithstanding sub-section 8 of section 25 of Judicature Act, 1873, the court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver unless the application is made in a pending proceeding already duly commenced by writ or otherwise.

In re Parker, Dearing v. Brooks, 54 L. J. Ch. 694, 35 W. R. Dig. 162, explained.

The entry of a caveat in the goods of a deceased person, together with a warning to the caveat and an appearance by the caveator to the warning, does not constitute a lis pendens or enable the court to appoint a receiver pendente lite.—SALTER v. SALTER, C.A., 7.

7. Practice—Costs—Probate suit.—As a general rule, parties unsuccessfully resisting probate of a will on the ground of undue influence, will be ordered to pay the costs of the suit; but under the particular circumstances of the suit in question the court allowed the defendant's costs out of the estate.—BROWNING v. MOSTYN, P.D. & Ad.D.

8. Practice—Non-contentious proceedings—German executor—Declaration instead of oath—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 38, rr. 6, 14.—Upon application by three German executors, all resident in Germany, for probate of a will, one of the executors declined to take the usual oath, on the ground that he was not allowed to do so by the laws of his place of residence, and the registrar of the Principal Probate Registry declined to accept his declaration in lieu of his usual oath; but the court accepted the declaration, and ordered that probate should issue in favour of all three executors.

The Rules of the Supreme Court do not apply to non-contentious probate business.—CASPARI, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

9. Practice—Pleading—Parties—Joinder.—The plaintiff, who had full knowledge of the testamentary documents of the deceased testator, issued a writ making one person defendant only. After that defendant had put in his defence settnig up a later will, the plaintiff applied for leave to amend the pleadings by adding as a defendant the surviving witness of the will propounded by the plaintiff. This person was in fact the solicitor who had prepared the will propounded in the defence, and was executor thereunder.

The registrar refused the application, holding that it was misconceived, and dismissed the summons, with costs.

Upon appeal to the judge (in chambers) the proposed amendment was allowed, but the plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs of the defendant which had been thrown away by reason of the non-joinder of the second defendant in the first instance. The plaintiff was also ordered to pay the defendant's costs on the appeal.—COKE v. FRENCH, P.D. & Ad.D.

10. Practice—Presumption of death—Affidavit.—On an application for leave to depose as to the death of a person who had disappeared, the affidavit of the applicant referred to letters from that person which were not produced or accounted for, and did not explain the delay which had occurred in making the application, and there was no corroborative statement or belief of the death.

Held, that the hearing must be adjourned for a further and better statement.—CLARKE, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

11. Practice—Suit for revocation of probate—Judgment given in absence of plaintiff—Application to restore—Ord. 36, r. 33—Application granted—Terms.—Where, for a reason explained to the court, the plaintiff was not represented at the hearing of a probate suit, and applied within six days from the date of the judgment for leave to restore the cause, the court, in granting the application, made it a condition that the plaintiff should, before a certain day, pay the costs of the defendant as between solicitor and client, and directed that, if he failed to do so, the judgment against him should stand.—CUDWORTH v. HAYWARD, P.D. & Ad.D.

12. Will—Codicils written by inadvertence upon a former and revoked will—Motion—Mistake rectified.—The testator executed a will in 1883. His wife died in August, 1884, and in November, 1884, he executed a fresh will. In October, 1890, the testator handed to his solicitor a document, which the solicitor understood to be the last will, and the testator requested that a codicil should be prepared. This was accordingly done, and appended to the document in question and duly executed. In 1895 a second codicil was duly executed on the same document.

After the testator's death it was discovered that the codicils had been appended to and made to refer to the document which was, in fact, the revoked will of 1883.

The court, upon motion, allowed the words of mis-description in the codicils to be omitted from the probate, and, with such omissions, granted probate of the two codicils, and of the will of 1884, as together constituting the true testamentary intentions and dispositions of the deceased.—SNOWDEN, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

13. Will—Condition.—A soldier, whilst on active military service in New Zealand in 1864, made a will in the form of a holograph letter addressed from the camp to his sister, in the following terms: "This is the most important part of my letter. If we remain here taking Pahs for some time, the chances are in favour of more of us being killed, and, as I may not have another opportunity of saying what I wish to be done with any little money I may possess in case of an accident, I wish to make everything I possess over to you. In the first place, there is money at Cox's, over £100 in New South Wales Bank, New Zealand. Keep this till I ask you for it.—Your affectionate brother, J. S."

The testator died in 1896.

The court held the will not conditional, and admitted it to probate.

Where there is an ambiguity as to whether a will is contingent or not, the whole language and the surrounding circumstances must be considered. There are two criteria specially useful for determining the problem—first, whether the nature of the disposition made appears to have relation to the time or circumstances of the contingency; and, secondly, whether the period of danger which is apprehended is or is not coincident with the period of contingency.—SPRATT, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 159.

14. Will—Lost will—Proof—Motion—Consent of next-of-kin—Next-of-kin minors.—The court will not allow the contents of a lost will to be proved on motion, without the consent of the next-of-kin, unless the estate be small.

Where the next-of-kin were minors and therefore could not consent, the court refused to allow proof of a lost will on motion, and ordered the will to be propounded.—PEARSON, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D., 143.

15. Will — Misdescription of legatees — Wrong Christian names—Refusal to strike out.—The will of the testator contained a bequest in favour of "Florence Lilian Savory and Thomas Savory, the two children of my nephew, J. F. Savory"; another bequest, to "my nephew Allen Edward Savory" for his life, and thereafter in trust for "his two children, Gordon Savory and Ronald Savory, in equal shares"; and a further bequest, to "Florence Savory, the wife of Allen Edward Savory, during her life," and, subject thereto, "in trust for her two children, Gordon Savory and Ronald Savory, in equal shares."

These were, in fact, the names of the children of J. D. Savory, while the children of Allen Edward and Florence Savory were named Florence Lilian and Thomas.

Upon motion to omit from the probate the Christian names so transposed in the will,

Held, that this could not be done, as it was not shown that the testator did not mean those names to be inserted in the will, though he might not have meant so to benefit the persons to whom those names actually belonged.—DURLACHER, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

16. Will — Revocation — Evidence — Admissibility —Statements of testatrix after date of will.—Under the Wills Act the same formalties are necessary to prove the revocation of a will as to prove the execution of a will.

If a will has been executed in duplicate conformably with the statute, and the possession of the duplicate has been traced to the testator, and after his death it is proved that one of them has been destroyed by the testator or is missing, the destruction of the one part will operate as the destruction of the will itself; but the statement of a testator, made after the execution of his will, that he had executed it in duplicate and has destroyed one of the duplicates is not admissible evidence.

Decision of Barnes, J., affirmed.

Sugden v. Lord St. Leonards, 24 W. R. 860, 1 P. D. 154; Doe d. Shallcross v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747; and In the Goods of Ripley, 6 W. R. 460, 1 Sw. & Tr. 68, applied and followed.—ATKINSON v. MORRIS, C.A., 293.

17. Will—Revocation—Revival—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 22.—Testatrix made a will in 1889, and in 1892 instructed her solicitor to prepare a codicil, which she took away with her but never executed. Afterwards, in 1892, she executed a new will prepared by another solicitor revoking the former will. In 1893 she executed a codicil prepared by the first solicitor, who was not aware of the second will. This codicil purported to be a second codicil to the will of 1889, and confirmed "my said will and the first codicil thereto."

Held, that the codicil by its language revived the earlier will, and that both wills together with the codicil must be admitted to probate.—CHILCOTT, IN THE GOODS OF, P.D. & Ad.D.

18. Will—Revocation—Will executed in duplicate —Part retained by testator not forthcoming—Holograph copy of first codicil and original second codicil—Second codicil alone admitted to probate.—The testator in 1891 executed a will in duplicate and retained both parts in his possession at the time, but in the following year he sent one part to the defendant, who, some time in 1893, tore it up by accident along with some other papers, but, finding he had done so, caused the pieces to be pasted together.

No testamentary papers were found in the testator's repositories, but soon after his death, which occurred in July, 1895, a friend of the testator produced to his solicitors holograph copies of the will and of a document which purported to have been executed as a codicil to the will, and to bear date 1892, and also an original holograph document duly executed and bearing date the 22nd of August, 1892, and described as "a second codicil to my will." The last document gave a legacy of £800 among the children of the friend to whom the testator had sent it, and in whose custody it had remained.

Held, that the will and first codicil had been revoked, and that the second codicil alone was entitled to probate.—PAIGE v. BROOKS, P.D. & Ad.D.

19. Will—Testamentary document—Scotland, law of—Conditional will.—The testator, a Scotsman, by his will gave the residue of his estate to his wife for life during widowhood, and in case of her remarriage gave her one-third for life, the remainder to various legatees. There was no disposition of the residue after the wife's death in the event of her remaining a widow.

The testator being about to sail with his wife from Calcutta to England, wrote a letter to his brother in England, which was in form a good testamentary document at Scots law, and contained the following: "If anything happens to us on the way, my will has been accidentally packed away in a tin box to which I cannot now get access, as I forget which box it has been put into. However, if we both come to grief, I appoint you my executor; if I only, then in conjunction with Nan." The letter then proceeded to deal with the disposition of his estate after his wife's death in the event of her surviving him. Neither the testator nor his wife died during the voyage.

Held, that the letter was not conditional, but was a valid testamentary document, and must be admitted to probate.—HALFORD v. HALFORD, P.D. & Ad.D.

See also Executor, 8.

PROHIBITION.—See Company, 2; Justices, 10; Practice, 40.

PUBLIC HEALTH.—See Justices, 3; Local Government, 1, 3-6, 8, 9, 11-21; Metropolis Management, 11-14; Water, 3.

RAILWAY:

1. Abandonment—Superfluous lands—Limitations, Statute of.—In 1863 lands were compulsorily taken by a railway company for constructing a line through certain private quays in Dundalk. The railway, which was to be complete in 1869, was not finished until 1875, when, on trial it was found to be defective, and was never opened for public traffic. The rails were allowed to be torn up to some extent and the company never made any use of the line. There was evidence that the public passed over the line as they wished and that it was also used by a tenant of the owner of the lands taken for carting materials in which he dealt.

Held, that the lands had not become superfluous lands within section 45 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845; and that no title under the Statute of Limitations had been acquired by the original owner of them.—DUFFY'S ESTATE, RE, C.A. (Ir.).

2. Cloak-room—Article deposited—Ticket—Condition on ticket—"Not responsible for"—Meaning of.—The plaintiff deposited a gun of over £10 in value in the cloak-room of the defendants, and received a ticket which contained the condition that "the company will not be responsible for articles left at the station unless the same be duly registered and a ticket given in exchange; the company will not be responsible for any package exceeding the value of £10." When the gun was given back to the plaintiff it was found to be damaged through the careless handling of the company's servants.

Held, that the words in the condition, "not responsible for any package exceeding the value of £10," meant not responsible for either the loss of such article or any damage to it, and protected the company against not only the loss of such article, but also any damage to it, and that the plaintiff therefore had no right of action against the company.—PRATT v. SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY CO., Q.B.D., 503.

3. Compensation—Land let at low rent for public park—Proviso for re-entry if land compulsorily taken—Land taken by company—Principle of compensation.—The claimants, who were lessees of a piece of land, demised the land for the remainder of their term less one day, to a corporation at a low rent upon condition that the land should be laid out and kept as a public park. The lease contained a proviso that if the land were taken compulsorily under the powers of an Act of Parliament it should be lawful for the lessor to re-enter and re-possess the land as of his former estate. Part of the land was taken by a railway company under statutory powers, but the lessor did not re-enter upon the land taken.

Held, that the claimants were entitled to receive as compensation the full commercial value of their interest in the land considered as freed from the lease, and not merely the capitalized value of the nominal rent paid to them by the corporation under the lease.—MORGAN AND LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO.'S ARBITRATION, RE, Q.B.D., 176.

4. Compensation — Lands taken or injuriously affected—Order for trial of question in High Court—Jurisdiction of master—Ord. 54, r. 12—Regulation of Railways Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 119), s. 41.—A master has jurisdiction to entertain an application for an order under section 41 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, for the trial in the High Court of a question of compensation for lands taken or injuriously affected.

Where the master refuses to make an order under section 41, and between the date of the master's order and an appeal to the judge the railway company issues a warrant to the sheriff to summon a jury to assess the compensation, the judge has still jurisdiction to make the order notwithstanding the issue of the warrant, as his order must be taken as relating back to the time when the application was before the master.—DONISTHORPE v. MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, &c., RAILWAY CO., C.A., 386.

5. Contractors—Money to be paid to bankers for the purposes of railway company—Guarantee—Right of contractors to sue guarantor in their own name—Interest.—By an agreement between the plaintiff company and the defendants, the contractors for the company, the price to be paid for the construction of the works was fixed at the whole capital of the company. The money as received was to be paid to the bankers, and made applicable for payment to the contractors. A sale of shares and debentures was subsequently arranged, and the bankers guaranteed the interest on the debentures and preference shares up to the time fixed for completion of the works. By agreement of the 31st of December, 1889, the contractors entered into an undertaking with the plaintiff company for the payment of such interest. During the progress of the works the business of the bankers was transferred to a limited company, and such banking company were allowed to continue as bankers on the guarantee of the Trustees Corporation. The banking company went into liquidation. The works were not completed for more than a year after the time fixed for completion. Interest on the debentures and preference shares in the meantime became due which was not paid by the contractors, and was paid by the plaintiff company only so far as concerned the debentures.

The plaintiff company brought this action against the contractors to recover from them a sum of money in their hands, and a further sum for non-completion of the line within the stipulated time. The defendants counter-claimed to recover similar sums from the Trustees Corporation on the guarantee.

The contractors had admitted that at the time of action brought there was due from them £35,000, which might have been recovered by the bankers from the Trustees Corporation or the company.

Held (1), on the evidence, that the contractors had not completed within the time fixed, and there was no agreement to relieve them from payment of interest, but that the arbitrator (to whom the matters in dispute had been referred) having found that the company were liable for not taking over the line when it was completed, the contractors were entitled to have the amount for which the company was so liable applied in reduction of the interest;

(2) That the contractors were entitled to sue the Trustees Corporation in their own name;

(3) That, inasmuch as the debt of the bankers was not due at law to the contractors, this sum could in ordinary circumstances not be set off against them, yet as the contractors were entitled to sue in their own name, set-off was available by the Trustees Corporation against them.—ALCOY RAILWAY v. GREENHILL, Ch.D. Stirling, J

SETTLEMENT:—

1. Appointment of stock sufficient to raise net sum—Deductions—Liability for.—Under a power in a settlement an appointment was made of sufficient stock to raise a net sum of £2,000.

Held, that the appointee was not entitled to receive the said sum free from deductions in respect of duty, but that he must pay duty.

Banks v. Braithwaite, 32 L. J. Ch. 35, followed.—SAUNDERS, RE, SAUNDERS v. GORE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 456.

2. Costs — Successive appointments — Assignments and incumbrances of appointed shares—Interest.—By a marriage settlement certain funds were settled upon trust to invest and pay the annual produce, during the joint lives of the husband and wife as therein mentioned, and after the death of one of them, to the survivor for life, and after the death of the survivor to distribute among the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and in default thereof as the survivor should by deed or will appoint. The husband died without exercising the joint power of appointment, and the wife made several successive appointments in favour of certain of her children and appointed the residue in favour of another child. The wife having died, and an action having been brought for the administration of the trusts of the settlement, and it appearing that the appointees had assigned (in some cases to two or three persons) and incumbered their shares,

Held, (1) that interest was payable in respect of the several appointments at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum as from the death of the tenant for life; (2) that the costs must be borne rateably by the appointed shares, one set of costs to be allowed to each child in respect of the several appointments to him, the several assignees of such appointments to stand on the same footing, and to divide the costs allowed in respect of such child's share rateably between them.—HILL'S SETTLEMENT, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

3. Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Investments of income and of accumulations of income of such investments.—By a covenant in a marriage settlement it was agreed and declared that if during the coverture the intended wife or the intended husband in her right should become entitled to property above a certain value, then and in every such case the intended husband and wife should assure the property to or otherwise cause the same to be vested in trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. The trustees claimed certain investments of more than the specified value admittedly purchased by the wife out of income derived by her under the settlement.

Held, on the construction of the above covenant, that it was not intended to bind the married woman's income arising from the settled property, and that the investments ought to be regarded as accumulated income, and therefore were not bound by the covenant.

Lewis v. Madocks, 8 Ves. 150, 17 Ves. 48, distinguished.

In re Bendy, Wallis v. Bendy, 43 W. R. 345, [1895] 1 Ch. 109, not followed.—FINLAY v. DARLING, Ch.D. Romer, J., 445.

4. Deed—Construction—Referential trusts—Hotchpot—"Such and the same or the like trusts."—Express trusts were declared by a marriage settlement of a fund settled on behalf of the intended wife comprising powers of appointment of the corpus and a usual hotchpot clause as regards the unappointed part; and trusts by reference to the before-mentioned trusts were by the same settlement declared of a sum payable under a life policy which had been settled by the intended husband, in default of appointment of the sum under an express power in this behalf in the settlement. The first-named fund was appointed in unequal shares, but no appointment was made of the policy moneys.

Held, that the two funds must be treated as distinct for the purpose of hotchpot, and not as one aggregate fund.

The principle of construction adopted in Hindle v. Taylor, 4 W. R. 62, 5 De G. M. & G. 577, and approved and explained in Trew v. Perpetual Trustee Co., 43 W. R. 636, [1895] A. C. 264, held not to be applicable in such a case.

In re Perkins, 41 W. R. 170, distinguished.—BRISTOL (MARQUIS), RE, GREY (EARL) v. GREY, Ch.D. Romer, J., 552.

5. Determinable interest—"Become payable to or vested in other person"—Forfeiture.—B., by a marriage settlement, assigned property to trustees upon trust to pay the income to B. until he should die or . . . should assign, charge, or incumber the said income, or do or suffer anything whereby the same or some part thereof would, . . . if belonging absolutely to him, become payable to or vested in other persons. The surviving trustee in and subsequently to 1887 made advances out of the corpus to B., which were expended by B. for the maintenance of his family and other purposes.

Held, that the dissipation of the corpus by B. did not, on the construction of the above clause, work a forfeiture of B.'s life interest, for, so long as the money was in B.'s hands and capable of being followed, the right to the income did not pass from B.; and after B. had spent the money, the persons to whom he paid it being purchasers for value without notice, the money in their hands ceased to have any existence as a trust fund.

Semble, the result would have been different if the words "or cease to be payable to himself" had been in the settlement.—BREWER, RE, MORTON v. BLACKMORE, Ch.D. Chitty, J., 8.

6. Limitation to A. and his heirs—Limitation over in default of issue of A.—Freehold property was conveyed, by way of settlement, to trustees; upon trust for A. for life and after A.'s death, in the event of B. and C. (daughters of A.) surviving A., upon trust for B. and C. as tenants in common, and after the deaths of B. and C. upon trust for their issue as they should appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust for their children equally; and in case of the death of either B. or C. in the lifetime of A. without leaving issue, then on trust for the survivor in fee; and in default of issue of either of them, in trust for D. and E. (sons of A.) in fee as tenants in common.

B. died unmarried in A.'s lifetime. C. survived A., and upon A.'s death entered into possession of their property. C. died unmarried, having by will devised the property to her niece F.

Held, that on the death of C. without issue the property passed under the limitation in the settlement to D. and E. in fee as tenants in common.

Morgan v. Morgan, L. R. 10 Eq. 99, followed.—ARTHUR v. WALKER, M.R. (Ir.).

7. Mortgage—Purchaser for value without notice—Estoppel—Estate clause.—An estate was limited to A. for life, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to A. in fee. A. mortgaged the estate to B. for 500 years to secure £2,000. Subsequently, in 1876, on the marriage of C., A. and B., "according to their respective estates and interests," conveyed the property in fee to trustees to the use of A., B., and C. successively for life, with remainder, to secure a jointure for C.'s wife. This conveyance contained the usual "estate clause" on the part of the grantors, but contained no reference to the mortgage of £2,000 belonging to B. B. afterwards transferred this mortgage to C., who charged it in favour of the plaintiffs, who had no notice of the settlement of 1876. C. had previously also charged his life estate under the settlement in favour of the defendants, who had no notice of the £2,000 mortgage.

Held, that the £2,000 mortgage was not conveyed by virtue of the estate clause in the settlement of 1876, and was still a subsisting mortgage; that, though B. could not have set up the mortgage against the settlement of 1876, the plaintiffs, as purchasers for value without notice, were entitled to do so, and had priority over the settlement.—WILLIAMS v. PINCKNEY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

8. Tenant for life—Merger—Intention—Sale by—Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (4).—A tenant for life of a settled estate agreed to sell and convey a piece of land, part thereof, to a company, and then, before the conveyance was completed, by deed—in consideration of the release by his son (who was the succeeding tenant for life of the settled estate) of a rent-charge charged thereon payable to him, and of a covenant by the son to pay and keep down certain charges thereon in exoneration of the father and of such part of the settled estate as was retained by the father—conveyed part of the settled estate, including the land agreed to be conveyed to the company, to a trustee for a term of ninety-nine years upon trusts for further securing the payment of the charges covenanted to be paid by the son, and subject to such term and to the trusts thereof to the use of the son, his heirs and assigns.

Held, that, having regard to the provisions of section 25, sub-section (4), of the Judicature Act, 1873, and to the fact that it was for the benefit of the son that the father's life estate should be kept alive, the father's life estate was not merged and extinguished, and that he had the power (with the consent of the son) to execute a valid conveyance to the company of the land agreed to be conveyed to them.—BARRY RAILWAY CO.'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. North, J.

9. Trust for accumulation—Policies of assurance on the lives of the settlor and others—Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98), s. 1.—Where an indenture of settlement contains a direction for the accumulation of the moneys payable in respect of five policies of assurance, one on the life of the settlor and four on the respective lives of other persons, until the last of such four policies shall have fallen in, the first period for accumulation allowed by the Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98), s. 1—viz., the settlor's life—is the only period which, upon the proper construction of such a settlement, is applicable to the accumulation of the proceeds of the four policies.—ERRINGTON v. ERRINGTON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 573.

10. Trust for payment of debts—Deed of family arrangement—No notice to creditors—Death of settlor—Binding trust—Liability of estate.—Where a father and son by deed appoint property to trustees upon trust (subject to the father's life interest therein) to sell the same or any part thereof with the consent of the father and son during their joint lives and of the survivor of them during his life, and after the survivor's death at the discretion of the trustees, and out of the proceeds of sale and out of the rents and profits until sale to pay the father's debts owing during his life or at his decease, and to pay the surplus proceeds and convey the unsold property to the trustees of a settlement of even date under which the father was tenant for life and the son tenant in tail in remainder, a binding trust in favour of the father's creditors will arise upon his death although the purport of the deed has not been communicated to them, and the unsold part of the property comprised in the deed will remain charged with the unsatisfied debts of the father notwithstanding the fact that it has been conveyed to the settlement trustees.

Synnot v. Simpson, 5 H. L. Cas. 121, and Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, 2 Russ. & M. 451, discussed.—PRIESTLEY v. ELLIS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 442.

See also Fixture, 2; Inland Revenue, 2-6; Limitations, Statute of, 4; Married Woman, 5, 10.

SHERIFF:—

Fees—Levy—Interpleader issue—Liability of unsuccessful execution creditor.—The execution creditor who is unsuccessful in an interpleader issue is liable to repay to the claimant the charges of the sheriff which he has deducted from the amount of the levy.—BLAKER v. SEAGER, Q.B.D.

See also Solicitor, 16.

SHIP:—

1. Arrest—Action in rem—Guarantee—Lis alibi pendens—Staying proceedings—Bail.—A British and a German ship came into collision near Rotterdam. The agents at Rotterdam of the owners of the two vessels exchanged written agreements on behalf of the respective captains to give bail to the extent of 50,000 guilders to answer the damages, interest, and expenses to which the captains might be condemned in virtue of the sentence of a competent court, and for the purpose of serving the writ the domicil of the captains was stated to be at the offices of the respective agents. The agents also procured from Lloyd's surveyor at Rotterdam an estimate of the amount of damages sustained by each vessel, but owing, it was alleged, to the owners of the German ship insisting on this estimate being conclusive, further negotiations between the parties fell through; and on the arrival of the German ship in this country she was arrested in an action in rem at the suit of the owners of the British ship.

The owners of the German ship moved the court for an order for her release and a stay of all proceedings,

Held, that the guarantee was no bar to the action in this country, the vessel not having been arrested in Holland, and there being no legal proceedings pending there.

The Christiansborg, [1885] 10 P. D. 141, distinguished.—"MANNHEIM," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

2. Average bond—Average statement—No duty to employ an average stater.—Where, by an average bond executed at the port of discharge, consignees of cargo undertook to furnish to the shipowners a correct account and particulars of the value of the goods delivered, in order that the amount of average contribution to which they were liable might be ascertained and adjusted "in the usual manner,"

Held, that these words did not imply as a condition of the obligation that the shipowners should employ an average stater at the port of discharge.

Simonds v. White, [1824] 2 B. & C. 805, explained.

A shipowner may make out his own average statement, and is not bound to employ an average stater either at the port of discharge or elsewhere.—WAVERTREE SAILING SHIP CO. v. LOVE, P.C.

3. Average—General average—Ship disabled on voyage—Necessary repairs—Damage to cargo.—A ship rendered unnavigable by an accident in the course of the voyage may, while lying in harbour perfectly water-tight and with her cargo uninjured, be in peril so as to make any unusual act done with her to render her once more navigable a general average act, and any damage incidental to such act a general average loss.

The H. G. was on a voyage from B. A. to London. While leaving B. A. she bumped on the harbour bar. On coming outside the harbour of L. P.—a station at which she was to coal—she became unnavigable owing to her screw going wrong. She was towed into the harbour. A large part of her cargo was perishable, and there was no proper accommodation for stowing it at L. P. The master, in order to repair the screw, tipped her by the head (with cargo still on board) by filling the fore ballast tanks with sea-water, and emptying the stern tanks. Unknown to the captain, one of the pipes through which the fore tanks were filled was fractured, and the sea-water going through it escaped into the cargo. The plaintiffs' goods were injured.

Held, that, while lying in L. P. harbour, the ship and cargo were in peril; that the master's act in tipping the ship by the head was a general average act; and that the damage to plaintiffs' goods was a general average loss.—McCall v. Houlder, Q.B.D.

4. Bill of Lading—Excepted perils—Restraint of princes—Contraband of war—Risk of seizure—Contract of carriage partly performed—Justification of refusal to complete.—The plaintiffs shipped goods which were contraband of war on the defendants' ship for carriage from London to Yokohama under a bill of lading containing the exception of "restraint of princes," and also a special clause that "if the entering of or discharging in the port (of discharge) shall be considered by the master unsafe by reason of war . . . the master may land the goods at the nearest safe and convenient port." The ship also carried goods belonging to other shippers. In the course of her voyage the ship arrived at Hong Kong, and on the day of her arrival there war was declared between China and Japan. There were at that time several Chinese war-vessels in and round the port of Hong Kong, and if the master had attempted to sail thence with the plaintiffs' goods on board there would have been a serious danger of their being seized and confiscated. The master accordingly landed them there. In an action for breach of contract to carry the goods to Yokohama:

Held, (1) that the risk of the goods being seized, if attempted to be carried further, amounted to a "restraint of princes" within the exception; (2) that such risk of seizure, on the voyage between Hong Kong and Yokohama, rendered the "entering of or discharging in the port" of Yokohama unsafe within the meaning of the special clause; and (3) that the master's duty to take care of the cargo justified him, apart from any exceptions in the bill of lading, in landing the plaintiffs' goods where he did.—Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jenkins & Co., Q.B.D.

5. Bill of lading—Proceedings in foreign court—Sale of ship in foreign port—Judgment in rem.—A ship, the property of an English, company sailed to Bombay. Whilst at Bombay for the purpose of taking in cargo, her master, by the fraud of the company's manager there, was induced to sign bills of lading for goods which had not been placed on board. These bills were endorsed for value to an English bank. The ship sailed for Hamburg, but in the meantime a petition to wind up the company was presented in England, and a winding-up order was made on the very day, but a few hours before, the ship arrived at Hamburg. On her arrival there she was arrested by the Court of Hamburg on the information of the bank, and that court held that by German law the bills of lading were conclusive as against the company, and ordered the ship to be sold. The ship was sold for a sum less than the amount of the bank's claim, and the Court of Hamburg paid over the proceeds of the sale to the bank. The company then brought an action in the Queen's Bench Division against the bank, claiming that the money paid to the bank by the German court was money had and received by the bank to the use of the company for distribution amongst their creditors.

Held, affirming the judgment of Collins, J., that the proceedings in the German court were proceedings in rem, and that the judgment of that court was therefore good against the world; that the money received by the bank was not subject to any trust in favour of the creditors of the company, and that therefore the company could not recover.—Minna Craig Steamship Co. v. Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, C.A., 338.

6. Charter-party—Bill of lading—Damage to cargo—Liberty to fill up for steamer's benefit—Deviation.—By charter-party the defendant's vessel was to load a cargo of wheat at Marianople for Gibraltar for orders for a port in the United Kingdom or on the continent between Havre and Hamburg, the master of the vessel, to avoid being frozen in at the port of loading, to be "at liberty to leave . . . with part cargo, and to fill up for steamer's benefit at any open Black Sea, Azoff or Mediterranean port for United Kingdom, Continent or Mediterranean; but in case of leaving with part cargo the steamer shall complete the voyage as if a full cargo had been loaded. . . ."

The master, under this liberty, left Marianople with part of the cargo of wheat, and proceeded to Novorossisk, where he filled up for steamer's benefit with linseed. At Gibraltar he was ordered to deliver the wheat at Cardiff; but he first proceeded to King's Lynn, and there discharged the linseed. On the way between King's Lynn and Cardiff the wheat was damaged by fire. The plaintiffs, who were holders of the bill of lading incorporating the conditions of the charter-party, sued the defendants for the damage.

Held, that the defendants were liable as, between King's Lynn and Cardiff, they had become insurers of the consignees of the wheat, for, though the usual exceptions in the bill of lading and charter-party would have covered the loss if it had occurred in the ordinary course of the voyage, the defendants were not entitled to deviate by taking the wheat round by King's Lynn, and could only discharge the linseed at a port on the way.—"Dunbeth," The, P.D. & Ad.D.

7. Charter-party—Construction—Salvage services—Limits of deviation.—By a charter-party the shipowners agreed to supply the charterers with five steamers, to load between August and December inclusive, as nearly as possible a steamer a month, at an agreed foreign port, the charterers undertaking to supply cargo within twenty-four hours of notice of each ship's arrival. The charter-party expressly excepted perils of the sea, and allowed towage services.

The S. 1 should have arrived at the agreed port on or about the 23rd of September, but did not as a fact arrive until the 8th or 9th of October, owing to heavy weather. The S. 2 arrived at her agreed time, on the 12th of October, and gave notice the same day that she was ready to receive cargo. None was tendered to her until the 24th of October, there not being sufficient labour at the port to load more than one steamer at a time. In an action for damages by the owners for the detention of The S. 2, Held (affirming the award of the arbitrator and the decision of the Divisional Court), that the owners were entitled to damages.

The S. 3, on her voyage out, fell in with a disabled steamer and towed her to Mauritius on a salvage service. Such towage was out of the course of the voyage, and delayed the arrival of the vessel for three weeks. The arbitrator found that the towage service was not such as to frustrate the object of the adventure as between the charterers and the owners, and awarded damages.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that such a salvage service was an allowable deviation within the meaning of the charter-party, and that the charterers were bound to present cargo on the arrival of The S. 3.—POTTER v. BURRELL, C.A., 145.

8. Charter-party—Delay in loading—"Weather-working days"—Mode of computation—Demurrage.—A charter-party provided that cargo should be loaded at a certain rate per weather-working day. On certain days, owing to bad weather, cargo could only be loaded for a few hours.

Held, that the time so occupied in loading cargo was not to be reckoned against the charterers as a whole, but as a part only, of a weather-working day.

Where work is stopped by bad weather, but a substantial quantity of work is done, though not amounting to half a day, it is to be reckoned as half a day; where substantially more than half a day's work is done, though not amounting to a whole day, it is to be counted as a whole day; no smaller fraction than half a day should be taken into the calculation.—BRANCKELOW STEAMSHIP CO. v. LAMPORT, Q.B.D.

9. Charter-party—Demurrage—Place of discharge—"Ready to discharge."—By a charter-party a steamer when loaded with coal was to proceed to a certain port, "and as usual and customary deliver the same always afloat to the order" of the charterers "alongside any store craft steamer depot ship wharf or arsenal. . . . Time for delivery to count when steamer is ready to discharge." There was only one customary place of discharge at the port in question, and when the steamer arrived at the port that place was occupied. In an action for demurrage, Held, that the steamer was not "ready to discharge," and that the time for delivery did not therefore commence until she was at the customary place of discharge in the port.—SANDERS v. JENKINS, Q.B.D.

10. Charter-party—Discharge of timber cargo—Custom—Inconsistency with contract—"To be taken from alongside at merchants' expense."—A custom that, in discharging long lengths of timber from a ship, the shipowner is bound to put the timber into lighters brought alongside by the consignees is not inconsistent with a charter-party which provides that the timber shall be taken from alongside at merchants' expense.—AKTIESELKAB HELIOS v. EKMAN, C.A.

11. Charter-party—Excepted perils—Causes beyond charterers' control—Demurrage.—The words "or other causes beyond their control" in the exception clause of a charter-party do not relieve the charterers from liability for demurrage, where the delay arose from the disorganization of workmen at the factory of the vendors of goods when such disorganization could have been avoided if the charterers had in the first instance made a better bargain with the vendors.—RICHARDSON AND SAMUELS CO., RE, Q.B.D.

12. Charter-party—Inherent vice—"Damaged" cargo.—The master of the plaintiffs' vessel signed bills of lading for cargo as "in good order and well conditioned . . . to be delivered in the like good order and condition" subject to the usual exception as to perils of the seas, and (by incorporation of the charter-party) with the further condition that the balance of freight was payable "on right delivery of cargo less value of cargo . . . damaged . . . not covered" by the exception.

The cargo consisted of fresh cut deals, shipped, as usual at the port of loading, without regard to the weather, which at the time was wet. During the voyage part of the cargo became tainted, discoloured, and out of condition. In an action for balance of freight,

Held, that the defendants, the holders of the bills of lading, were not entitled to deduct the amount of the deterioration of the cargo from the balance of freight, as the word "damaged" referred to damage due to breach of contract by the shipowner, and did not include damage arising from want of power in the cargo to bear the ordinary transit in a ship.—"BARCORE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

13. Collision—Article 18 of the regulations for preventing—Reasonable delay.—Article 18 of the Regulations under the Merchant Shipping Act, which says, "Every steamship when approaching another ship so as to involve risk of collision shall slacken her speed or stop and reverse if necessary," is sufficiently complied with though a delay of a few seconds has occurred.

The Court is not bound to hold that compliance must be made the very moment when danger becomes apparent.

The Emmy Haase, [1884] 9 P. D. 81, approved.—"NGAPOOTA," THE, P.C.

14. Collision at anchor—Duty of colliding vessel—Duty at anchor—Onus probandi.—When a vessel under way comes into collision with a vessel at anchor exhibiting a proper light, the onus is on her to justify her conduct. She cannot be excused when it is shown that she had not a sufficient look-out. The vessel at anchor is also bound to keep a competent person on watch, whose duty it is to see that the anchor light or lights are properly exhibited, and to do everything in his power to avert or minimize a collision. If that person acts in error of judgment, when placed by the colliding vessel in a position of difficulty calling for instant decision, he is entitled to favourable consideration, and it must be shown that any alternative course would have prevented or mitigated the collision.—THE MARY TUG CO. v. BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO.; "MEANATCHY," THE, P.C.

15. Collision — Compulsory pilotage — Distressed seamen—Passengers—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 190-193, 625, 627.—Distressed seamen shipped under an order of a British consular officer at a foreign port, pursuant to the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 192, are not

"passengers" within the meaning of section 625 of the Act, which exempts ships navigating within the limits of the port to which they belong "when not carrying passengers" from compulsory pilotage in the London district and in the Trinity House outport districts.

Where, therefore, a collision occurred in the River Thames, within the limits of the port of London, between a barge and a steamer belonging to that port which carried five distressed seamen shipped under an order of the British consul at Leghorn, and a Trinity House pilot who was in charge of the steamship was found solely to blame for the collision, it was Held, that the owners of the steamship were liable for the damage done to the barge, as the steamship was not under compulsory pilotage.—"CLYMENE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

16. Collision—Narrow channel—Proper course of navigation—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 21.—The channel between the Foulness or Whitaker and the Middle Sands at the entrance to the River Thames is a narrow channel within the meaning of article 21 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, and an inward-bound vessel navigating such channel contravenes article 21 if she passes the Swin Middle Lightship on her starboard hand.

Owing to alterations effected by the Trinity House in the lighting of the Swin Channel the rule laid down in the case of The Minnie, [1894] P. 336, no longer applies.—"OPORTO," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

17. Collision—Newport Harbour Bye-laws, art. 13.—By article 13 of the Newport Harbour Bye-laws, 1894: "Every vessel shall, unless prevented by stress of weather, be brought into and be taken out of the harbour to the right of mid-channel."

Held, by the Court of Appeal (Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.), that, in order to comply with this bye-law, every vessel proceeding inward from sea must keep outside the southernmost of the buoys marking the channel at the entrance to the River Usk until she can round in on her proper side between the buoys.—"WINSTANLEY," THE, C.A.

18. Collision—River Tyne Regulations, 1884, bye-law 20.—The plaintiff's outgoing ship and the defendant's incoming ship came into collision in the daytime about on the line of lights a quarter of a mile outside the pierheads of the River Tyne. Bye-law 20 of the Regulations of the River Tyne Commissioners provides that "every vessel shall . . . be brought into port to the north of the mid-channel, and be taken out to the south of the mid-channel."

Held, that the defendant's ship had not infringed bye-law 20, as it had left the plaintiff's ship sufficient room to go out and pass to the southward, provided the outgoing ship had seen the incoming ship over the pier and acted as soon as possible.

The Harvest, 11 P. D. 90, discussed.—"JOHN O'SCOTT," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

19. Damages — Contract overriding limitation of liability—Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), s. 54.—Two yachts were entered by their respective owners for a club race, each owner undertaking with the club to be bound by the club sailing rules. By the rules the owner of any yacht disobeying any of the rules was to be liable for "all damages arising therefrom." One of the yachts in breach of a sailing rule, through improper navigation without the actual fault or privity of the owner, ran into and sank the other yacht.

Held, that there was a contract between the owners upon which the owner of the damaged yacht could sue the owner of the other, and that upon the true construction of the rules the words "all damages" excluded the operation of section 54 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, which limited the liability to £8 per ton.

The decision of the Court of Appeal, 43 W. R. 498, [1895] P. 248, affirmed.—CLARKE v. DUNRAVEN (EARL), "SATANITA," THE, H.L.

20. Harbour — Obstruction — Wreck — Removal—Owner—Liability for expenses—Aire and Calder Navigation Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. cxxii.), s. 47 —Summary remedy.—Section 47 of the Aire and Calder Navigation Act, 1889, which incorporates the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), provides that, if any vessel shall be sunk in any part of the navigation, and the owner, or person in charge, shall not remove it, it shall be lawful for the undertakers to remove it, and recover the expenses of such removal from the "owner" in a court of summary jurisdiction.

Held, that the remedy being prescribed by the section which gave the right to recover the expenses, it was not competent for the undertakers to recover them by action in the High Court, and, in any case, an owner of a sunken ship who had abandoned it to the underwriters as a total loss before any expenses had been incurred was not "the owner" within the meaning of the section.—BARRACLOUGH v. BROWN, H.L.

21. Harbour authority—Towage—Ribble Navigation Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. cxv.).—The defendants were the port and harbour authority for the port of Preston, and as such made a charge for towage, only allowing tugs licensed by them to tow within the harbour, and by the terms of the towage contract the master and crew of the tug became servants of the tow. The plaintiff's ship, in a pilot's charge, was being towed up the River Ribble by a tug of the defendants, preceded by two other vessels, each in charge of a pilot and being towed. The three vessels started in due time to save the tide, and followed each other, the channel being narrow. From some unexplained cause the tug chartered by the defendants to tow the leading vessel slowed down, and took over an hour, instead of thirty-five minutes, to do the last five miles. The water in the meantime fell, and the plaintiff's barque, which was the last and deepest of the three, on arriving at the shallowest part, grounded and remained fast. In an action for the damage so sustained, Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing the decision of the President), that the defendants were liable, as they had failed to rebut the primâ facie case against them of negligence in obstructing the fairway, for it was an implied term of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendants that the defendants would take, and it lay on them to show that they had taken, reasonable care to supply a properly-equipped leading tug, so as to enable the string of vessels to get up safely on the one tide.—"RATATA," THE, C.A.

22. Light dues — Measurement of tonnage—Deck cargo—"Goods" — Horses and cattle — Merchant Shipping Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 80), s. 23.—By section 23 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, if any ship carries as deck cargo timbers, stores, or other goods, all dues payable on the ship's tonnage shall be payable as if there were added to the ship's registered tonnage the tonnage of the space occupied by such goods. The space so occupied shall be deemed to be the space limited by the area occupied by the goods, and by straight lines enclosing a rectangular space sufficient to include the goods.

Held, that live animals carried on deck were "goods" within the meaning of the section; and that the space to be measured was not the actual sheds occupied by them, but a rectangular space no larger than was reasonably necessary to enclose the animals, allowing reasonable facilities for their movements.—RICHMOND HILL STEAMSHIP CO. v. TRINITY HOUSE CORPORATION, C.A., 6.

23. Maritime lien—Damage by collision—Mortgagee—Scotland, Law of.—The maritime law of Scotland being the same as that of England, the law of Scotland recognizes a maritime lien in cases of collision.

In order to render a ship liable to a maritime lien for injury caused the ship itself must be the instrument which causes the damage.

The Bold Buccleugh, [1851] 7 Moo. P. C. 267, approved.—CURRIE v. MCKNIGHT, H.L. (Sc.).

24. Master—Seaman—Discharge at foreign port—Maintenance and passage home—Deposit of sum with consular officer—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 186, sub-section 2 (d).—The plaintiff's service as a seaman on board a ship of the defendants having terminated at a foreign port, the master attended before the British consul in order to comply with section 186, sub-section 2 (d), of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which enacts that under such circumstances the master may "deposit with the consular officer such a sum of money as is by the officer deemed sufficient to defray the expenses of "the seaman's maintenance and passage home." The consul fixed a sum, which the master paid, and the consul gave the plaintiff a voucher for his passage home, which, however, did not include his maintenance on board.

Held, that the master had complied with the statute, and that no action lay at the suit of the seaman against the shipowners to recover the expenses of his maintenance during his passage home.

Judgment of Collins, J., ante, p. 553, affirmed.—EDWARDS v. STEEL, C.A., 689.

25. Necessaries—Bunker coal—Master's lien—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 167.—The defendants, owners of a steamship, transferred it to a Glasgow firm by a contract under which the defendants were to remain the registered owners. The Glasgow firm appointed the plaintiff master, who, without notice of the contract, whilst on a voyage, drew two bills of exchange on the Glasgow firm for bunker coal. The bills were dishonoured, and the Glasgow firm becoming insolvent the defendants as unpaid vendors took possession of the vessel. The defendants then settled with the plaintiff an action in rem brought in the name of the plaintiff by the coal merchants for lien for necessaries (the coal) under section 167 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

Held, that the settlement of the action was void as against the coal merchants to whom the plaintiff was liable on the bills, although the coals were supplied on the credit of the Glasgow firm and not of the defendants whose property the ship was.—"RIPON CITY," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

26. Passage broker—Contract ticket—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 320, 341, 342.—Section 341 (1) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which defines a passage broker to be a "person who sells or lets, or agrees to sell or let, or is in anywise concerned in the sale or letting of steerage passages in any ship proceeding from the British Islands to any place out of Europe not within the Mediterranean Sea," refers to a sale or letting of a passage commencing at a definite time for a specified voyage in a named ship.

Section 320, which enacts that "if any person . . . receives money from any person for or in respect of a passage as a steerage passenger in any ship . . . proceeding from the British Islands to any port out of Europe and not within the Mediterranean Sea, he shall give to the person paying the same a contract ticket . . . ," refers to a receipt of money paid for a specified passage commencing at a fixed time in a named ship.

A person not a duly qualified passage broker within section 342 contracted for the sum of £22 to send a lad from Liverpool to Canada and to place him as pupil upon a farm in Ontario. He procured from a properly qualified passage broker a steerage passage in a steamship from Liverpool to Quebec together with a contract ticket. He received no commission upon the sale of the ticket, nor did he make any direct profit out of it.

Held, that neither the original contract nor the contract ticket was a sale or letting of a passage within the meaning of section 341 so as to make the person liable to a penalty under section 342.

Held, also, that in procuring the contract ticket the person was not "concerned in the sale or letting of a passage" within section 341.

Held, also, that the person was not guilty of an offence under section 320.—MORRISS v. HOWDEN, Q.B.D., 221.

27. Pilot—Compulsory pilotage—Exemption—Ship trading from port in Great Britain to port in Europe north and east of Brest—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 625 (3).—A ship engaged on a voyage from the River Plate to Rotterdam with a general cargo had liberty to carry some cattle to London. Having landed the cattle in London, she was proceeding on her way to Rotterdam in charge of a pilot, when she came into collision with another ship within the London district. In proceedings against her for damage, the plea of compulsory pilotage was set up.

Held, that the ship was, at the time of the collision, a ship trading from a port in Great Britain within the London district to a port in Europe north and east of Brest within the meaning of section 625 (3) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that she was therefore exempt from compulsory pilotage.

Courtney v. Cole, 36 W. R. 8, 19 Q. B. D. 447, followed.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, ante, p. 38, [1896] P. 281, affirmed.—"RUTLAND," THE, H.L.

28. Salvage—Award—Principles of assessment.—Although there is no rule entitling the salvors of a derelict vessel, as of right, to a moiety, or other specific proportion, of the value of the property salved, and the reward is to be assessed upon the same principles as in other cases of salvage, still there are usually present, in the case of a derelict, at least three special elements which tend to enhance the award—namely, the high degree of danger to which the property to be salved is exposed, the difficulty of approaching the derelict vessel without any aid in boarding her, and the necessity, when taking her in tow, of supplying men to steer her, thereby exposing some of the salvors to additional risk, and rendering the salving vessel short-handed.—"JANET COURT," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

29. Salvage—Quantum meruit—Contract entered into with shipmaster as agent for passengers—Non-liability of owner of passenger ship—Delay or deviation.—There is no implication of law making the master of a wrecked passenger ship the agent of his owner to enter into a contract on his behalf for the passengers to be carried on in another ship where the passengers sent on have been landed from the wreck at a spot where they are in no danger of losing their lives from exposure or want of food or water, and cannot under their passenger tickets claim any damages for delay or detention.—"MARIPOSA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 191.

30. Salvage—Services rendered by request—No actual benefit resulting therefrom—Principle upon which awards will be made.—Where a vessel stands by or renders services to another upon request, even though no benefit results from her so doing, she is entitled to salvage remuneration.—"CAMBRIAN," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.

31. Salvage—Tug and tow—Claim for salvage by tug by whose acts the necessity for salvage assistance has been in part occasioned—Instance of inequitable salvage agreement—Amount agreed on not awarded.—The owners, master, and crew of a steam-tug engaged to tow a vessel are not entitled to salvage remuneration for services in the nature of salvage services rendered to the tow beyond the scope of the towage contract where it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the tug has by her own wrongful acts contributed to place the tow in jeopardy.

The court will refuse to award an agreed amount for salvage where the bargain to pay such sum is shown to it to have been manifestly unfair and unjust.—"ALTAIR," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 622.

32. Wages—Set-off—Advances of wages made by master for the purchase of slops by seaman deserters—Gratuities—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 167, 221, 232.—A shipowner defending an action of master's wages is not entitled to set off against the plaintiff's claim the amount of wages advanced by the master during the voyage for the purchase of slops, although it appears that the seamen to whom the advances were made have deserted, and thereby forfeited their wages, and the owners lay claim to the amount forfeited to reimburse the expenses caused by the desertion.

The owners of a ship cannot set off against the claim of the master of the ship for wages the amount of gratuities presented to the master by the consignees of cargo.—"PARKDALE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 368.

See also Insurance, 4-11.

SHOP.—See Factory.

SOLICITOR:—

1. Charging order—Bankruptcy—Jurisdiction in chambers—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28—Power of registrar—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 93, 99—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 6.—The judge of the High Court in Bankruptcy has power as a judge of the High Court, though not under his bankruptcy jurisdiction, to make charging orders under section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860; and inasmuch as it is a power to be exercised in chambers, he can delegate that power to the registrar in bankruptcy.—WOOD, RE, FANSHAWE, EX PARTE, Q.B.D.

2. Compromise—Authority—Compromising claim before action brought.—A solicitor, who is instructed by a client to make a claim on a third person for compensation for personal injuries, has no authority, in the absence of express directions, to effect a compromise before action brought, so as to preclude his client from bringing an action.—MACAULAY v. POLLEY, C.A., 681.

3. Costs—Cause of action—Action for work done—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), 37—Statutes of Limitation (21 Jac. 1, c. 16), s. 16), s. 3, and (4 & 5 Anne, c. 16), s. 19.—In the case of work done by a solicitor in the course of his profession a cause of action accrues due immediately after the completion of the work he was retained to do, and the Statutes of Limitation runs from such date, and not from one month after the delivery of his signed bill of costs.—COBURN v. COLLEDGE, C.A., 488.

4. Costs—Infant made plaintiff without authority—Application by defendants—Liability of plaintiffs' solicitors.—Upon the application of the defendants to an action in which an infant was made a co-plaintiff without proper authority, the solicitors who wrongly made him a co-plaintiff were ordered to pay the costs of the defendants occasioned by the infant being made a party, including the costs of the application.

The principle laid down by the Court of Appeal in Fricker v. Van Grutten, ante, p. 53, [1896] 2 Ch. 649, followed.—GEILIGER v. GIBBS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 315.

5. Costs—Lien—Compromise by plaintiffs and defendant behind solicitor's back—Collusion.—Where the plaintiffs in proceedings for taxing a bill of costs had, without the knowledge of their solicitor, come to an agreement with the defendant to stay the proceedings, the defendant paying them the sum of £25 "towards their costs" in the proceedings, and stating that he did so gratuitously because "they had been clients of his for some time, and appeared then to have spent all their money," and the plaintiffs had withdrawn their retainer from their solicitor,

Held, on the facts, that the inevitable result of such agreement must be to deprive the plaintiffs' solicitor of his rightful costs; that the plaintiffs and the defendant must have been aware that this would be the consequence of their agreement; and that, consequently, it was a collusive agreement bringing the parties within the decision of Price v. Crouch, 35 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 610, 60 L. J. Q. B. 767, 40 W. R. Dig. 248, and that the plaintiffs' solicitor was entitled to an order that his costs should be taxed as between solicitor and client and paid to him by the defendant.—MARGETSON, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 645.

6. Costs—Payment of costs to solicitor—Judgment reversed on appeal—Repayment of costs by solicitors—Solicitors' agents.—A solicitor who has succeeded, after notice of appeal, in obtaining payment of his costs from the unsuccessful opposite party under an order which is afterwards reversed on appeal, cannot be personally ordered to repay such costs to the successful appellant. In cases where an appeal is intended and execution is not stayed, application should be made to the court requiring the solicitor of the successful party to give a personal undertaking to repay should the order for payment of costs be reversed.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (44 W. R. 487, [1896] 1 Q. B. 610) affirmed.

Fitzmaurice v. Jordan, 32 L. R. Ir. 112, 41 W. R.

Dig. 189, overruled.—HOOD BARRS v. CROSSMAN, H.L., 465.

7. Costs—Proceedings commenced by solicitor without proper authority—Stay of proceedings—Order for payment of costs against the solicitor.—The old rule that, when a solicitor has commenced proceedings on behalf of a person from whom he has not received a proper authority, the person so made a party remains liable for the costs of the proceedings, and has no remedy except against the solicitor, has now been altered; and an order will be made staying all proceedings by or against the person improperly joined (including all proceedings under any order already made against him), and directing the solicitor to pay any costs which such person may have been ordered to pay, and to pay such person's costs as between solicitor and client.—FRICKER v. VAN GRUTTEN, C.A., 53.

8. Costs — Taxation — Agency charges — Country solicitor and London agent—Separate bills of costs.—Disbursements—Complete bill—Particulars of agency charges—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37), s. 73.—Upon an application to tax a bill of costs after the expiration of twelve months from the date of the delivery of the bill, on the ground that certain items for agency charges are treated as disbursements, and no particulars of them are given, it must appear on the face of the bill that the applicant has not been furnished with such detailed information as will enable him to form a fair opinion as to whether he ought to proceed upon a taxation or not. When such items taken together do not represent a substantial part of the whole bill the court will hesitate to order a taxation on the ground that the bill is incomplete; but when such items bear a substantial proportion to the amount due under a separate heading in a particular matter which forms a part of the whole bill, the court will not limit an order for taxation to the particular matter, but will regard the whole bill as incomplete and taxable.—POMEROY AND TANNER (No. 2), RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

9. Costs—Taxation—Common order—Moneys received by solicitor in different capacities—Counsel's fees.—The clause in the common order to tax directing credit to be given for all sums received must be read as including and as confined to all moneys which the solicitor, in his character as solicitor or agent of the client, has received of, or on account of, or is legally or equitably liable to pay over to, the client, and against which, if sued for by the client, the solicitor could set off his costs when taxed.

Fees received, or alleged to have been received, by solicitors on account of a client, who was also a barrister, as counsel's fees are not included in the above clause, and therefore are not liable to be brought into account in the taxation of a bill of costs between the solicitor and such client.—LE BRASSEUR AND OAKLEY, RE, C.A., 87.

10. Costs—Taxation after bill delivered more than twelve months—Agency charges—Disbursements—Complete bill.—The charges of the London agent of a country solicitor, as between the country solicitor and his client, are taxable items, and should not be treated as disbursements in the country solicitor's bill of costs.

A bill of costs which fails to set forth the details of such agency charges is not a complete bill so as to preclude taxation more than twelve months after delivery.—POMEROY AND TANNER, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 245.

11. Costs — Taxation — Interest — Administration action—General Order, Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, r. 7.—The "person liable" and on whom demand for payment of a bill of costs due from a deceased client is to be made is the legal personal representative. Where, therefore, a bill of costs due from the deceased had been delivered by direction of the chief clerk to a creditor having the conduct of an action in which the estate of the deceased was being administered, Held, that there had been no demand on the person liable within the meaning of rule 7 of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, so as to entitle the solicitors to interest under that rule.—MCMURDO, RE, PENFIELD v. MCMURDO, Ch.D. North, J., 244.

12. Costs—Taxation—Joint application of mortgagee-solicitor and his bankrupt client—Submission of solicitor to pay.—A solicitor, who is mortgagee of the moneys coming to his client on the cash account and taxation of the bills of costs of his client's former solicitors, and who makes a joint application with his client for delivery of such cash account and bills of costs and for taxation, must join with his client in the usual submission to pay, and the fact that his client has been adjudicated bankrupt while such proceedings were pending will not relieve the solicitor from making such submission. —BATTAMS v. HUTCHINSON, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 458.

13. Costs—Taxation—"Person liable to pay"—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 38—Solicitors (Ireland) Act, 1849, s. 3.—The beneficial owner of the residuary estate of a testator, is a "person liable to pay" the costs of the solicitor of the executor; and consequently is entitled, under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, to have the costs taxed.—EARLY, RE, C.A. (Ir.).

14. Lien—Lunatic—Tenant for life and remainderman.—A lunatic was tenant for life of lands of which B. and C. were remaindermen in fee as tenants in common. B., having been appointed committee of the lunatic, employed H. as solicitor in the lunacy, who, in that capacity, obtained the custody of the title-deeds. B. and C. being desirous of paying off a mortgage on the life estate, and charging the fee, presented a petition in the lunacy that the committee might be authorized to join in paying off the mortgage on the life estate, and creating a charge on the fee. H. acted as solicitor in connection with this petition.

Held, that H. was, after the death of the lunatic, entitled to a lien on the title-deeds as against B. and C. in respect of the costs of and incidental to that petition; but was not entitled to a lien against them in respect of any other costs incurred as solicitor of the committee.—STANNARD'S ESTATE, RE, Ch.D. (Ir.).

15. Lien—Solicitors discharged by client—Delivery up of papers—Tender of balance—Costs.—A firm of solicitors were discharged by their client. The new solicitor obtained the usual order for delivery of a bill of costs and taxation and afterwards tendered to them (but not in settlement) the amount claimed and requested delivery up of papers. Both the tender and request were refused on the grounds, as to the tender, that the solicitors were entitled first to their balance in settlement, and as to the papers, that they had a lien on them for their costs, including those of certain habeas corpus proceedings commenced against them and others on behalf of the client, and which they were defending, that they were entitled to have a sum paid into court to answer the costs of taxation, and also to an undertaking to return the papers in case any balance was found due on the taxation to them.

On a motion for an order for delivery up of the papers,

Held, that the solicitors ought to have accepted the tender and to have delivered up the papers upon getting a receipt from the present solicitor and an undertaking for a return of the papers in case any sum was found due to them on taxation within a week after such taxation.

Re Beavan and Whiting, 33 Beav. 439, followed.

Held, also, that the costs relating to the habeas corpus not being taxable costs, charges, and expenses incurred by them as solicitors for the client could not be included in the lien.

Re Taylor, 64 L. T. N. S. 650, followed.

Re Galland, 31 Ch. D. 296, approved.—RE HANBURY, WHITING, AND NICHOLSON, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

16. Managing clerk—Authority—Sheriff—Notice to postpone sale.—The managing clerk of the solicitor of an execution creditor has no implied authority to require the sheriff to postpone a sale of chattels seized under a fi. fa.—WHYTE v. NUTTING, Q.B.D. (Ir.).

17. Misconduct—Striking off rolls.—Where the court, having rightly acquitted a solicitor of fraudulent intent in having ante-dated a mortgage deed which he had drawn for the mortgagor, and in having inserted in it the sum of £250 for £150, nevertheless ordered his name to be struck off the roll, for having put the mortgage in evidence on behalf of the mortgagee in an interpleader suit, without informing the court that the date was false,

Held, that the second charge fell with the first, it appearing that the date of the deed was not material in the interpleader issue; and consequently the solicitor's name was ordered to be restored to the roll.—RENNER, EX PARTE, P.C.

18. Remuneration—Leases—Scale fee—Percentage—General Order under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, Schedule I., Part II.; and rule 6.—The omission of the words "per cent." from the first scale in Schedule I., Part II., to the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, in cases where the rent exceeds £100 is intentional. A solicitor, therefore, is not entitled to a proportional fee for fractions of £100 as remuneration for preparing a lease when the rental exceeds £100.—MCGAREL, RE, Lun., 321.

19. Remuneration—Lease—Premium—Negotiating fee—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44), General Order, Schedule I., Part II., rule 5.—Where a lease is granted partly in consideration of a premium and partly in consideration of a rent, the lessor's solicitors are not entitled under rule 5 of Part II. of Schedule I. to the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, to a fee for negotiating in respect of the premium further than what is included in the scale fee chargeable in respect of the rent.

In re Robson, 38 W. R. 556, 45 Ch. D. 71, discussed.—HORN AND FRANCIS, RE, Ch.D. Chitty, J., 72.

20. Remuneration—Sale carried out by underlease—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 44)—General Order under Solicitor's Remuneration Act, Schedule I., Part I., Part II.—In the case of a sale carried out by means of an underlease the solicitor cannot claim to be remunerated according to the scale under Schedule I., Part II., of the General Order made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act. If any scale applies it must be the scale under Schedule I., Part I.

But, quære, whether the scale applies at all to such a case.—STILL v. WEBB, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 170.

21. Remuneration—Sale of property subject to incumbrances—Sale by second mortgagee—Scale fees—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44)—General Order, Schedule I., Part I., r. 9.—Rule 9 of Schedule I. to the General Order made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, which provides that, where a property is sold subject to incumbrances, the amount of the incumbrances is to be deemed a part of the purchase-money, held to apply to a sale by a second mortgagee.—FORTESCUE v. MERCANTILE BANK OF LONDON, C.A., 529.

22. Unauthorized use of solicitor's name—Fraud—Liability of innocent solicitor—Negligence—Partnership.—The name of a firm consisting of two solicitors had been used, improperly and without authority, in a fraudulent petition by means of which payment out of court of a sum of £4,000 was obtained by a person not entitled thereto. One partner in the firm knew nothing of the matter; the other had been told that proceedings were about to be taken, and knew, after an order for payment had been made, that the firm name had been used in proceedings of some sort. The Treasury having made good the £4,000,

Held, that the last-mentioned partner had not, by omitting to inform the court that the firm name had been used without authority in the petition, made himself or his firm liable to refund the sum misappropriated; and that the two solicitors were respectively liable to replace only such parts of the fund as they had respectively received in payment of the firm's costs.

There is not as a matter of law any usage that it is within the scope of a solicitor partnership for one of the partners to authorize the use of the firm name by a third person and to thereby bind his copartners. Such usage, if any, must be established by evidence in each case.

Judgment of Kekewich, J., 44 W. R. 462, varied.—MARSH v. JOSEPH, C.A., 209.

See also Divorce, 15; Mortgage, 8; Practice, 15, 28.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.—See Contract, 7, 8; Vendor and Purchaser, 4, 8, 10.

STAMP ACTS.—See Inland Revenue.

SUNDAY TRADING:—

Prosecution—Consent of chief constable—Institution of proceedings—Lord's Day Observance Act, 1676 (29 Car. 2, c. 7), s. 1—Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 87), s. 1.—The Lord's Day Observance Amendment Act, 1871, s. 1, provides that no prosecution shall be instituted under the Lord's Day Observance Act, 1676, except by or with the consent in writing of the chief officer of police of the district or of certain other persons.

Held, that the consent in writing must be given before the laying of the information.—THORPE v. PRIESTNALL, Q.B.D., 223.

See also Factory, 3.

THAMES.—See Certiorari; River, 3, 4.

THEATRE:—

Public entertainment—Licence to perform stage plays—Licence granted conditionally on undertaking not to apply for excise licence—Discretion of licensing committee—Theatres Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 68).—On an application for a theatre licence the licensing committee granted it on condition that the applicant did not apply for an excise licence, they being of opinion that there were sufficient public-houses in the immediate neighbourhood.

Held, that the licensing committee had properly exercised their discretion, and that they were justified in taking into consideration the fact that an excise licence might be applied for, and, in view of the facts of the case, in imposing a condition on the granting of the theatre licence.—REG. v. YORKSHIRE WEST RIDING COUNTY COUNCIL, Q.B.D.

THELLUSSON ACT.—See Settlement, 9.

TITHE.—See Poor Law, 15.

TOLLS:—

"Coach"—Tramcar—7 Geo. 3, c. lxxiii.—An Act of Parliament, passed in 1766, empowered the owners of a ferry across a creek to build a bridge over the creek and to demand certain tolls for the passage of the bridge, including amongst others the following: "For every coach, chariot, berlin, chaise, chair, or calash drawn by more than two horses, the sum of sixpence," and "for every wagon, wain, dray, car, cart, or sledge, or other carriage drawn by three or four horses or oxen, the sum of fourpence."

Held, that the toll payable in respect of a tramcar drawn by three horses was that payable in respect of a "coach."—PLYMOUTH TRAMWAY CO. v. GENERAL TOLLS CO., C.A.

TORT:—

Practical joke—False statement causing injury to health—Cause of action.—The defendant, by way of a practical joke, made a false statement to the female plaintiff to the effect that her husband, the male plaintiff, had met with a bad accident. The female plaintiff was thereby seriously injured in her health.

Held, that an action for damages would lie.—WILKINSON v. DOWNTON, Q.B.D., 525.

TRADE-MARK:—

1. "Fancy word not in common use"—Removing from register—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 64.—The word "Bovril" is a "fancy word not in common use" within the meaning of section 64 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, and is properly registered as a trade-mark under that Act; though possibly, as applied to meat extract, &c., it has "reference to the character or quality of the goods" within the meaning of section 10, sub-section 1 (e), of the Act of 1888, and therefore could not now be registered.—"BOVRIL" TRADE-MARK, RE, C.A., 150.

2. Geographical word—Word bearing a geographical as well as another signification—Word which has become descriptive of a particular article—Assignment of trade-mark where there is no goodwill—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 10—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 70.—A word which in its primary signification is not a geographical name may be registered as a trade-mark under section 10 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act of 1888 (which takes the place of section 64 of the Act of 1883), notwithstanding that it has also acquired a secondary signification in which it may be regarded as being a geographical name.

Thus the word "Magnolia" was held not to be incapable of registration by reason of its being used as the name of numerous towns and villages in the United States, seeing that in its primary signification it was not geographical, but had reference to the tree of that name.

A word which has been so used as to become the descriptive name of a particular article of manufacture has "reference to the character of the goods," and cannot be registered as a trade-mark.

Thus the word "Magnolia," which was the only name for a particular metallic alloy, was held disqualified for registration.

Decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 406, affirmed on these points.

By section 70 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act of 1883 a trade-mark can be assigned "only in connection with the goodwill of the business concerned in the particular goods or classes of goods for which it has been registered, and shall be determinable with that goodwill."

Where a trade-mark was registered in Class 6 in respect of "Anti-friction metal bearings,"

Held, on the facts of the case (reversing on this point the decision of Kekewich, J., ante, p. 406), that the trade-mark above mentioned passed on an assignment by the registered proprietors of their goodwill and trade-marks.—MAGNOLIA METAL CO.'S TRADE-MARKS, RE, C.A.

3. Registration—Change of name of proprietor—Register of trade-marks—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 87.—Where a limited company being the registered owner of a trade-mark changes its name, it is the duty of the comptroller on request to substitute the new name for the old name on the register.—NEW ORMONDE CYCLE CO. (LIMITED), EX PARTE, Ch.D. North, J.

4. Registration — Dissolution of partnership — Application by partners for separate registration of old firm's trade-marks—Patents, &c., Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 72.—The prohibition under section 72 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, of the registration by the comptroller of a trade-mark identical with one already on the register or having such a resemblance to it as to be calculated to deceive is intended to protect the public as well as benefit the owners of trade-marks. The court, therefore, in the exercise of whatever discretion it may have under section 72, will, in considering whether it ought to encourage two concurrent applications for the registration of similar or identical marks by directing the comptroller to proceed with them, be governed by the principle laid down in the case of In re Dewhurst's Trade-Marks, 44 W. R. 672, [1896] 2 Ch. 137, and refuse the application unless satisfied that no harm is likely to arise by reason of such registration causing either confusion or deception; and the fact that the applicants were formerly partners and are asking for the registration in their respective names of the trade-marks used by the old firm is not sufficient to induce the court to accede to their application.—ERHMANN'S TRADE-MARKS, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 698.

5. Registration—Removal from register—Proper subject-matter — "Distinctive device" — Portrait of manufacturer—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 10, sub-section 1 (c).—The portrait of the manufacturer of goods is a "distinctive device" within the meaning of section 10, sub-section 1 (c), of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1888, and may properly be registered as a trade-mark to be used by him in connection with his goods.

In re Anderson's Trade-Mark, [1884] 26 Ch.D. 409, explained.—ROWLAND v. MITCHELL, ROWLAND'S TRADE-MARK, IN RE C.A.

6. Registration—Royal crown—Practice of the Trade-marks Office—Instructions to applicants—Trade-marks Rules, 1890, r. 30—Validity.—By No. 30 of the instructions issued in 1890 to persons applying for the registration of trade-marks it is provided that the royal arms, and arms so nearly resembling them as to be calculated to deceive, and representations of the royal crown will not be registered.

The comptroller having refused to register a trade-mark on the ground that the device was similar to the royal crown,

Held, that the device did not in fact so closely resemble the royal crown as to be calculated to deceive.

The practice of the Trade-marks Office considered. —KONIG AND EBHARDT'S TRADE-MARK, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 230.

7. Registration—"Solio"—Photographic paper—Invented word—Word having reference to the character or quality of the goods—Practice in Patent Office as to devices and words referring to the sun—Patents, &c., Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 10, sub-section 1 (d), (e).—An application was made to register the word "Solio" in connection with photographic paper. The Comptroller-General had objected to register it on the ground that it was the practice of the Office to refuse registration as trade-marks in respect of photographic papers of marks which consisted merely of the word "Sun," or its equivalent "Sol," with the addition of some ordinary termination or affix, as having reference to the character or quality of the goods, within the meaning of section 10, sub-section 1 (e), of the Patents, &c., Act, 1888.

Held, that the court was bound by Re The Trade-mark Application of Farbenfabriken, vormals Fredr. Bayer & Co., "Somatose," [1894] 1 Ch. 645, and Re Densham & Sons' Trade-mark "Mazawattee," [1895] 2 Ch. 176, to decide that if an invented word had reference to the character or quality of the goods to which it was to be applied as a trade-mark it could not be registered; that although "Solio" was undoubtedly a newly-coined word, and in that sense was an invented word, yet it could not be said to have no reference to the character or quality of the goods to which it was intended to be applied—viz., photographic paper; and that therefore the refusal to register it was perfectly right.—EASTMAN PHOTOGRAPHIC CO.'S TRADE-MARK, RE, C.A.

See also Inland Revenue, 17.

TRADE-NAME:—

1. Injunction—Sale of appellant's goods as respondent's—Misleading purchasers.—A trader cannot pass off goods of his own manufacture as those of another, though the purchaser has no knowledge of the particular manufacturer.

The respondent had for many years made and sold, in large quantities, a sauce by the name of "Yorkshire Relish." The composition of the sauce was a trade secret, and, before 1894, no other sauce had been sold under that name.

In 1894 the appellants put upon the market a sauce very like, but not identical with, the respondent's, which they sold at a cheaper rate as "Yorkshire Relish." The appellant's labels and wrappers were distinct from the respondent's, but there was evidence that purchasers who asked for "Yorkshire Relish" had been supplied with the appellants' manufacture instead of the respondent's.

Held, that the appellants should be restrained by injunction from selling their goods as "Yorkshire Relish" without further distinguishing them from the respondent's manufacture.—BIRMINGHAM VINEGAR BREWERY CO. v. POWELL, H.L.

2. Injunction—Trade-mark—Rival traders—Passing off—Deception—Intent to deceive—Evidence of intent—Admissibility—Account of profits, form of.—The principle that "nobody has any right to represent his goods as the goods of somebody else," Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 199, 204, has no limit as regards name, origin, honesty of manufacture or sale, or otherwise. Thus, a trader whose goods have acquired a reputation under a particular name can restrain the user of that name in any way whatever by a rival trader in connection with the latter's own goods, even though that reputation has been acquired by the exertions or enterprize of the rival trader as an importer and vendor on behalf of the plaintiff.

In an action for an injunction to restrain the use of a trade-name, if the defendant's goods, on the face of them and having regard to surrounding circumstances, are calculated to deceive, evidence to prove the intention to deceive is inadmissible as being unnecessary, the rule being that a man must be taken to have intended the reasonable and natural consequences of his own acts; but if, on the other hand, a mere comparison of the goods, having regard to surrounding circumstances, is not sufficient, then evidence of intention to deceive is admissible, and this evidence may be supplied by admissions, oral or in writing, or by inference from conduct.

Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A. C. 199, discussed.

Where an injunction was granted restraining the defendants from passing off their goods under the plaintiff's trade-name, an account of profits was directed, as a necessary consequence, in the form allowed in Lever v. Goodwin, [1887] 36 Ch. D. 1, 4 Rep. Pat. Cas. 492, although there was no evidence that the defendants' goods had been actually mistaken for the plaintiff's.—SAXLEHNER v. APOLLINARIS CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J.

TRADE UNION:

Strike—Picketing—Conspiring to induce persons not to enter into contracts—"Watching or besetting"—Interlocutory injunction—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 2—Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), ss. 3, 7.—Watching or besetting the works or place of business of an employer for the purpose of persuading or otherwise preventing persons from working for him, or for any purpose except merely to obtain or communicate information, is illegal within the meaning of section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, and will be restrained by interlocutory injuction.—LYONS v. WILKINS, C.A., 19.

TRAMWAYS.—See Nuisance, 2.

TRUSTEE:—

1. Breach of trust—Investment—Unauthorized investment—Discretion of court as to relief of trustee—Solicitor-trustee—Indemnity—Third-party notice—Judicial Trustee Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.—No general rule can be laid down for the manner in which the court will give the relief provided under the Judicial Trustee Act, 1896, s. 3; in each case arising thereunder the court will exercise its discretion having regard to the particular facts of the case.

In cases where there are two or more trustees, one of whom is solicitor, the trustee or trustees who are not solicitors will not be excused for a consequence of a breach of trust unless they have acted with the same caution as they would in their private affairs, but he or they may nevertheless be entitled to a complete indemnity from the solicitor-trustee.—TURNER, RE, BARKER v. IVIMEY, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 495.

2. Breach of trust—Neglect to provide fund for payment of annuity—Account—Statutes of Limitation—Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 8.—Where a trustee has committed a breach of trust by neglecting to accumulate a fund to secure the payment of an annuity, section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, protects him from any claim for an account of moneys received by him more than six years before action brought.—HOW v. WINTERTON (EARL), C.A., 103.

3. Breach of trust—Practice—Married woman restrained from anticipation—Indemnity—Pleading—Third-party notice—Liberty to apply—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 45—R. S. C., ord. 16, r. 55.—In an action for breach of trust in which the trustees of a settlement and the tenant for life, a married woman restrained from anticipation, were defendants, the defendant trustees in their defence alleged that the breach was committed at the request of the defendant tenant for life, and that her interest ought to be impounded by way of indemnity; but they did not raise this point either by way of third-party notice under ord. 16, r. 55, or by way of counter-claim.

Held, that upon the allegations respectively contained in the statement of claim of the plaintiff, and in the defence of the defendant trustees, the court had jurisdiction to give the defendant trustees liberty to apply in chambers in the action, to enforce any right of indemnity they might have against the tenant for life; and that under section 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893, the court could make an order impounding the life interest of a married woman restrained from anticipation, by way of indemnity.—HOLT, RE, HOLT v. HOLT, Ch.D. Byrne, J., 650.

4. Constructive trust—Leaseholds devised to successive tenants for life with remainders over—Purchase by tenant for life in remainder of reversion expectant on determination of lease — Purchaser whether a trustee for remaindermen.—By his will, J. L., the lessee of certain leaseholds (not renewable) gave the same to his brother for life, with remainder to E. J. L. for life, with remainder for the benefit of the children of E. J. L. During the life of the first tenant for life, E. J. L. purchased the reversion expectant on the determination of the lease. On a summons taken out in these circumstances to ascertain whether the purchaser was a trustee for the remaindermen,

Held, that, there being no case in which the doctrine of Keetch v. Sandford, Wh. & T. L. C. 53, had been applied to leaseholds not renewable by contract or custom, the purchaser was not a trustee for the remaindermen.

Randall v. Russell, 3 Mer. 197, applied.—LONGTON v. WILSBY, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

5. Investment—Company incorporated by Act of Parliament.—Where the testator had empowered the trustees of his will to invest "in or upon the bonds, debentures, or debenture stock of any company incorporated by Act of Parliament,"

Held, that the trustees were not empowered to invest on the bonds or debenture securities of a company incorporated by registration under the Companies Act of 1862.—SMITH, RE, DAVIDSON v. MYRTLE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 29.

6. Investment—Will—Absolute trust for sale—Discretionary power to postpone—Trustees not agreed.—A testator devised and bequeathed all his real and leasehold estates to trustees upon trust for sale, and, after providing for investment of the proceeds and payment of the income thereof to his widow for her life, and afterwards for distribution among certain persons, he declared "that it shall be lawful for my trustees or trustee, with the consent of my said wife, during her life, to allow any part or parts of my said residuary estate to remain in their actual state of investment at the time of my decease; and that it shall not be necessary for them to sell my real or leasehold estates, or any part thereof, during the life of my said wife, unless she shall in writing request them so to do." The trustees were not agreed as to the expediency of a sale; but the remaindermen desired it.

The testator's widow had not made any request in writing to the trustees.

Held, that it was not obligatory on the trustees to sell the real and leasehold estates during the life of the testator's widow, unless she should in writing request them so to do, or unless the trustees were both of opinion that a sale ought to take place; but that, if they did not so agree that a sale was desirable, and there was no such request in writing, then they could not be compelled to sell.

Decision of Stirling, J., 75 L. T. Rep. 383, reversed.—LEVER, RE, CORDWELL v. LEVER (No. 2), C.A.

7. Mortgages of agricultural land—Will authorizing such investments—Duty to call in—Liability for retaining—Trustees acting honestly and without wilful default.—Trustees under a will authorizing investments in mortgages of real estate will not, if they have acted honestly and with reasonable care, be held liable for loss caused by their retention for more than twelve months after the testator's death of mortgages of agricultural land originally made to the testator himself. Nor is the fact that the trustees never had the mortgage securities valued by a professional surveyor conclusive against them.

Decision of Kekewich, J., 44 W. R. 311, reversed.—CHAPMAN, RE, COCKS v. CHAPMAN, C.A., 67.

8. New trustee—Vesting order—Reduction of number of trustees—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 26, 35.—Where one of four trustees was an absconding bankrupt, the court made an order vesting the trust estate in the other three trustees, although the number of trustees was thereby diminished.—LEES' SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, IN RE, Ch.D. Chitty, J.

9. Partnership—Inspectorship deed—Trusts as to partnership assets and separate assets of partners—Trusts as to separate assets, whether express or constructive—Limitation, Statutes of.—By an inspectorship deed, executed in 1833, the debtors, who were partners, covenanted to collect and get in the partnership assets, and to pay the moneys received into the banking-house of the firm and apply them so far as the same would extend in satisfaction of the debts due to their creditors named in the deed; and each of them further covenanted to collect and get in the assets belonging to his separate estate and apply them in payment of his separate debts, and pay the surplus (there being none in the events which happened) into the banking-house of the firm, to be applied for the benefit of the creditors of the firm according to the first covenant above-mentioned.

A claim having been made by a creditor of the firm to funds which subsequently accrued standing to the credit of the account of the legal personal representative of the last surviving partner for distribution among certain persons as part of the separate assets,

Held, on the construction of the deed, that there was no express trust thereby constituted as regarded the separate assets of the partners, and that, the period fixed by the Statutes of Limitation having expired, the claim was barred. — TREVOR v. HUTCHINS, C.A.

10. Precatory trust—Gift—Words of request.—Upon the marriage of a lady with the heir-presumptive to a peerage certain family jewels were given to her "for her life with a request that at her death they might be left as heirlooms."

Held, that these words did not create a precatory trust, and that the wife took the jewels absolutely. —HILL v. HILL, C.A., 371.

See also Banker, 2; Charity, 3, 4; Executor, 3; Frauds, Statute of; Mortgage, 2; Practice, 47; Settled Land, 3-5; Vendor and Purchaser, 13; Will, 9.

VACCINATION :—

1. Justices—Notice—Service—Proof – Vaccination Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84), s. 31.—No particular mode of service is necessary in the case of a notice under section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, requiring a parent to procure the vaccination of his child. It is for the justices to determine whether they are satisfied on the evidence that the notice reached the person for whom it was intended.—HOLLOWAY v. COSTER, Q.B.D., 319.

2. Justices—Proceedings against parent—Summons—Order signed by a different magistrate—Non-compliance with order—Defence—Vaccination Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84), s. 31.—It is no defence to proceedings under section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, against a parent, for non-compliance with an order directing him to have his child vaccinated, that the magistrate who issued the summons did not sign the order. If the order were bad on that ground proceedings should have been taken to quash it; but Semble, as the Summary Jurisdiction Acts apply to proceedings under the Vaccination Acts the order was not bad.—SOUTHCOMBE v. YEOVIL UNION, Q.B.D., 318.

3. Proceedings against parent to enforce vaccination—Vaccination officer—Authority—Minute of appointment—Vaccination Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84), s. 31—Local Government Board General Order, 31*st of October*, 1874, articles 16, 17.—A vaccination officer appointed by a minute of the guardians has authority to institute proceedings under section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, against a parent for non-compliance with a notice requiring him to procure the vaccination of his child, without a special authority from the guardians.—BRAMBLE v. LOWE, Q.B.D., 366.

VENDOR and PURCHASER :—

1. Building estate—Light—Implied grant—Derogation from grant—Obstruction—Damages—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 6.—W. conveyed in fee, as beneficial owner, to B. a plot of land with a building recently erected thereon with windows overlooking an adjoining plot of land belonging to W. The adjoining plot was marked on the plan as "building land," but no right to build on such plot was expressly reserved. W. having built on the adjoining plot so as materially to interfere with the access of light to B.'s windows, B. commenced an action for an injunction and damages.

Held (reversing Kekewich, J.), that W. was not entitled to build so as materially to interfere with the access of light to B.'s windows. B. admitting that W. could have built so as not to interfere with his lights, an injunction was not granted, but an inquiry was directed as to the damage sustained by B. through W.'s interference with his light.

Swansborough v. Coventry, 2 Moo. & Sc. 362, 9 Bing. 305, approved.

Birmingham, Dudley, and District Banking Co. v. Ross, 36 W. R. 914, 38 Ch. D. 295; and Myers v. Catterson, 38 W. R. 488, 43 Ch. D. 470, considered. —BROOMFIELD v. WILLIAMS, C.A., 469.

2. Building society—Mortgage—Power of sale—Sale by transferee.—A power of sale can only be exercised by the person designated for the purpose in the instrument which creates the power. Accordingly, in the case of a mortgage by a member of a building society to the trustees of the society which contained a power of sale limited to the trustees of the society,

Held, that the power in question could not be exercised by a transferee of the mortgage.

Whether a mortgage by a member to the trustees of a building society can be validly transferred by them to a stranger without the consent of the mortgagor, quære.—RUMNEY AND SMITH'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 678.

3. Conditions of sale—"Outgoings"—Agreement by vendor to discharge outgoings up to completion—Order to take down dangerous structures—Expenses of demolition—Liability of vendor.—By conditions of sale of land within the metropolis the date fixed for completion was the 8th of May, all outgoings up to that day being cleared by the vendor. Before the 8th of May a magistrate made an order to take down dangerous structures on the land. This order was not complied with, and after the 8th of May the county council took down the structures, and demanded and received from the purchaser the expenses of so doing.

Held, that, the liability having been incurred before the 8th of May, the expenses were "outgoings" within the meaning of the conditions, which the purchaser was entitled to recover from the vendor.

Midgley v. Coppock, (1879) 4 Ex. D. 309, followed. In re Boor, Boor v. Hopkins. (1889) 40 Ch. D. 572, distinguished.—TUBBS v. WYNNE, Q.B.D.

4. Contract—Rescission—Purchaser let into possession before completion—Failure to pay moneys due under agreement—Action by vendor for rescission of agreement—Motion that purchaser give up possession in default of making payments due under agreement—Appointment of receiver.—An agreement for the sale of a leasehold interest in land provided that possession should be given to the purchaser on payment of a specified part of the purchase-money, he undertaking to pay the rent and other outgoings, and also, on taking possession, paying to the vendor the cost of a new fence. The specified part of the purchase-money having been paid, the purchaser was let into possession, but he failed to pay the cost of the fence and did not pay the rent and taxes, so that the vendor had to pay them in order to prevent the forfeiture of the lease. The vendor commenced an action for rescission of the agreement on the ground that he had been induced to enter into it by misrepresentation, and moved in the action for an order on the defendant to deliver up possession of the land in default of his making the payments due under the agreement.

Held, that the motion, seeking in effect the specific performance of some of the terms of the agreement, was inconsistent with the claim for rescission made by the writ, and must therefore be refused.

But a receiver was appointed for the purpose of securing the payments in question.—COOK v. ANDREWS, Ch.D. North, J.

5. Contract for sale of land—Sale by auction—Authority of auctioneer or his clerk to sign memorandum on behalf of purchaser—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.—Upon a sale by auction the clerk to the auctioneer has no implied authority to sign on behalf of a purchaser a memorandum of the contract within the Statute of Frauds.

The implied authority of an auctioneer to sign such a memorandum on behalf of a purchaser does not extend to authorize the auctioneer to sign such a memorandum seven days after the sale by auction.

Semble, the auctioneer's authority merely enables him to sign at the sale.—BELL v. BALLS, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 378.

6. Custody of title deeds—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 2, r. 5.—A vendor of land cannot, in the absence of express stipulation, retain possession of title deeds because they relate to personal estate also in which he still retains an interest.—FULLER AND LEATHLEY'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. North, J., 627.

7. Partnership—Judgment in action for dissolution and sale—Sale by tender—Purchase by one partner of moiety of other partner—Copyholds described as freeholds—Bonâ fide mistake of both parties—Compensation.—The plaintiff and defendant had been partners in a brewery to which a number of tied houses were attached. In an action between them an order was made for dissolution and sale by tender. By the chief clerk's certificate the defendant was declared the purchaser, as being the highest bidder, of the moiety of the plaintiff.

The conditions, which were prepared by the plaintiff's solicitor and approved by the defendant's solicitor and the defendant, provided that the title should be accepted as it stood, the properties being well known to both parties, and nothing was said about compensation. It subsequently transpired that certain of the properties which were to be conveyed as freeholds were copyholds. Negotiations thereupon took place between the parties and their legal advisers, and as it was feared that there would be delay (the properties being in mortgage), a conveyance was executed by the plaintiff in the form settled by counsel. The defendant, having had to pay a large sum in respect of enfranchisement of the copyholds, took out a summons in the action, in which he asked that the plaintiff might be ordered to pay him one-half of that sum in effect by way of compensation.

Held, that the principle laid down in Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 315, and Castle v. Wilkinson, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 536, which allowed the purchaser to insist on having all the vendor could convey, with a compensation for the difference, was confined to the class of cases where the vendor knew the title and the purchaser did not, and had no application to the present case. And that, therefore, it was unnecessary to consider whether compensation could be enforced by a purchaser after the money was paid and the conveyance executed. The summons was accordingly dismissed.—HOPCRAFT v. HOPCRAFT, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

8. Public-house—Agreement for sale—Specific performance—Licence—Vendor's obligation in respect of—Licence indorsed or otherwise affected—Licensing Acts (9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 11; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 44, s. 1).—Unless the vendor of licensed premises specially contract that the licence shall be renewed at the general annual licensing meeting, or that he will obtain from the magistrates a transfer of the licence to the purchaser's nominee at the next special sessions, or interim authority for the nominee to use the licence between the date fixed for completion and the next special sessions, the vendor does not take upon himself any of the above risks. All that he is bound to do, in the absence of any such special provisions, is to have a valid and effectual licence existing at the date fixed for completion of the purchase, which he can indorse in the usual way, and upon or in respect of which the purchaser could apply at once for interim protection and without undue delay under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 11, at the next special sessions.

The statement in Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, 6th ed., vol. 1, p. 483, to the effect that if the vendor could not, by the day appointed for completion, procure a transfer of the licence, the purchaser might repudiate the contract, is not justified by the cases.

An option to determine a contract for the sale and purchase of licensed premises if the licence became affected, Held not to become operative, on the magistrates refusing an irregular application by the purchasers for a temporary authority under section 1 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 44.—TADCASTER TOWER BREWERY CO. v. WILSON, Ch.D. Romer, J., 428.

9. Purchaser with notice—Recitals—Estoppel.—The plaintiff obtained a conveyance to himself of the legal estate in certain land, with express notice that the defendants were transferees of D.'s interest therein. The grant of D.'s interest to the defendants' predecessor in title contained an erroneous recital of D.'s earlier title.

Held, that the defendants were not precluded from showing what interest really passed under D.'s grant, even if it was contrary to the recitals.—TRINIDAD ASPHALTE CO. v. CORYAT, P.C., 225.

10. Specific performance—Agreement for sale of land—Parcels—Identity—Admissibility of parol evidence—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.—By a written agreement, signed by both parties and dated the 12th of February, 1896, A. agreed to sell and B. to purchase "twenty-four acres of land freehold, and all appurtenances thereto, at T. . . . Possession to be had on the 25th of March next, the vendor guaranteeing possession accordingly."

Held, in an action for specific performance, that A. was entitled to prove by parol evidence that he was the owner of 24a. 1r. 26p. of freehold land at T., and that on the morning of the day on which the agreement was signed the defendant inspected that land with the plaintiff.

Decision of Byrne, J., ante, p. 498, reversed.—PLANT v. BOURNE, C.A.

11. Time essence of contract—Negotiations continued after date fixed for completion—Action by sub-purchaser against original purchaser—Lis pendens —Title accepted and draft conveyance approved—Ten days' notice to complete—Reasonable notice.—The agreement for sale of a public-house as a going concern fixed the 31st of December, 1896, as the date of completion. Shortly after the date of the agreement the purchaser sold the benefit thereof to another person, who, after considerable delay, sold his interest therein to a third person, and the original vendor had notice of these transactions. In addition to this an action, of which the original vendor had notice, was subsequently commenced against the original purchaser by a fourth person for specific performance of an alleged agreement for the sale of the public-house to him by such purchaser, and was registered as a lis pendens, which prevented the original purchaser from borrowing on the security of the public-house the money necessary to complete her purchase. Meanwhile negotiations between the original vendor and purchaser continued after the date fixed for completion; and when the title had been accepted and the draft conveyance approved, the original vendor on the 13th of February, 1897, gave notice to the original purchaser to complete in ten days, to which the latter replied that she had already commenced proceedings to get the lis pendens vacated, and, when this was accomplished, would complete as soon as possible, and objected that a ten days' notice was not reasonable under the circumstances. The original vendor, however, at the expiration of the ten days, notified to the original purchaser that the contract was at an end. Upon motion by the latter for an injunction to restrain the original vendor from dealing with the public-house without regard to her rights under their agreement,

Held, that the notice was reasonable under the circumstances; and the motion was dismissed.—SMITH v. BATSFORD, Ch.D. North, J.

12. Voluntary settlement—Title of purchaser for value—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47.—Notwithstanding section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, a bonâ fide purchaser for value under a voluntary settlement prior to the bankruptcy of the settlor acquires a good title as against any future trustee in bankruptcy.

In re Brall, Ex parte Norton, 41 W. R. 623, [1893] 2 Q. B. 381, and In re Holden, 36 W. R. 189, 20 Q. B. D. 43, approved.

In re Briggs & Spicer, 39 W. R. 377, [1891] 2 Ch. 127, overruled.—CARTER & KENDERDINE'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 484.

13. Will—Trustees—Power of sale—Charge of legacies on residue—Insufficiency of personal estate to pay debts and specific legacies—Legal estate—Title—Concurrence of beneficiaries.—A testator, after directing payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and certain specific legacies, gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust as to part thereof as therein mentioned, and he then gave the rest and residue of his real and personal estate to certain persons absolutely in equal shares.

Subsequently, by a codicil he revoked the gift to those persons and substituted other persons in their stead, and in all other respects confirmed his will. The testator's personal estate was insufficient to pay his debts, &c., and the specific legacies; and, in consequence of this, the trustees put up for auction residuary real estate of the testator. A purchaser of a portion of such estate objected that the trustees had no power to make a valid assurance, and required the concurrence of the residuary devisees.

Held, that the vendors, the trustees, had made a good title.—DYSON & FOWKES' CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 28.

See also Contract, 7, 8; Practice, 54.

VEXATIOUS ACTIONS ACT, 1896:—

Vexatious proceedings instituted before the passing of the Act—"Reasonable ground."—An order under the Vexatious Actions Act, 1896, may be founded upon vexatious legal proceedings commenced before the passing of that Act. In dealing with an application for such an order the court will consider the number, general character, and results of the proceedings alleged to be vexatious, and may make the order although there may have been reasonable ground for the proceedings in each case considered by itself.—CHAFFERS, RE, ATTORNEY-GENERAL, EX PARTE, Q.B.D., 365.

VICTORIA, LAW of:—

1. Administration and Probate Act, 1890 (54 Vict. No. 1060), s. 97—Valuation of testator's estate—Bank deposit receipts—Liability on bank shares.

Held, that in a statement of a testator's estate under section 97 of the Administration and Probate Act, 1890, bank deposit receipts should be valued at the price which they would fetch in the market, and not according to the amounts appearing on the face of them to be payable; also, that sums payable in respect of bank shares at the times mentioned in various schemes for the reconstruction of those banks are debts of the deceased, and may be deducted from the sum total of the assets in order to ascertain the balance liable to probate duty.—MASTER IN EQUITY OF SUPREME COURT OF VICTORIA v. PEARSON, P.C.

2. Probate—Statement by executors—Debts chargeable on foreign assets—Law of Victoria—Administration and Probate Act, 1890, No. 1060, s. 97, sub-section 2.

Held, that, under section 97, sub-section 2, of the Administration and Probate Act of 1890, the statement which an executor is required to furnish relates to all assets within the Colony of Victoria, and to such debts as are properly chargeable on these Colonial assets in assessing them for duty so as to show the assessable balance in the Colony.

Consequently, where the testator was domiciled in Victoria but had foreign assets, these latter, to which Victorian probate gives no title, need not be stated, nor any debts chargeable thereon, except so far as they are in excess of the security, and to the extent of that excess are chargeable on the Victorian assets.

Blackwood v. Reg., 8 App. Cas. 82, followed.—HENTY v. REGINA, P.C.

WATER:—

1. Diversion of spring—"Stream"—Lease—Covenant—Warrandice clause.—Water percolating discontinuously through or along strata cannot be described as a "stream."

A lessor demised by lease a distillery, cottages, thirteen and a-half acres of land, with two ponds, "together with right to the water in the said ponds and in the streams leading thereto." The lease also contained the usual warrandice clause. The lessor sunk a tank on ground outside but adjoining the demised subjects, and drew off from marshy ground percolating water which would have found its way eventually into one of the ponds,

Held (Lord Halsbury, L.C., dissenting), affirming the decision of the Second Division of the Court of Session, that water percolating through the ground towards the pond was not water in any stream leading to the pond;

Held, secondly, by the whole House, that, assuming an implied obligation on the part of the lessor not to diminish the water supply to the ponds, there had been no breach.—MCNAB v. ROBERTSON, H.L. (Sc.).

2. Rating—Annual value—House and garden—Supply of water for domestic purposes—Basis of assessment—Justices—Exclusion of part of premises—Grand Junction Waterworks Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii.), s. 46—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 68.—Section 68 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, provides that the water rate shall be payable according to the annual value of the "tenement supplied with water," and if any dispute arise as to such value, the same shall be determined by two justices.

Held, that the justices, in determining under this section the annual value of premises consisting of a dwelling-house and garden occupied as one residence, cannot exclude the garden or any part of the premises, but must take into consideration the whole premises as being the "tenement supplied with water."—GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS CO. v. DAVIES, Q.B.D., 687.

3. Supply — Local Government — Alteration of boundaries — Construction of waterworks — Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 51, 52—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), ss. 57, 59—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 36 (2).—Where an area has been added to the district of a local authority by an order of the county council, the local authority acquire a right to supply the added area with water under section 51 of the Public Health Act, 1875. But this right is controlled by section 52 of the same Act, and, therefore, before "constructing" waterworks within the added area, notice must be given to every existing water company whose limits of supply include the added area. And laying pipes to extend the local authority's existing water system into the added area is "constructing" waterworks within section 52.

Cleveland Water Co. v. Redcar Local Board, 43 W. R. 90, [1895] 1 Ch. 168, approved but distinguished.

Decision of North, J., ante, p. 436, reversed.—HUDDERSFIELD CORPORATION v. RAVENSTHORPE DISTRICT COUNCIL, C.A., 642.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 7.

WEIGHTS and MEASURES:—

Coal—Weight ticket—Delivery of total quantity expressed in ticket—Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 21.—A quantity of coal exceeding two hundredweight was in course of being delivered from a vehicle to a purchaser, and the ticket delivered therewith expressed that the purchaser would receive two tons of coal in twenty sacks each containing 2cwts. When eleven of the sacks had been delivered the remaining sacks were weighed, and some were found to contain less and some more than 2cwts. each, but the deficiency in those weighed exceeded the excess. The magistrate found as a matter of fact that the whole quantity of two tons was delivered.

Held, that, as the whole quantity expressed in the ticket had in fact been delivered, the seller could not, by reason of some of the sacks containing less than 2cwts. each, be convicted under section 21 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, of having delivered a less quantity of coal than the quantity expressed in the ticket.—GODFREY v. RADFORD, Q.B.D.

WILL:—

1. Class—Gift to class at twenty-one—Discretionary trust of income during minority—Vesting.—A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to divide the same between a class upon their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years, and empowered the trustees to apply the whole, or such part as they should think fit, of the annual income of the share of any of the class during minority for his, her, or their education or maintenance.

Held, that the shares were not vested in members of the class who died under twenty-one.

Fox v. Fox, 23 W. R. 314, L. R. 19 Eq. 286, not followed.—WINTLE, RE, TUCKER v. WINTLE, Ch.D. North, J., 91.

2. Class—Postponement of distribution—Substitutional gift—Death before class ascertained.—A testator, after giving a life estate to his widow, gave the residue "to my brothers and sisters in equal shares and proportions, the lawful child or children of any deceased brother or sister taking his, her, or their deceased parent's share."

Held, that the children of a brother who died after the date of the will, but before the testator, could not take.

Thornhill v. Thornhill, 4 Madd. 377, followed.—HANNAM, RE, HADDESLEY v. HANNAM, Ch.D. North, J., 613.

3. Construction—Absolute gift in confidence—Precatory trust—Condition.—Where a testator gave his residuary estate to his wife absolutely in fullest confidence that she would carry out his wishes—viz., during her life pay the premiums on a policy on her own life (which was her own property), and at her death bequeath the moneys arising therefrom, and also from another policy on the testator's life, to his daughter.

Held (Rigby, L.J., dissentiente), that the words "in fullest confidence" were only an expression of desire on the part of the testator, and that the wife therefore took the residuary estate free from any obligation either by way of precatory trust or condition.—WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS, C.A., 519.

4. Construction—Alternative or substitutional gift—Charitable trust—Scheme.—A testator by his will bequeathed £10,000 to his trustees upon trust to pay one-tenth of the income arising therefrom to "the Protestant Alliance, 1851, or some one or more kindred institutions having for their object the maintenance and defence of the doctrines of the Reformation and the principles of civil and religious liberty."

Held, that the language of the will imported not a substitutional but an alternative gift, and that the testator's intention was to benefit a class of institutions of which the Protestant Alliance was a type; that a scheme for the application of the fund should be prepared, under which, primâ facie, the Protestant Alliance would take the chief, if not the entire, benefit.—DELMAR'S TRUSTS, RE, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 630.

5. Construction—Devise to E. and her issue—Issue to take on attaining twenty-one—Rule in Wild's case.—By his will a testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate, subject to certain life interests, to E. and "to any lawful issue she may have, such issue to take a vested interest in my said property upon attaining the age of twenty-one years." The testator died leaving both real and personal property. E. survived the testator, and died intestate and without ever having been married.

Held, (1) as to the realty, that the direction that the issue should take vested interest on attaining to twenty-one was inconsistent with the use of the word issue as a word of limitation; that E. and her issue took concurrently as purchasers; that E. took a vested interest on the death of the testator liable to be divested pro tanto on the birth of issue, an event which never happened; that therefore the real estate went to E.'s heir-at-law.

(2) As to the personalty, that there was nothing to take the case out of the ordinary rule that under a gift to one and his children, the parent and children take primâ facie concurrently as joint tenants; that, consequently, the personalty belonged to E.'s legal personal representative.—WILMOT, RE, WILMOT v. BETTERTON, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 492.

6. Construction—Estate pur autre vie—Special occupant—Devolution of estate—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 6.—In order to find that there is a special occupant of property devised pur autre vie either the word "heir" must be expressly mentioned in the gift or it must be otherwise shown that the testator intended the heir of the devisee to take. The owner of the freehold devised to trustees upon trust for three persons and their issue equally during their lives and the life of the longer liver of them. One of the beneficiaries having died intestate, Held, that there was no special occupant designated by the testator, and that the share consequently devolved on the personal representatives of the beneficiary according to the 6th section of the Wills Act.

Wall v. Byrne, 2 Jo. & Lat. 118, and Philpotts v. James, 3 Doug. 425, distinguished.—SHEPPARD, RE, SHEPPARD v. MANNING, Ch.D. Romer, J., 475.

7. Construction — Gift to "issue" — Illegimate children.—A testatrix gave shares of income of her residuary estate to certain named nephews and nieces with a gift over to the respective issue of any who should die during the lifetime of two other named persons.

M. A., one of the nieces named, had married F. A., her deceased sister's husband, and had by him a daughter G. and a son F. M. A. was called in the will by her married name, was described as the wife of F. A., and G. was described as their daughter. M. A. died within the period mentioned.

Held, that, under the circumstances, G., though illegitimate, could, under the gift to issue, claim her mother's share of income.

Megson v. Hindle, 28 W. R. 866, 15 Ch. D. 198, commented upon.—WALKER RE, WALKER v. LUTYENS, Ch.D. Romer, J., 647.

8. Construction—Gift to nephews—Illegitimacy.—A testator by his will gave to his "wife's nephew, J. W. R. (nominatim), all my silver spoons and my gold spectacles," and he gave one moiety of his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for "all and every the nephew and niece and the nephews and nieces of my said wife."

J. W. R. was the illegitimate son of a brother of testator's wife.

Held, following In the Goods of George Ashton, [1892] P. 83, 40 W. R. Dig. 203, and In re Deakin, Starkey v. Eyres, 43 W. R. 70, [1894] 3 Ch. 565, that the testator had sufficiently indicated his intention that J. W. R. should take, and that therefore, notwithstanding his illegitimacy, he was included in the class of "the nephews and nieces of my wife."

Bagley v. Mollard, 1 Russ. & My. 581, and In re Hall, Branston v. Weightman, 35 W. R. 797, 35 Ch. D. 551, considered and not followed.—PARKER, RE, PARKER v. OSBORNE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 536.

9. Construction—Gift of specific property to trustees to sell and set apart portions to answer settled legacies—Gift of residue upon trust for children in equal shares—Power to retain investments—Right of trustees to appropriate specific funds without sale.—A testator gave specific property upon trust to sell and invest the proceeds, and set apart portions to answer settled legacies, and he gave power to the trustees to retain any part of his personal estate in the investments in which they were at the time of his decease, and the residue he bequeathed upon trust for all his children and the issue of such as should be dead, in equal shares, the shares of daughters to be settled. Part of the securities held by the testator at the time of his death consisted of shares in a brewery which had been very successful. Some of these the trustees appropriated to answer one of the settled legacies, and the remainder to the same legatee in part satisfaction of her share of residue.

On a summons asking whether they were justified in so doing,

Held, (1) as to the settled legacies, that there was power to appropriate, having regard to the power to retain existing investments.

(2) As to the residue, that these shares being an authorized investment, there was no duty to sell and invest on security of the like nature, and that they therefore might be appropriated, even in advance; that all such appropriations must be fairly made, and, there being no allegation of unfairness, that the trustees had acted within their powers.—BROOKS, RE, COLES v. DAVIS, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

10. Construction—"Ready money in bank"—Deposit receipts.—A gift by will of "ready money in bank" held to include money on deposit receipt which could be withdrawn without previous notice to the bank; but, not to include money on deposit receipt as to which previous notice of withdrawal was necessary.—MAYNE v. MAYNE, M.R. (Ir.).

11. Gift in reversion to "lady superioress" of convent — Persona designata — Period of ascertainment.—Testatrix devised real estate to her brother and sister for life with remainder after the death of the survivor of them to "the lady superioress" of a certain convent "for the benefit of the school attached thereto."

Held, that the person who was lady superioress at the date of the death of the testatrix was the person to take, and not the superioress at the date of the death of the survivor of the life tenants.—LAFFAN AND DOWNES' CONTRACT, RE, M.R. (Ir.).

12. Hotchpot clause.—Where a testator declares that a sum of money settled by him on a child's marriage shall be taken in or towards satisfaction of the share in the testator's residuary estate bequeathed to such child, and shall be brought into hotchpot and accounted for accordingly, any reversionary interest which the testator may have reserved to himself under the trusts of the settlement in such sum of money will, by the conjoint effect of the gift of residue and the hotchpot clause, pass to the child.

C., on the marriage of his son R. in 1885, covenanted with the trustees of R.'s marriage settlement to pay to them within six months of his death £10,000, upon trust to invest and pay the income to R. for his life, remainder to the wife of R. for her life if she should survive him, remainder for the issue of the marriage, and in default of issue the ultimate trust was for C. absolutely. C. died in 1886, having by his will given his residuary estate equally between his son R. and his daughter L. C., directed that any sum of money which he had already covenanted or agreed to give to any child of his on his or her marriage should be taken in or towards satisfaction of the share of such child, and should be brought into hotchpot and accounted for accordingly. After C.'s death his executors paid to the trustees of R.'s settlement a sum of £10,000, and divided the residue of the estate equally between R. and L., counting in such division the £10,000 as part of R.'s share. R. died in 1894, leaving a widow and no issue. By reason of the failure of issue, L. claimed to be entitled to one moiety of the £10,000 (subject to the life interest of R.'s widow) as part of C.'s estate.

Held, reversing the decision of Chitty, J., that the executors of R. were entitled to the whole of the £10,000.—COSIER, RE, HUMPHREYS v. GADSDEN, C.A., 376.

13. Hotchpot clause—Advanced child—Period of distribution—Interest on advance—Rate of interest.—A testator bequeathed £30,000 to his trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his wife during her life, and after her death to transfer one-fourth to his son and permit the remaining three-fourths to fall into residue; and he bequeathed the residue (comprising all his real estate and his residuary personalty) to his trustees upon trusts for conversion and division among his three daughters. There was a provision that any advance made to any daughter should go towards satisfying the portion under the residuary gift, and it was expressly directed that this provision should apply to a sum of £6,000 payable under a covenant by the testator to the trustees of the marriage settlement of one of the daughters. The testator died in 1878, leaving personalty to the amount of £3,700 and real estate valued at £62,000. The trustees, in exercise of their discretion, did not realize the real estate at once, but sold portions from time to time. The testator's debts, including the £6,000, amounted to £13,000, and of this sum a considerable portion (including the £6,000) was raised on mortgage. Interest on the £30,000 legacy was paid by the trustees to the widow out of the income of the real estate till 1894, when a sufficient amount of real estate had been sold to answer the legacy. After payment of all interest on the mortgage and the legacy there remained a surplus income of £200 a year, which was divided between the two unadvanced daughters. On the death of the widow in 1895 the £30,000 became divisible.

Held, that the advanced daughter must bring the £6,000 into hotchpot and also pay the interest thereon at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum from the date on which the payment of the £6,000 was actually made, but that the period of distribution was the death of the testator.

In re Rees, Rees v. George, 29 W. R. 301, 17 Ch. D. 701, followed.

In re Dallmeyer, 44 W. R. 375, [1896] 1 Ch. 372, discussed.—LAMBERT, RE, MOORE v. MIDDLETON, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 661

14. Hotchpot—Settlement—Referential trust in will—Accretion.—By a marriage settlement, certain funds were settled upon certain usual trusts for the benefit of the husband and wife and their children, and it contained a hotchpot clause. By the will of the wife's mother, made subsequently, a portion of her personal estate was bequeathed to the trustees to pay and transfer the same to the trustees of the settlement, to be held by them upon and for the same trusts and purposes as were therein expressed concerning the property thereby settled. On a summons taken out by the trustees of the settlement to ascertain the effect of this bequest, it was contended by parties to whom but small appointments under the settlement had been made that the bequest was to be treated as an accretion to the settlement, so as to make the hotchpot clause applicable by bringing into account the funds already appointed under the settlement.

Held, that, inasmuch as there was no context in the will importing that the use of the words "same trusts" implied an accretion of the settlement trust fund, that the bequest must be deemed to be of an independent fund, to which the hotchpot clause in the settlement was not applicable.—NORTH, RE, MEATES v. BISHOP, Ch.D. Stirling, J.

15. Intestacy—"Next-of-kin in blood"—Settlement—Construction.—Consols were settled on trust after the death of M. A. Gray for "the next-of-kin in blood to the said M. A. Gray . . . in case she had so died intestate and unmarried."

Held, that children of deceased brothers and sisters of M. A. Gray were entitled as well as living brothers and sisters to share in the fund.—GRAY'S SETTLEMENT, RE, AKERS v. SEARS, Ch.D. North, J.

16. Latent ambiguity.—A testator by his will devised and bequeathed his residuary estate "unto the children of the deceased son (named Bamber) of my father's sister, share and share alike." The sister had three sons who predeceased the testator, all of whom left children.

Held (reversing Kekewich, J.), that the gift was void for uncertainty.

Hare v. Cartridge, 13 Sim. 165, commented on and distinguished.—STEPHENSON, RE, DONALDSON v. BAMBER, C.A., 162.

17. Legacy—Condition—Marriage with consent of testator—Legacy charged on land.—A legacy charged on the real estate of testatrix, conditional on the marriage of the legatee with the sanction of testatrix, does not fail by reason of the death of the testatrix before the marriage of the legatee; the condition being only applicable to the event of marriage of the legatee in the lifetime of testatrix.—CURRAN v. CORBETT, M.R. (Ir.).

18. Pecuniary legacy—Charge on real estate—Subsequent specific devise of the real estate—Laches.—Testator bequeathed pecuniary legacies to his three daughters to be "charged upon and payable out of" his real estate, if his personal estate should be insufficient; he then devised the lands of A. to his eldest son in fee; and also devised to his eldest son, "subject as aforesaid," all his residuary real and personal estate. By a codicil, testator gave further pecuniary legacies to each of his three daughters "in addition to the moneys already left them, the total sum to be subject to the same conditions as the fortunes he had already left them."

Testator died in 1860, and at that time his personal estate was sufficient to pay his debts and the pecuniary legacies, and one of the daughters received her pecuniary legacy. The other two daughters received interest on their legacies—first, from the testator's executors, and afterwards from testator's eldest son. In 1878 the eldest son mortgaged the lands of A. to a bank, with a statutory declaration that all his father's debts and legacies had been paid, and died in 1879.

Interest was paid to the daughters on their pecuniary legacies by the executor of the eldest son until 1886.

In 1893 the lands of A. were sold in the Land Court and the proceeds paid into court.

Held, (1) that on the true construction of the testator's will and codicil, the pecuniary legacies of the daughters were charged on the lands of A.; (2) that in the events which happened they were a subsisting charge on the lands of A., although at the time of the testator's death the personal estate of the testator was sufficient to pay them; (3) that there was no laches or acquiescence on the part of the pecuniary legatees, the two daughters, and consequently that they were entitled to payment out of the proceeds of sale of the lands of A. in priority to the mortgage of the bank.

Richardson v. Morton, L. R. 13 Eq. 123, dissented from.—McCarthy v. McCarthy, C.A. (Ir).

19. Power—Gift for life—Power to dispose—Default of appointment—Gift by implication.—Under her marriage settlement a wife had a general power of appointment by will over certain real estate. By her will she gave the property to her husband for life and gave him "power to dispose of all such property by will amongst our children in accordance with the power granted to him as regards other property which I have under my marriage settlement." There were several children of the marriage, but the husband died without having exercised the power of disposition given to him by the will.

Held, that the power was a mere power and not a power coupled with a trust, and that there was no gift by implication to the children in default of appointment.

Healy v. Donnery, [1853] 3 Ir. C. L. Rep. 213, followed.—Weekes' Settlement, Re, Ch.D. Romer, J., 265.

20. Remoteness—Perpetuity.—Testator bequeathed £2,000 to the trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church for the erection of a mission hall, and if the trustees of certain premises called the Bethell would sell them, and hand the amount received to the trustees for the purposes specified in his will, then the testator further devised certain freehold property called D. to the said trustees of the General Assembly.

Held, that the devise of the freehold property called D. was void for remoteness.—Kingham v. Kingham, V.C. (Ir.).

21. Tenant for life and remainderman—Leaseholds—Conversion—Rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth.—The rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137, will be applied unless indications of the testator's intention that it shall not be applied can be discovered from the language of the will. Neither a direction to pay "rents and profits," nor a power of distress on "land" given to annuitants, nor both together are sufficient indications of intention on the part of a testator to exclude the operation of the rule.

Harris v. Poyner, 1 Dr. 174, and Craig v. Wheeler, 8 W. R. 172, 29 L. J. Ch. 374, followed.

Crowe v. Crisford, 2 W. R. 45, 17 Beav. 507; Wearing v. Wearing, 23 Beav. 99, 6 W. R. Dig. 102; and Vachell v. Roberts, 32 Beav. 140, 12 W. R. Ch. Dig. 131, dissented from.—Game, Re, Game v. Young, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 472.

22. Tenant for life and remainderman—Leaseholds Repairs.—Where a testator directed that the income derived from certain leasehold houses should be paid to his widow for her life,

Held, that the words "income derived" meant net income, and not gross income, and that, consequently, the tenant for life must bear the expense of all outgoings incurred after the testator's death.

In re Courtier, 35 W. R. 85, 34 Ch. D. 136, discussed.

In re Baring, Jeune v. Baring, 41 W. R. 87, [1893] 1 Ch. 61, dissented from.—Ridding, Re, Thompson v. Ridding, Ch.D. Stirling, J., 457.

23. Tenant for life—Remainderman—Leaseholds—Rent and outgoings—Repairs—Insurance.—Testator directed his executors to allow his wife, if she pleased, to occupy his leasehold house during her life, with the use of the furniture, and after her death that the premises be sold, and the proceeds divided among the testator's children.

Held, that the widow was liable to pay all head-rent and taxes payable in respect of the period during which she occupied the premises; and to keep them in such repair as a tenant would, in the absence of express contract to the contrary, be liable for; but that the trustees of the residuary estate—not the widow—were bound to keep the premises insured against fire.

Jeune v. Baring, [1893] 1 Ch. 61, not followed.—Kingham v. Kingham, V.C. (Ir.).

24. Tenant for life and remainderman—Onerous and beneficial estates, devise of.—A testator devised various real estates in England to A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. On some of the estates the charges exceeded the rents and profits, and the assignees of the tenant for life desired to give up possession of these estates while retaining the estates which returned a profit.

Held, that the estates being all given in one gift, the onerous estates could not be disclaimed.

Syer v. Gladstone, 34 W. R. 565, 30 Ch. D. 614, commented on.—Frewen v. Law Life Insurance Co., Ch.D. North, J.

See also Charity, 3-5; Conflict of Laws; Executor, 8; Inland Revenue, 7; Married Woman, 11; Practice, 46; Probate, 12-19; Trustee, 6, 7; Vendor and Purchaser, 13.

[THE END.]

Stanford Law Library
3 6105 063 511 609